Now here is a case which presents several angles. I should like to know just how managers and operators view it, assuming that Pennsylvania has stated things exactly as they are. Personally I am of the opinion that the manager has small grounds to blacklist the man, since he himself was very deep in the mire in running with an incomplete operating room, thus endangering his audience. The operator himself should have been fired and I would have had small sympathy had he been blacklisted. On the other hand the helper, if he were employed as a competent operator (upon which much hinges) ought to have discovered the trouble before it reached such an acute stage. But, again, he stayed right there, put out the fire and started the second machine at once, which was more than creditable to him. In view of this fact I believe the managers of his city will do well to give the brother further trial. He has demonstrated himself to be a man who can act intelligently in an emergency, as well as act quickly, and he has learned his lesson. Give him another trial, I say. What is your opinion of the whole matter, gentlemen?

Rectifier Input.

Mr. Lyman W. Ward, civil engineer, Goldendale, Cal., asks the Projection Department the following:

> I am unable to ascertain, authoritatively, exactly what the energy input of a mercury arc rectifier is. What I desire to know is how many kilowatt hours a mercury arc rectifier, operating from 220-volt feeders, supplying 25 amperes to the arc, will take from the line; also when supplying the arc 30 amperes. Am using an economizer at present which consumes 2¼ k. w. per hour from a 220-volt supply, with 34 amperes at the arc.

In order to be absolutely certain of my grounds I referred this matter to the General Electric Company, and have their reply, as follows: Supplying 25 amperes to the arc, about 1.74 k. w. would be taken from the lines; supplying 30 amperes, the input would be about 2.11 k. w., assuming a 50-volt arc. Of course, if the arc be operated steadily for one hour this would mean that number of kilowatt hours.

Kansas City Hands Des Moines a Wallop.

Brother George E. Dighton, L. U. No. 170 I. A. T. S. E. lands on Brother Merrill, Des Moines, all spraddled out, thusly:

> I notice a letter from Mr. Will Merrill, of Des Moines, Iowa, in the issue of January 11th and I want to answer him. Do you think you are right, Mr. Merrill, in joining the I. B. E. W.? You say that your local will stay with the I. B. E. W. until your cards are recognized all over the United States and Canada. I am afraid you will have a long wait. I admit, between two crafts that we are more electricians than stage employees but on the other hand ask the old-timers who have been in the business for twelve or fifteen years what they were before taking up the craft of the "Reel-and-Crank" and eight out of ten will answer that they were stage hands before they ever saw a machine, and a good many operators will tell you the plain truth that they know only enough electricity to wire booths according to the code book and properly handle their arc. Now, on the other hand, Merrill, do you think that you belong to a building trade or the amusement craft? The A. F. of L. used good sound judgment in giving the operators into the jurisdiction of the stage employees for the simple reason that we are an amusement craft and the I. A. T. S. E. jurisdiction granted by the A. F. of L. covers the amusement crafts. While the I. B. E. W. is a building trade and classed as such by the A. F. of L. The I. A. T. S. E. has been handling the amusement end of the game since 1893 and have studied how to handle the amusement people and keep peace and at the same time get results. Do you think, Merrill, that your sister local of electricians would take you out and put you to work at a journeyman scale if you were down and out? They might give you work as an apprentice if you were right good, and you could earn as much as 30 cents an hour, sometimes.
> On the other hand the I. A. says that other locals shall work sister local men in preference to outside extra men and I will say that no I. A. man ever goes on a job but that he draws the scale of a journeyman, whether he be stage employee or operator. Tell me, Friend Merrill, how many towns in the United States is your card good in? Not one in ten. The I. B. E. W. operators' fight in St. Louis a few years ago ought to be enough to teach you what side of the fence you belong on. The A. F. of L., Friend Merrill, will show (you) where the operators belong under the head of the amusement craft. Let me tell you that the best stage employees in the country cannot pass the examination to be an operator, neither could the best electrician pass our examination. It is not the question of which outside craft you know the most about but which craft you belong to, amusement or building trades. The international grants us anything that is within reason and is a true friend and a staunch one to the stage employee and operator alike. It is the grandest and strongest organization that I have ever belonged to and I have belonged to a few.
> Your statement may be the case as you see it, but, Merrill, for the love of Mike, take off your smoked glasses. Don't you see the advantage in having ten thousand men back of you instead of a thousand? Do you know there is an I. A. local in over 300 cities in the United States and Canada? How many I. B. E. W. locals have you in the same territory? Do you mean to tell me that your judgment is better than the majority of the whole U. S. and Canada?

Now, Friend Merrill, don't you get mad. Dighton lives in Scrap Town, Hand-'im-A-Wallop country, state of Knock-'im-Out (I know the "Village by the Kaw" from stem to stern, or used to anyhow) and he simply writes from the shoulder, without any intention of doing anything else than set forth the facts as he sees them.

A New Operator Poet.

From Springfield, Mass., comes a somewhat lengthy poem, "The Moving Picture Operator," dedicated to L. U. No. 186. We regret that the demands upon space prevent its publication in full, but extracts read as follows:

"While taking in the picture show
And the wonders on the screen,
Do you ever give the man a thought
Who is to you unseen?
I mean the operator man,
Who makes the pictures move—
The one who hand and eye employs
To make the show run smooth.

"A little trouble up above,
You crane your necks to see
What kind of fool they've got up there—
He's busy as can be.
He has no time to mind your quips,
He's something else to do;
With hand and feet and brain alert
He's working for the show.

"His work is open to the world,
And anyone may see
The least mistake that he may make;
Therefore he tries to please.
He always does the best he can,
And honestly can say
Ofttimes he'd use you better,
Could he but have his way.

"Kind reader, I have said enough;
Now, when the show is punk,
Please don't jump to conclusion that
The operator's—good night!"

Wherefore I declare Brother W. A. Clark, secretary L. U. No. 186, I. A. T. S. E., duly elected into active membership in the Ancient and Accepted Order of Poetical Poets. I trust he will never regret the step he has taken. A recess is now declared, to shake hands with the new member.

Angels (Camp).

From Mr. O. J. L. Byers, Angels Camp, Cal., comes the following:

> Attached find M. O. for handbook. Am now in my new theater. Seats 500, and is the only M. P. house in this county. Business is very good. Use licensed service, six months old, from Gen'l Film Co. Films are in excellent condition. Haven't had a stop in so long I can scarcely remember the last one. Have new Motiograph; 80-foot throw, 6½ and 7½ condensing lenses, latter in front and 14 inches from aperture. Took Mr. Ghost out by bringing the condensing lenses very close together. Use 60 amps. a. c. and have good, clear light all over screen. Take current through a Butler formostat, which takes 30 amps. from the line. Have motor-driven projector; also motor drive rewinder. Took your advice when building new operating room and installed large vent in ceiling. Find it much cooler now. (See page 80, handbook.) On page 157, January 11 issue, Brooklyn sets forth his trouble. I had one like that. Tried many things without result. Finally installed No. 6 wires from transformer to lamp. That ended the trouble. Brooklyn will find his wires too small somewhere. Mine were much smaller than No. 6. In closing I want to say that I would not know how to run my theater without the M. P. World.

I fail to see why small wires would cause such a trouble as Brooklyn describes. If any one can advance a reason why Friend Byers is right let him stand forth and be heard. Small wires would choke down (reduce) the current. Reducing amps. certainly would not cause carbons to get red hot and needle. Success to the new house. May it continue long in the Land of Amusement, and prosper.

Union Rules.

Palestine Texas, writes:

> Have copy of old handbook, which was worth its price many times over. Have ordered copy of the new one. It has not yet arrived. Would like to know if the I. A. T. S. E., or any local branch of same, has, or can have, the right to make a ruling which would prohibit the proprietor of a M. P. theater from operating his own machine. Would also like to know whether or not a proprietor could be a member of the I. A. T. S. E.

This department will uphold the union in all things which are right, but it will not support it in the doing of wrong. And it is wrong to attempt to prevent a man who is a competent operator, and who is a bona fide owner, from operating his own projection machine. The man, if competent, has the unquestionable right, I believe, to operate his own property. No; a proprietor or manager cannot, of right, belong to the union. I ran the water works engines in your city for a year, and afterwards the electric light engines. Bent R. Walker, of your city, is an old valued friend of mine. Give him and Mrs. W. a week's pass to the show for me, will you?

Charter Will be Closed.

Brother Wm. H. Hyde, secretary L. U. 273, I. A. T. S. E., New Haven, Conn., writes, under seal of the union, as follows:

> Kindly, through the department, advise all operators in our vicinity that all sober, reliable and competent operators, having knowledge of projection sufficient to enable them to pass a rigid examination, and who desire to enter our local, should apply on or before February 10th, 1913, as after that date the charter will be closed until such time as the law of "supply and demand" warrants us in reopening same. Application blanks may be had from Secretary Hyde, P. O. Box 960, New Haven, Conn. Initiation fee is $25.

Now, here is a local which is taking the right course, in giving due warning to all operators of the impending closing of the charter for an indefinite period. Having had such warning, there are no just grounds for protest on the part of any one unable to get in during the closure. It is the right, manly, straightforward course for a local to pursue in such matters. It is acting fairly by those likely to be affected by such an act on the part of the union. I would like, however, to ask secretaries to send such important matters as this in ample time. You see, an item cannot be published the same week received, without a great deal of trouble, and if it comes later than Tuesday morning (that is to say, reaches me, personally, later than that) it cannot possibly be published until the week following, and will have to be put through special even to get in then. That is what was done with this. It came too late to be published the week received, hence had to be held over and put through special this week, which brings it to publication but very little in advance of the charter closure. However, that was no fault of the local or its secretary. They did not understand conditions. The getting out of a 108-page weekly is more of a proposition than most people realize. It is like a railroad train that has to start on time in order to arrive according to schedule. Matter is all made ready and in hands of the printer the week before—that is, the reading matter is. It has to be or the paper would never in this world be gotten out on time. As a matter of fact, most of the reading matter is prepared two weeks before—that is, the matter in the various departments. This is bad in one way, but gives us ample time to examine proofs and correct errors, and it cannot be avoided, anyhow.

That S. & H. Camera.

Mr. J. M. Phipps, Pittsburg, Pa., offers the following suggestion:

> Referring to "Green Trading Stamps," page 261, Jan. 18 issue, I think what was intended was to ask for a B. & H. (Bell & Howell) camera. Possibly the asker of the question did not write it plainly and you mistook the first letter. If my surmise is correct, tell him he may secure one from the Bell & Howell Company, 217 W. Illinois St., Chicago, Ills.

Many thanks, Friend Phipps, but it was the contributor's error, if any one's. The "S. & H." was typewritten and perfectly plain. Did not know that Bell & Howell made a camera. Knew they made many M. P. appliances, including a printer, but the camera matter is news.

Carbon Set.

Orleans, Nebr., says he has received his handbook and has set his carbons as recommended, but that they always burn as per D, Fig. 98, handbook. This simply means, as he will learn by reading page 210, that his lower carbon is advanced just a little too much. He must understand that, as I have said in the last line on page 209, a.c. carbon adjustment must be very close indeed. "Somewhere near" won't do. The adjustment must be exactly so, especially when using low amperage. Orleans also says he has ordered, and just received Mr. Hallberg's special economizer, and that the instructions therewith say to set the carbons so that they will be in perfect vertical alignment, and with some machines that cannot be done, in which case purpurchase of a new lamp is recommended! As to this, I cannot agree with Mr. Hallberg. What I have to say on carbon setting will be found on pages 204 to 212 of the handbook, and it applies to all cases, regardless of what particular current reducing device may be used. But this does not prevent you're following other advice if you prefer to. Mr. Hallberg and I have "had it out" on this subject before. We will never, I think, agree on that particular point.

Bugs, Bugs, Bugs.

Mr. Ralph W. Proper, Kansas City, and something like two dozen others, have commented on the bug question, all agreeing that it must be an insect which has alighted on the placard and had his "picter tuk." Most likely that is really the explanation, but I shall know soon. The relative length of the title letters and Mr. Insect is what puzzles me. One of the large manufacturers, in a sub-title of whose film a fly appeared, and to whom I submitted the question as to how a fly would or could appear as large as the letters of the title says:

> Your favor of the 16th instant is at hand. We note that the fly question is not yet settled.—that is, of course, the question of the fly which was photographed on the piece of film which you sent us. By way of illustration, we will presume that the placard to be photographed is the regulation distance from the camera and, a proper distance between the placard and the camera, there is arranged a square piece of glass, on which is the fly. When the photograph is taken the fly, of course, will appear as you see it on the film. In a way, we are inclined to believe that this fly was not so very well focused. We trust this will make the matter clear to you.

And there you are! This reply makes it apparent that the fly, from some reason best known to the manufacturer, was, at the expense of some trouble, purposely photographed in the title. Help, Watso! The butcher knife!

A Clever Scheme.

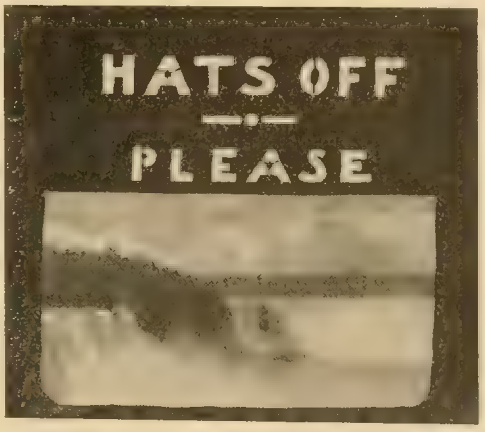
Mr. Jack Smukler, Detroit, Mich., sends samples of announcement slides he makes. His plan is decidedly clever and effective, if carried out with care and good judgment is used in the selection of slides. It is as follows:

> Select a suitable song slide, open it up and remove the emulsion from a portion of its surface, say one-third or one-half, either at top or bottom. With a letter stencil, of the kind which punches letters in cardboard, stencil out the message you wish to convey, place the cardboard over the clear portion of the slide and bind up again.



One of the slides submitted reads "Brief Intermission to Change Pictures." This appears over a man and woman standing at an open window, the upper half of which was removed. The woman is shaking her finger at the man, evidently, but the effect is that she is looking at the man and pointing to the message above. The picture on the lower half of the other slide is removed, and, in stencil letters appears the words: "Ladies Under Forty Please Remove Their Hats." The upper half of this slide has a boy and girl seated on the top rail of a vine-draped rustic fence, with a beautiful cloud effect and a full moon behind them. I set this forth to show that friend Smukler not only has evolved an ingenious plan, but he also used taste and good judgment in its application. The idea is shown in the illustration, though the scene (Niagara Falls) is hardly the most appropriate. The clear space could be coated over and written on instead of using the stenciled cardboard.

Artist Operator.

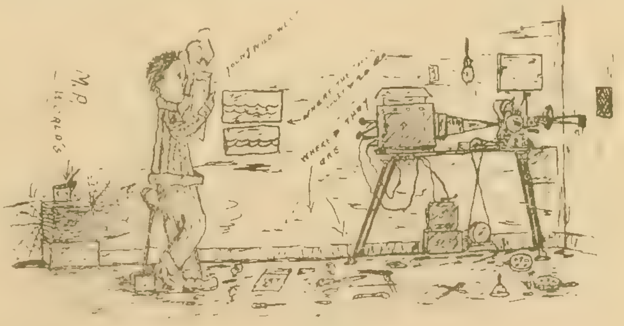
We are running to ART this week. First a poet, and now a pen-artist operator. The brother, Mr. Ed. Bunch, Mena, Ark., sends in the accompanying sketch and writes:



> This is the first time I've bothered you, but, some time since, I noticed Washington sent a sketch of his operating room, designed to show how the operator's domain should be kept. Well, this sketch is designated to illustrate conditions in many (Too many.—Ed.) operating rooms. I am hoping my poor effort will escape the waste basket and not be laughed at by Mr. Hoffman.

Huh! If Hoffman d-a-r-e-s to even giggle at anything in our department we'll bite him. I'm sorry to say I've seen too many operating rooms which might have served as a model for the sketch. Those Worlds and the accumulated cobwebs chime in remarkably well with the general scheme of things, as set forth. Come again, Brother Bunch. You're all right.

Marietta, Ohio.

wants to know (a) Address of National Waterproof Film Co. (b) Proper focal length of condensing lenses for a 6 foot picture at 20 feet. (c) What issue of MOVING PICTURE WORLD contains Edison machine instructions.

(a) Last I knew the address was 4200 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ills. (b) Two 6½ lenses. (c) Edison instructions, as well as instructions on Powers Six, Standard, Motiograph and Simplex, revised and corrected, are contained in the new handbook. They were simply given advance publication in the Department for the benefit of operators.

"HOW FATTY MADE GOOD" (Vitagraph), Jan. 31.—This is a tale of the country—of pigs, of apple orchards, of tree climbing by a fat man. A limb of the tree breaks when the fat man is on it, and there is a fall of bulk and of pride. A maiden decides she likes better a slimmer fellow; she accepts an invitation of the successful rival to go to the theater. In front of the show house the fat man is bluffed and fails to fight. He goes to a "pug" and gets a lesson. He decides he is a scrapper. In the show the leading man makes a hit—with the girl. After the show is over he walks away with her. He takes her on a cab ride. The fat man is the driver; this is the result of no accident, either. The horse is driven at a furious pace out into the country. The actor is pulled out of the cab; the fat man knocks him down; the fat man knocks him down twice. Then the matinee idol fights. But what's the use? The fat man falls on him; the stage man has just enough strength left to make a getaway across the fields. Fatty and the girl get up on the driver's seat and return; the poor actor walks the ties. It may not sound funny, but it is.

"THE SENATOR'S DISHONOR" (Kalem), Feb. 1. A well played drama. E. L. Davenport has the role of Senator Vane, detected by Congressman Lord (Tom Moore) in accepting a bribe. Alice Joyce plays the role of the woman who accepted the man of position in preference to the young lawyer she loved. There are some strong situations. It is too had it was necessary to kill of heart failure the Senator just to make a "nice" ending. Fiction is often stranger than fact—in moving pictures.

"PRIVATE SMITH" (Lubin), Feb. 1.—Wilbert Melville, the author of this picture, shows that he knows something of the pecularities of a soldier's life, and has made a good offering. The plot is modeled after an often used pattern, but has been developed with a fine sense of values and it seems as though every thing in it contributes to the author's object and consequently carries the spectator straight to the house of romance. At the end we sympathize with every one of the characters and warmly, which is about as good a thing as can be said about such a picture. There is some natural and human acting in it, although the leading woman shows inexperience. She seemed to be feeling her part too much to be able to give a clear picture of the character. With a little practice and a little more coldness, she will find what are means and may turn out to be a genius. Earl Metcalf plays Private Smith, who, sorely tempted, steals some company money in the keeping of Sergeant Ross (Edwin Carewe); but in the end, being kindly treated by Ross' sweetheart (Edna Payne), confesses. E. J. Phillips and Lucia Villa have roles. There are also some pretty scenes. A good picture.

"ALONG THE COLUMBIA RIVER" (Pathe), Feb. 1. The Pathe camera that is "seeing America first" is at present up in the Northwest, and this month it shows us the Columbia river. There are some interesting salmon fishing pictures; but for the most part the offering is devoted to scenic views. The country is very rugged, rocky and grand. The photographs are finely stereoscopic and clear throughout; at times they are perfect.

"THE GREAT PRAYER OF THE ARABS" (Pathe), Feb. 1.—An instructive picture, taken in southern Algeria. It shows a host of white robed Arabs praying towards Mecca at the end of the mouth of Ramadan. The two on this reel make a fine offering.

"THE PRINCESS AND THE MAN" (Edison), Feb. 1.—That Bannister Merwin wrote this poetic and effective story would be plain without his name on the screen. It is a romance, not a love story, and its setting might well have been one of the small German kingdoms of about 1847, just before the revolution that sent so many of Germany's best citizens to America. Chas. J. Brabin deserves much credit for the care and imagination he has shown in producing it, for it is a fine offering. Its object is to contrast the sincere mistake of aristocracy with the earnest truth of an oppressed people and then to bring the two together on the common humanity that both must respond to when the sunlight is let in. Miriam Nesbitt plays the heroine-princess who first feels the appeal of the people and whose desire to find out for herself is the step that carries the dramatic situation to its climax. Augustus Phillips plays the "man," a poet who is a revolutionist, but will not stand for violence. It is made a truly poetic character and we never liked this skillful player so much as in this role. Marc MacDermott plays the old king, somewhat decrepit, but still a king. He and Miss Nesbitt are both truly royal. Charles Ogle is a real revolutionist and Mary Fuller has a character midway between his and that of the poet. Richard Ridgley got a good laugh in his comic role as guard. Bigelow Cooper is a first class colonel and Robert Brower is all that was desired as the prime minister. It is an offering that will be liked much.

"A DAY THAT IS DEAD" (Edison), Jan. 28.—Our own personal opinion of what makes a beautiful picture is different, it seems, from that of many others whom we meet. With us, humanity, when shown truthfully, has more beauty than any background. Yet this picture, "A Day that Is Dead," awakened much enthusiasm, because its backgrounds are finer than usual and are well photographed. Truly, such pictures of the sea as it gives are worth while, for the scenes along rocky shore with the angry billows yeasting over it are magnificent. The story is not at all worthy of the poem which gave the suggestion, and the quotations from it—"Break, break, break on thy cold, gray crags, O sea"—give to it nearly all the depth that it has. If it had not been set in England and in the peculiar costumes of that country about a hundred years ago, it would have escaped many counter suggestions. To begin with, no English peasant would have been fool enough to think himself equal to a lord—not until he was angry. Then there are the distinctly Californian buildings and, last, the Catholic church and the priest. The story was impossible in America or in any old world country. But the scenes were surely fine.

"A SERENADE BY PROXY" (Edison), Jan. 29.—A light-hearted farce which Alice Washburn, as a romantic cook; William Wadsworth, as the lovelorn hired man and Edward O'Connor, as the family coachman, make very amusing. These players don't appear in every scene; and there is no real comedy except when they do. Gertrude McCoy plays the daughter of the house; F. A. Lyon and Mrs. W. Erskine, are her parents and Augustus Phillips is her lover. The story which they play seems better written than acted. It doesn't hold the attention very strongly for it hasn't enough life. The photography is good and, taken as a whole, the picture gives excellent entertainment.

"ON THE THRESHOLD" (Lubin), Jan. 28.—This may not be the first Lubin picture in which Ernestine Morley has played—we haven't noticed her before. She leads in it, as a mother who is passing through her first serious quarrel with her husband. As usual, their child is the means of reuniting the two young people; but there seems to be much more freshness and humanity than usual. It's strange how these two qualities go together. They make this story commendably worth while; but they are due more to Ernestine Morley's forceful and unconstrained picturing of the situation and to G. O. Nicholls' careful direction than to the scenario. The leading woman shows breadth; she is as convincing and also as distinct when she is in the reaction from passion as in the tense moment, and as much so in her showing of commingled tenderness and fear as of angry rebellion. Director Geo. O. Nicholls' pictures are standing out very well for significance and for truth. With this material he ought to go far. His offering has much beauty and will be liked. We might point out one unfortunate thing—if the father needed his overcoat, or could stand it, even in his emotion, why did he let his little girl go to sleep in his arms with bare feet and only her night dress on? Edwin Cartridge plays the father; Mary Smith is the grandmother and Fuller Baus is the tertium quid. It is a good cast.

"THE BULGARIAN ARMY IN THE BALKANS" (Eclipse), Jan. 29.—A little better photography would have shown us the faces of these brave men or shown more of them. Such men were worthy of being made known to all the world; it would do the world good, the more as many of them are now dead. The picture was taken at a frontier town just before they made their dash to fame and to destruction that has not been in vain, for they have freed their countrymen from degrading slavery and won back land that once was their own. Just as it is, it is a picture to see and remember.

"HUBBY DOES THE COOKING" (Eclipse), Jan. 29.—On the same reel is this farce that is perhaps a bit too much like others of its kind to be very acceptable to old time spectators. It is clown work and there is some freshness in it, of course. It is not vulgar so much as rough. There are dishes broken, etc.

"HUBBY'S POLLY" (Pathe), Jan. 29.—Paul Panzer is an accomplished actor and seems to be getting better every day, which doesn't imply that he wasn't good two years ago, for he was. In this picture he is very comical and it isn't an altogether easy situation to handle. It is a well written picture in which the wife getting her husband's note referring to a parrot finds a baby (left by the cook) behind the screen—the bird was behind the other screen. The trouble with it is that it is too long and drags a little before the beginning of the trouble. It is very fairly acted throughout and makes a serviceable offering.

"A CANINE MATCHMAKER" (Selig), Jan. 28.—William Duncan is at his best as author and producer in pictures with a different atmosphere than this which tells a love story, though it be with much freshness and with many good points. The dog's part doesn't add a great deal to the picture's final result and the number of tramps seems to us a bit of exaggeration. It is a fair offering, but it isn't a masterpiece.

"THE EMPTY STUDIO" (Selig), Jan. 29.—If a dark and beautiful face would alone make one a picture of tragedy, Adrienne Kroell would be a very Media. It is no great matter to her that she isn't for she has good abilities as an actress, even though she cannot at present rise to the magnificent heights needed for this particular picture. In its lower strata she walks securely and is an appealing figure in her role, an unsuccessful artist. One the other side of the picture is James Fowler, the son of a rich merchant, who has been disinherited because he, too, will paint, "daub" his father calls it. These two are brought together by a common interest, the prize offered for a painting of Tragedy. The incidents that lead up to their meeting and to the painting of the girl by the man are only fairly convincing, but have been carefully made by Director Hardee Kirkland and the whole is beautifully photographed. Lillian Leighton has an interesting part as a charitable Irish woman; she acts so well that one can't always recognize her in her different roles. Ethel M. Parsons deserves more credit for her freshly imagined situation and for her story's one big scene than for marked skill in dramatic construction. She hasn't thought up inevitable things, but seems to have taken the first incidents that suggested themselves.

"AILEEN OF THE SEA" (Melies), Jan. 30.—Mildred Bracken, in this picture, saves a very commonplace story by most natural and convincing acting. The scenario doesn't lack a good or even deep idea; but its author has not taken care to develop his situation artistically; there are incomparable things in it. The girl is dying because her lover is absent. Her father mortgages his boat to pay for a specialist who cures her and she now consents to marry another man to save the boat. The picture shows that she is happier with her husband than she would have been if she had married the first lover and the spectator's interest comes from the way it is acted by the leading woman. The photography is fair.

"SAVED BY HIS HORSE" (Pathe), Jan. 30.—Producers have learned how to make a chase of a stage by Indians truly effective. When well done it can never be anything but terrible and the time probably will never come when it will be unacceptable to the majority; but there must be no faking. Both the stage and the Indians, in this picture, go as fast as they can; the producer has kept his Indians far enough behind so that they can go fast and near enough so that they still suggest danger. It is a well written and ably conducted offering from first to last; and though the unbelievably intelligent horse that goes for assistance doesn't excite the emotion in the spectator that a more convincing messenger might, in the picture as a whole, it is a small matter. It makes a very true thriller

"THE LESSON" (Selig), Jan. 30.—There is one character in this picture that will attract notice. It is a clearly drawn young working man played by Jack Nelson, and though not a very engaging character, looked at as an acquaintance, he brings into the picture a breath of life from the great world of living people who are as God made them. Not all the characters of the story, which was written by J. E. Hungerford and produced by Oscar Eagle, are as real or natural, but all are fair. The writer seems to have tried to heighten his story's dramatic quality by increasing our pity for the heroine's poor family, around which the story turns. This wasn't necessary and the result is not wholly fortunate. Baskets of fruit and bread carried in charity are also theatrical; it is an aristrocratic and snobbish thing to do, likely to give offence to the poor family. As far as we can find out the spectators don't especially commend such baskets in pictures. Winnifred Greenwood plays the girl, with Frank Weed as her father, a rather healthy looking sick man, and "Timmy" Sheehan as her lame brother. Charles Clary plays the charitable floor walker who has excited Jack's jealousy and who, with his wife and child, visits the poor family with the basket. The photography is excellent.

"THE MASHER COP" (Biograph), Jan 30. The cop was detailed to "get" mashers and is dressed like a woman. Trying to stop an elopment, he manages to get something started which ends happily for everybody himself included. It isn't quite so good as the other on the same reel.

"WHAT IS THE USE OF REPINING" (Biograph), Jan. 30.—The opening situation of this picture is first-class comedy and it develops into very good farce. Farce following comedy is apt to seem flat for the time while it is winning its own welcome on an entirely different plan. There is just a little of the picture that is not at once perfectly clear, but it is all played in the right spirit and makes a good offering.

"THE PRIDE OF ANGRY BEAR" (Kalem), Jan. 29 A picture that, as a whole, is fresh and presents a new interest; it also has freshly pleasing backgrounds. This comes from its idea and its new scenario and not from its treatment, for there is much in its scenes that gives us the impression that we have seen it before. This short-coming is noticeable in nearly all makes of pictures and comes largely from the fact that we see so many from the same studios; it will not be so apparent to the occasional spectator. This offering was taken along some quiet stream and some of its scenes are lovely. In its showing of Indian character, it gets over very well, although that carrying of the Indian heroine by her white lover made some uncomplimentary laughter Such incidents are only for the gallery William West is commendable as the Indian chief and Francellia Billington is most engaging as his daughter.

"THE SHERIFF'S STORY" (Essaray), Jan. 30.—A story of the West, told in a gilded city bar by a sheriff to three club men. It is about a prisoner of his who got away. The narrator is, of course, the principal actor in the tale; but the barroom scene is thrown back every now and again to keep the spectator among the group of listeners. This is commendable; it makes the picture more intimate. The tale is worth while and very entertaining. We have seen another picture in which the pursued managed to deceive his pursuer by a seemingly mortal wound painted on his breast; but the picture is full of freshness and a very acceptable offering. It will be enjoyed.

"THE ALTAR OF THE AZTECS" (Selig), Jan. 31.—An unusual picture with an extremely interesting atmosphere. It's naturally a love story and deals with the discovery of a rich gold ledge once known to the Aztecs; but long lost. It probably was suggested by a real temple of prehistoric Mexico some good views of which are included; but its author has carefully laid out his plot and the picture shows none of the haphazard looseness that has begun to seem almost the rule with photoplays made to order. It opens in New York and with some perfect interior sets in the home of a rich merchant whose daughter resembles an old painting of an Aztec princess, her ancestress. This fact plays no part in the story, it is brought in merely for atmosphere, an atmosphere, by the way, that the picture doesn't pretend to develop. In the novel of this type the girl usually has something to do with finding the mine; is looked upon by the natives as a goddess or something of that kind and the scenario writer perhaps knew that the spectator would follow the well-known clue and that his picture would get an added touch of mystery. We commend him for it, but wish that he could have taken the time to make two reels or more; he shows that he can be interesting. The author is J. C. Cowles and he knows how to make an acceptable picture, and Henry McRae, its producer, can put one over. Hobart Bosworth plays the American mining engineer who discovers the "lost ledge" and so wins the girl, who is played by Phyllis Gordon. Henry W. Otto plays the girl's father and F. Galves and A. E. Garcia have parts as Mexicans. The photography is of the best and the offering plainly took the audience into camp. The sub-titles are not just what was wanted.

"BROTHERS" (Biograph), Feb. 3.—A solemn and affecting death scene opens this picture of a quarrel between two brothers who really loved each other. The value of the opening scene, which throws into strong light the emotional character of the brothers, especially of the older one, is felt at the end, where, by a fortunate chance, a terrible tragedy is averted by hardly more than a moment. The picture is not harrowing, for one feels after it is done that those two brothers must be the very closest of friends from that time on through their whole lives. The story was speedily produced, and perhaps was projected a bit too fast—at any rate, it seemed just a bit obscure in one or two places; yet even under these conditions it was very effective. In the characters we find that same respect for truth that we have come to expect in pictures from the Biograph studio. Both the brothers and that queer "non-committal girl" were clearly imagined and most certainly rung true. As for the girl, we know one who is in many ways like her—one of the queerest people we know—a truly country character. The "leaders" seem unusually poor to us. The use of the word "lady" instead of girl is a bit stilted, and we think that the screen explanations might have been made clearer. The photography is fair. A strong offering

"A PERILOUS CARGO" (Edison), Jan. 31.—A not very effectively made melodramatic picture, fabricated to use an old hulk of a ship, high and dry on the rocks, which at the climax is shattered by dynamite. If the story gives excitement—and it does at certain moments—it is by contagion, not by suggestion; by the running about and gesticulating of the players, and never by the convincing development of a dramatic situation. The fact that too many things in it give the producer's expedients away makes it seem very artificial. We had to see it with three audiences; in one it was laughed at; in the others, while there were some who seemed to be watching closely, some plainly didn't. The producer had two ships, and they were not enough alike. We can't praise the writer of the script, either; but we cannot pass without praising the players—it is remarkable that they accomplished so much. Walter Edwin and Herbert Prior, but especially the former, who has the lead, do fine work. John Sturgeon, as the lighthouse keeper, and Edna Flugrath, as his daughter, also do well. William Betchtel and Richard Ridgely, the conspirators, had ungrateful roles and seemed a bit too melodramatic—they had to do something. The photography is fair and some of the scenes are very interesting.

"AND HIS WIFE CAME BACK" (Vitagraph), Jan. 29.—James Young, as author and producer, has given us a very laughable little picture, with John Bunny, Kate Price, Flora Finch and Mrs. B. F. Clinton in a situation which, if not wholly fresh, has an entirely new and very amusing development. It certainly captured the audience. Its quality is more like sparkling ice than a laughing summer breeze. John Bunny flirts with Kate Jones across the air shaft, and Spinster Finch has her eye on them. She sends a telegram and John's wife comes back. But these four individuals are far more interesting than average people even in photoplays.

"SHE MUST ELOPE" (Lubin), Jan. 31.—There is a good deal of fun in this brisk farce, but it is hard to tell whether the author or the producer deserves the credit. The treatment of her poor boarder by the landlady shows knowledge of the world, and the best that the picture has is this fun of wisdom. These details and the clever, fresh way in which the old situation has been handled make it go. Its most noticeable shortcoming is that Spottiswoode Aitken is not old enough to play a doddering old man—it is noticeable that he has all his teeth. Mae Hotely, as the romantic old maid, is very funny, and she is well supported by Robert Burns. Author, E. W. Sargent, and producer, A. Hotaling.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?" (Lubin), Jan. 31.—On the same reel is a bright little comedy by Bertha Hirsch which, though slight and very short, is most enjoyable. There is an extremely pretty scene in which is a contrast between the different beauties of two women, light and dark. The wife is fooled by one of her husband's notes from a business man named Wifey and referring to another business man named Undertaker. The leading woman isn't a great actress, but a fair one, and her prettiness plays for her. Kempton Green plays the husband; Isabelle Lemon, the wife; while John Smiley is Wifey, and S. Aitken is Undertaker. It was produced by Joseph Smiley.

"THE HORSE THAT WOULDN'T STAY HITCHED" (Kalem), Jan. 31.—A farce that would have been better if the horse had let himself out, but it is too plain that he would have stayed hitched if they had permitted it. There is fun in it, though not so much as there might have been. John Brennan is the man who owns the horse and sells it to Ruth Roland's father, a gouty invalid. It is for Ruth to ride, but she leaves it hitched to her father's chair.

"ST. AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA" (Kalem), Jan. 31.—On the same film is this scenic of the oldest city in the United States. The photography is perfect and the subject very interesting.

"A TALE OF OLD TAHITI" (Melies), Jan. 31.—We have already reviewed this fine offering at length, and at this time need only add that it was received with great favor by a large audience composed of many kinds and conditions of people—an audience that made a good criterion to judge by. The picture of last week, "A Ballade of the South Seas," had perhaps a finer, more poetic story behind it, but it was a bit too fine for the gallery. There were some who didn't understand it. This is not only a beautiful but a popular offering and will be liked by every one. Personally, we preferred the other; it was a gem. To tell the truth, it was a bit too good for the uncultivated understandings of some.

"THE CHAMELEON" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 31.—We have seen chameleons and flattered ourselves that we knew something about them, but we learned more in ten minutes from this film than we thought possible. The chameleon is such a strange creature that he seems a comedian, one of nature's naturals. It is a fine offering, indeed, beautifully photographed, and will take everywhere.

"MAKING OF HATS" (C. G. P. C.), Jan. 31.—On the same reel is this instructive industrial showing how hats are made in the Philippines. The two on this reel ought to be a feature in the majority of houses.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 6," Feb. 3.—The best items this week are the views of the Gould-Shepard wedding. These pictures were taken at the beautiful Gould homestead at Tarrytown and include portraits of all the Gould family. The other items are good.

"THE PROSECUTING ATTORNEY" (Kalem), Feb. 3.—There is freshness and an entertaining atmosphere in this picture that develops an old situation in the expected way. As soon as we see that suspicious looking window in the library of the district attorney we expect the convict who has threatened him to escape from prison, and in this we are not disappointed. This event caused marked laughter in the audience. Yet, because of the story's natural and, for the most part, careful conduct, and because it is acted in an unforced and simple way, it pleases. It happily lacks the sentimentality so often found in this story and has one very novel thread of interest. Its perfectly made scenes are well photographed and often beautiful. The prosecuting attorney is played by Guy Coombs; his wife, by Alice Hollister; their little boy, by Master George Hollister, and the criminal, by Robert Vignola. All do commendable work. We dare place the offering as, in our estimation, third among all today's releases. We haven't yet seen the Selig special.

"OVER THE BACK FENCE" (Edison), Feb. 3.—The opening situation of this picture doesn't promise anything out of the ordinary, and, except for pretty scenes and pretty acting, it doesn't provide anything exceptional. The author seems to have seated himself and turned out a conventional commercial comedy. There is some freshness in his idea, but it is not rich in true comedy—indeed, we think that nearly all the comedy comes from the producer and the players, who deserve credit for making an entertaining, if not very substantial, offering. The photography is almost perfect. C. J. Williams is the producer, with William Wadsworth and Alice Washburn playing the older people, and Harry Beaumont and Bessie Learn in the parts of the two young folks. All are surely acceptable. Marion Carr is the author. The picture made a ripple of laughter which came and came again while it was on the screen.

"CUTEY AND THE TWINS" (Vitagraph), Feb. 3.—A comedy that becomes thoroughly enjoyable when once it gets started, although it seems a bit slow in the first few scenes, but in these Wallie Van's acting is the saving grace. Mr. Van plays "Cutie," a college "fusser" who gets so perfectly "stung" in just the way he deserved that the spectator enjoys the showing of it as much as though he were on the spot and it was happening to one of his own acquaintances. The twins are Edna and Alice Nash, two sisters who look alike. Their ages, in the story, are nine each, but they borrow their mother's dresses and, in the park, flirt with "Cutey." Later he calls and is shown up to the nursery. His classmates and the parents are "on" and enjoy it. The early scenes do not make us believe in them, but when the situation is shown it is so good that we have to believe in it. Florence Turner plays the mother, and Hughie Mack the father of the twins. James Young produced it from Marguerite Bertsch's script. The authoress deserves commendation for an unusually fine comedy idea.

"THE LOST NOTE" (Lubin), Feb. 3.—A melodrama featuring Ormi Hawley, who plays an innocent heroine accused of theft and put behind prison bars. It is a very thin, old-fashioned picture and isn't deeply interesting. Guy D'Ennery plays the minister who left a $5 note where the poor but proud girl or her blind mother would find it. James Moore plays the deacon who drops a note and then accuses the girl of stealing it. Clarence Elmer (a young man with some personality) plays the half-wit who finds the deacon's note after the girl has been arrested and bailed out by the minister. Mary Smith and Jane Gale have parts. The photography is good. Walter Starkey wrote the script, which Lloyd Carlton produced.

"THE HOUSE IN THE WOODS" (Lubin), Jan. 31.—A melodramatic picture with some beautiful sets, and which is perfectly photographed. Melodramas are very acceptable to spectators when they convince the emotions; they do not need necessarily to convince the mind. This picture's shortcoming lies mostly in the abruptness of its transitions. For instance, the girl's father gets word from his villainous nephew that his son-in-law has stolen his valuable painting. No proof is offered, but the old man puts on his coat and goes to the "house in the woods" and, after a short conversation that seems to consist mostly of "You did" or "I didn't," sends his daughter and her husband out of the house that he owns. All the trouble that the author took to make us believe this is to make the father into a foster father. It doesn't convince the emotions. Eleanor Kinkhead is the authoress of the story. Ormi Hawley plays the lead, with Guy D'Ennery as the hero. Irving White is the father, and James Moore the villain who in the end confesses. Clarence Elmer deserves credit as the old darkie butler.

"HYPNOTISM IN HICKSVILLE" (Essanay), Jan. 31.—Augustus Carney plays a good comedy character in this rural farce, and his work alone makes it an amusing offering. He is a stingy old farmer, in disposition so "near" that he counts the coffee beans. He doesn't want the hired man (John Steppling) making love to his daughter (Beverly Bayne), and won't give him enough money to see the hypnotist. John gets the old man hypnotized and there are some lively and amusing results. Eleanor Blanchard, E. H. Calvert and Miss Smith also have roles and, especially the last, add a good deal to it. Augustus Carney is in his best form and seemed to capture the audience, that laughed again and again after the picture got really under way.

"THE MAKING OF BRONCHO BILLY" (Essanay), Feb. 1.—Featuring G. M. Anderson, this picture provides fresh entertainment, with a good story of a tenderfoot's experience in a rough town out West. Clever gun play is the feature of it, but it is substantial and well put on. The spectators seemed to like it. The photography and backgrounds are excellent.

"THE GOVERNOR'S DAUGHTER" (Selig), Feb. 3.—Two years ago the Selig company produced this picture with Hobart Bosworth in the leading role, and did it well—much better than at this time. The script was better written for this picture (it naturally would be), but the actors, with the sole exception of the man's old mother, do not reach the same level and do not, as a whole, begin to touch the others in the force with which they impress the picture's intention on the imagination. Their acting is fair, for the most part, and there are one or two fine moments. Where the action is vigorous, as in the out-of-door scenes and the prison scenes, the picture holds, but the scenes in the governor's house, except the ending, are not effective. The mother is played by Eugenie Besserer; the man who is almost hanged is Harold Lockwood; the governor's daughter is Kathlyn Williams, and Lem Parker plays the governor. Henry W. Otto and William Hutchison have good roles. We miss the fine prison scenes of the former picture—they were great.

Independent

"THE RICH MR. ROCKAMORGAN" (Champion), February 3.—Showing, in a series of attractive outdoor-views, how a young man from Wall Street, posed as a rich young millionaire. He succeeded in this deception until the real millionaire came along and denounced him a sad imposter. The river views from the deck of the yacht are good and the love scenes nicely pictured. A good offering of the light, social type.

"A SPICY TIME" (Imp), February 3.—This picture ambles along in a congenial way and leads up to some genuinely funny situations. The tramp who steals the widow's pies, the mischievous children who put pepper in both pies and roses, the amorous widower, and other characters are pleasing. The scene in the court room, where everybody is seized with a sneezing fit, is a sure laugh producer. Good comedy.

"ONE ON AUNTY" (Nestor), February 3.—A farcical half-reel, in which a young couple meet with adventures on an automobile trip. The palming off of the hobo on the severe aunty, as Lord Trump, furnishes the chief humor of the picture. The photography is good.

"JED HOLCOMB'S PRIZE BOX" (Nestor), February 3.—This, on same reel with above, is the best and most original rural comedy we have seen in a long time. The plowing contest is novel and the girl's substitution of herself for the prize sheep, is pleasing. A good comedy skit.

"BILLY'S BOARD BILL" (Gem), February 4.—A typical "Billy" offering, featuring Mr. Quirk as a female impersonator. The plot is fairly novel, but we have seen him in more spontaneous parts. The manner in which he acquired the theater tickets was something new, and the scene in the theater, where the various Romeos were awaiting their Juliet, was amusing. Billy did a little too much winking at the camera. This tends to keep constantly in mind the fact that it is a moving picture and destroys the illusion. A very passable comedy.

"MONA, OF THE MODOCS" (Bison), February 4.—A two-reel production, which suffers from lack of a definite plot. As a series of pictures of Indian warfare it possesses some merit, but at no time is there a definite story structure to pull on the observer's interest. The detached episodes will pass, though the attack on the cabin was not very realistic; but on the whole we cannot commend this as a strong offering.

"FOR THE CHILD'S SAKE" (Eclair), February 4.—A lawyer marries an actress a year after the death of his first wife. His daughter grieves so constantly because her mother's picture is removed from the wall that she is threatened with blindness. Nothing cures her grief till the picture is restored to its place. The clear photography and good acting do everything possible to make this pathetic subject matter convincing, but it cannot be called a powerful conception.

"FATTY AND THE BANDITS" (Nestor), February 5.—There is a lot of ginger in this Western comedy, which leads up to a very laughable situation. The plight of the imitation bandits and Fatty's capture of the real ones makes a corking humorous film.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY, NO. 47" (Universal), January 29.—Pictures of the Gould-Shepard wedding, with individual views of George and Frank Gould, Prince de Sagan, Duc de Tallyrand and others, undoubtedly lead the interest in this number. In addition we have views of Cardinal Gibbons, English Royal troops, fashions, etc.

"THE BRANDED SIX SHOOTER" (Frontier), February 5.—Clear, sharp pictures and brisk acting combine to make this Western offering above the average in merit. The love story develops quickly and the manner in which the jealous brother assists in the stage holdup is nicely developed. The views of the trail in the arid, mountain country are interesting. A good offering.

"THE LOVE CHASE" (Eclair), Feb. 6.—In these times, when good comedy pictures are rare, it is seldom one goes over the mark and includes too much good stuff. This two-reel offering tells a very delightful love story in the first reel, with the best views of Niagara Falls we ever saw. The hero's pursuit of the girl could well have ended here. But this is not the case. Instead the plot goes over into the second reel, which gives us some more excellent scenes, including some fine views from the Singer building in lower New York, and a ball game in Brooklyn. Then the hero has a curious vision and a lot of things happen. A live tiger attempts to interfere in his love chase, but of course it was not successful. A diverting comedy offering.

"THEIR MUTUAL FRIEND" (Powers), Feb. 7.—A very dramatic offering, with Edwin August in the leading role. The scenes in which he is put through the third degree, in an effort to wring from him a confession for a crime he did not commit, are very tense and realistic. The opening scenes on the grounds of the California hotel are also good. A strong offering. It may be added that Mr. August is the author of the story as well as the leading character.

"THE STRIKE-BREAKER" (Nestor), Feb. 7.—A strike story, with its scenes at a Western mine. Certain incidents are very highly colored and border on the sensational, but the interest is held throughout. The girl brings in the money for the striking men just as the hero is holding them back from dynamiting the mine.

"ACCIDENT INSURANCE" (Crystal), Feb. 9.—A good comedy idea, well worked out. Pearl White does a thriving business writing accident insurance until a series of fake accidents occurs and the company fails. Bright and entertaining.

"HER LADY FRIEND" (Crystal), Feb. 9.—This, on same reel with above, is also amusing. The unattractive woman finds her stock rising when she becomes an heiress, and the hero adds a cipher to the figure, which immediately gets her a husband. A pleasing reel.

"BUILDING THE GREAT LOS ANGELES AQUEDUCT" (American), Jan. 30.—One of the most complete expositions of a vast engineering project ever thrown on the screen. In a series of clear, sharp pictures we see many features of this 223-mile aqueduct, which is to bring water from the valley of Owens River to the city. The great syphon, which crawls through the desert and over hills, is shown; various tunnels, of which there are altogether 140, are shown; a 52-mule team moves across the picture, hauling parts of the syphon, and in one place a mountain stream dashes across a concrete bridge especially made for it. Such a film is a valuable chapter in the education of most any one.

"BUD TILDEN, MAIL THIEF" (Reliance), Feb. 12.—The very definite story in this film grips the attention immediately and there is no lack of interest throughout the film. The manner in which Bud robs the mails to "save his future wife from insult" is well worked out. The court scenes are good, and the scheming Hank gets just punishment at the close. A good, live story, well presented.

"A CLOSE SHAVE" (Punch), Feb. 3.—A half-reel with a very slight comedy plot, in which two girls pose as lady barbers and put the safety razor man out of business.

"SOME DOCTOR" (Punch), Feb. 13.—This, on same reel with above, shows how a doctor in need of business gets up a smallpox scare and vaccinates the neighborhood. Mildly amusing.

"WOMEN LEFT ALONE" (American), Feb. 1.—The jungle man leaves his wife and goes to the sea, and the man of the sea leaves his wife and goes to the jungle. They meet each other's wives as a result, and trouble is avoided only by the flight of the jungle wife to her own husband. The seaman then returns to his home, and all ends happily. The picture is not quite as strong as some offerings we have had of this type, but the pictures are well taken.

"ANDREW JACKSON" (American), Feb. 3.—A two-reel historical offering which will perhaps best be appreciated by those familiar with the life of Andrew Jackson. To the ordinary observer it represents a series of detached incidents, each interesting in itself, but lacking the element of suspense or story interest. The characterizations are good. The duel scene, in which Jackson changed the position of a button on his coat, and by so doing saved his life, was interesting. The second reel has considerable action, leading up to the surrender of General Packenham at New Orleans. The manner in which Jean La Fite tendered the services of his band to Jackson was nicely shown.

"CALAMITY ANNE'S VANITY" (American), Feb. 8.—The slight comedy interest in this concerns itself with the efforts of the burro woman to outshine a visiting society woman from the East in point of wearing apparel. She gets a fine hat and gown and parades about the small Western town, but arouses no enthusiasm, and at last gives up in disgust.

"WHEN THE STUDIO BURNED" (Thanhouser), Feb. 4.—A series of views, with the recent fire at the Thanhouser's New Rochelle plant as a basis for the picture. James Cruze, Marguerite Snow, the Thanhouser Kid and other members of this company appear in proper person, all greatly concerned over the fire. But the story interest is lacking, and the picture will serve mainly to advertise further the burning of the company's property at this point.

"HOW MRS. McFADDEN LOOKED OUT" (Thanhouser), Feb. 7.—An amusing half-reel, in which Mrs. McFadden continues placidly looking out of her window while her daughter elopes with the iceman and the house takes fire. A fireman turns the hose on her and finally attracts her attention.

"LOS ANGELES THE BEAUTIFUL" (Thanhouser), Feb. 7.—On same reel with above. Entertaining views of the City of Angels, which has been the scene of so many moving pictures. The downtown section and surrounding parks are shown, also the National Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle.

"HIS UNCLE'S WIVES" (Thanhouser), Feb. 2.—By the terms of his uncle's will, an artist suddenly inherits his relative's six wives, who come to him from Constantinople, unexpectedly. His sweetheart, of course, makes serious objections, and he finally packs them off to join a theatrical troupe, and happiness is restored. Well pictured and rather entertaining.

"SEVEN AGES OF THE ALLIGATOR" (Thanhouser), Feb. 2.—Interesting pictures of alligators from the time they are squirming little reptiles that can be held in the hands, until they are hundreds of years old. "Okeechobee" is said to be 500 years old, and certainly looks like an Egyptian mummy. Instructive and well worth while, though we have seen similar pictures before.

"TEACHER WANTED" (Majestic), Feb. 9.—Picturing the life of a young Western girl who can ride and shoot with the boys of the ranch. She goes to an Eastern college and returns five years later to teach school. The older boys try to have fun with her, but she makes them dance to the noise of her gun. An old theme worked up rather well. The photography is good.

"THE INTERRUPTED ELOPEMENT" (Majestic), Feb. 4.—A well-pictured story with a conventional plot, in which the father gets a shotgun after his would-be son-in-law. The hoboes have a good makeup, and the struggle at the end is well shown. Harry arrives on the scene just in time to save the girl and her father from the tramps, and is promptly made one of the family.

"THE EXTRA BABY" (Majestic), Feb. 2.—Here is a picture story with some interesting features. Jack goes West after his engagement with Helen is broken. She becomes a nurse, and later brings ten babies West for adoption. One baby is left over, and Jack takes that one, and Helen along with it. Quite a good story.

"TOM, DICK AND HARRY ON THE JOB" (Punch), Feb. 6.—A fantastic offering, well pictured, but without much point to it, so far as we could see. The characters are pictured at the bottom of the ocean, with fish swimming about them. As an oddity it has some merit.

"JUST KIDS" (Punch), Feb. 6.—A comedy trifle, in which the mischievous boy ties a dog to the baby carriage and throws the baby out. Very slight.

"THE SHARPSHOOTERS" (Kay-Bee), Feb. 17.—A two-reel war story of characteristic excellence, featuring as the villain a sharpshooter, who is the rival of Jack, the hero. The opening scenes depict Jack as a young blacksmith, in love with the girl, who hesitates between himself and his rival. War is declared and both enlist, on opposing sides. During the fighting the sharpshooter wounds Jack, who is imprisoned. Later he makes his escape. The death of the drummer boy at the hands of the sharpshooter is pathetic. Good photography and a story of definite plot and interest.

"A DOCTORED AFFAIR" (Keystone), Feb. 27.—A comedy trifle, in which the hero poses as a doctor. Mabel's father discovers this and gives immediate chase, but all ends happily.

"A RED HOT ROMANCE" (Keystone), Feb. 27.—This half-reel, shown with the above, has more of a story. The characters appear in Spanish costume and the love interest becomes very acute. The rivals battle for Mabel's love, and one of them is suspended over a high cliff, down which they both finally roll. This has amusing moments.

"MABEL'S HEROES" (Keystone), Feb. 13.—A series of pictures in a California park, in which Mabel's lovers alternately bribe holdup men to rob the other fellow. A fairly amusing absurdity.

"HER BIRTHDAY PRESENT" (Keystone), Feb. 13.—This, on the same reel with above, is a comedy in which two tramps carry on a duel with revolvers. One of them, who has possession of a stolen necklace, calls an officer, who turns out to be the real owner of the trinket. Both are arrested.

"THE FAVORITE SON" (Kay-Bee), Feb. 7.—A two-reel picture of warfare, in which two brothers take the leading parts. The favorite son is at heart a coward, and in the end the other wins the girl. The battle scenes are vivid and freshened by new features. One in which the army crosses the stream on horseback is notable; also the scene in prison and the escape of the prisoners. The love story is worked in logically, and as a whole the production is of first merit.

"AN UNWILLING RESIGNATION" (Gaumont), Jan. 23.—A comedy, bordering somewhat on the eccentric French type, but moving rather slowly. Most of the picture is given up to the efforts of a man to recover from the mails a letter of resignation written to his employer. His indignant wife and their three children assist. The chief moment for smiles is when the child remails the letter after it has finally been recovered.

"AT MIDNIGHT" (Rex), Feb. 6.—This is not a pleasant picture. A wife enamored of worldly pleasures acts as nurse for her son, dangerously ill. In a moment when the son is alone he reaches to a table and takes an overdose of medicine, resulting in his death. The mother's life is despaired of. A burglar breaks into the house and is captured by the butler. He bears so close a resemblance to the dead son that the father substitutes him for a moment and saves the life of the mother. Such remarkable coincidences are not convincing. The work of Lillian Langdon, as the mother, was excellent.

"THE MAN OUTSIDE" (Imp), Feb. 6.—Good drama, in which William E. Shay, Jean Acker and William E. Welsh participate.

"A FRONTIER MYSTERY" (101-Bison), Feb. 8.—The picture does not hold. There is a thrill at the close, when the mother, who has for years sustained herself in the wilderness without visible means of support, and also maintained a rifle with a supply of ammunition, is restored to sanity and greets the grown daughter whom she had last seen as a baby when Indians attacked a wagon train. The photography is up to the Bison quality, there is plenty of action—riding and shooting—but the story lacks heart interest.

"EVA" (Mecca), Jan. 25.—This picture, made in England, has many fine settings, both interior and exterior. The story is interesting. The work of the actors, however, seems to be that of stage people unacquainted with picture work. Their quality is unquestioned; their lack of training for the camera is apparent. However, this is a matter which is easily remedied under intelligent direction. The addition to the Universal program of this brand should strengthen it.

"HIS SISTER" (Rex), Feb. 9.—This picture would deeply interest by reason of the remarkable photography of beautiful outdoor scenes. Added to these important factors is good acting by an especially competent cast, headed by Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley. There is a fine bit of comedy at the close, when the trio of female scandal mongers learn that the "man in the house" of the fiancee of the minister, which fact they had hastened to report to the head of the parish as soon as they discovered it, was none other than a brother.

"IN A WOMAN'S POWER" (Imp), Feb. 13.—In this two-reel subject William E. Shay and Jane Fearnley do excellent work. To the latter falls the hardest characterization; her interpretation of the hysterical adventuress, later the maniac, is unusually strong. R. V. Ferguson, as the decrepit admirer, is good, and so is Jane Acker, as the wife of the paroled convict. There are elaborate interiors, large groups, and much care has been given the production.

"PERCY M. BALDWIN, TRIFLER" (Victor), Feb. 7.—In this picture Owen Moore has the part of an artist who changes his affections on slight provocation. It is an insipid film.

Kinemacolor

"THE VIOLIN" (Kinemacolor).—Good drama. A story written around an old violinist, the owner of an ancient instrument, compelled thorough poverty to pawn it. An unscrupulous pawnbroker disposes of the violin to a rich musician, who later falls in love with a girl who proves to be the daughter of the old player. Through these two the old man gets back his treasure.

"THE STRUGGLE" (Kinemacolor).—A football player injured in a game is given morphine. Later he becomes addicted to its use. The struggle comes when, after falling in love with the sister of his chum, he tries to break himself of the grip of the drug. A brother discovers him when taking an injection of morphine and compels him to accompany him on a trip to the desert. There the battle is fought. There are many strong situations and picturesque scenes.

"MYSTIC MANIPULATIONS" (Kinemacolor).—Here are given many sleight-of-hand feats facilitated by tricks of the camera. The showing of the different colored fluids in glasses adds to the interest of the performance.

"THE ALCHEMIST" (Kinemacolor).—This is a strong drama laid in the days of castles, princesses and superstition. There are many fine costumes, some beautiful scenery and fair acting.

"ON THE CORNISH RIVIERA" (Kinemacolor).—There are many fine views of the coast along the southern shore of England.

"CORSETS AND WAISTS" (Kinemacolor).—A picture showing fashions in waists and some new styles of corsets. The picture will be of interest to women—perhaps also to men.

"THE GUIDING LIGHT" (Lubin).

This is a very dramatic episode of the New England coast made by the Lubin No. 1 company at Cape Elizabeth, Maine, Barry O'Neil, director. The local is absolutely true and the story taken from folk lore of the village. It is a two-reel picture released January 27th.

Peter Fife is the lighthouse keeper at Casco Bay. He has a beautiful daughter of 17, who is blind. Harry Barbour loves her. He has been saving all the money he can to have an operation performed on her eyes and he gives the money to Fife. One day Dick Drayton tries to steal the money and, being caught by Peter, is severely thrashed. Drayton in revenge succeeds in putting out the lamp in the lighthouse. The keeper discovers it and attacks Drayton, but is overpowered by a blow upon the head. Marie discovers her father and he tells her about the light. Though blind she gropes her way to the tower and lights the lamp just in time to save a fishing smack containing her lover and his crew from being dashed upon the rocks. Marie's reward for the fearful experience comes when the operation is performed and her eyesight is restored and Harry's reward is the hand of the heroine of Casco Bay. This beautiful story features Harry Myers and Marie Weirman.

Scene from "The Guiding Light" (Lubin).

THE SPIDER (Eclair).

In this picture we get a glimpse of the Japanese idea of drama. The scenes were taken in Japan and acted by native actors. The picture is hand colored, which brings out the extraordinary beauty of the costumes. There is no mistaking a Japanese villain; he is bad clear to the heart, as his diabolical grimaces immediately indicate. The sweetheart in a Japanese play is not so backward as our American heroines. When she gets a note to meet the hero, she is pleased nearly to death from the moment she gets the note to the very end. She is so attentive to him, that the pictures gives the impression that the order of courting is reversed in the land of the Chrysanthemum. The hero is indeed a hero and he seems to take it for granted that a certain amount of homage is due him on that account.

This story is about a lover who keeps an appointment with his sweetheart, but they are continually interrupted by the villain who is always on their trail. While they are gathering flowers in the field, the villain catches a poisonous spider and squeezes its venom into a bottle of drinking water belonging to the lovers. The hero drinks and dies. The heroine stabs the villain with her poignard. Not caring to live with her lover dead she also takes her own life and there is an end of all the characters in the play. It is one of the most elementary plots in the world, but the picture has its interest in the way it is done, which is strictly from a Japanese viewpoint.

THE CLUTCH OF CONSCIENCE (Pathe).

One of those rattling, good western stories, replete with stirring incidents of the living of life in the rough, that will set the whole country applauding its dash and spirit is "The Clutch of Conscience," a Pathe western story to be released on February 13th.

Pete Lonsdale, a typical bad man and gambler, after losing all his money is riding out of town when he sees Joe Fanwood, a prospector who has staked a claim, panning gold. Joe is too trusting and for his unwariness he is robbed and left senseless in a patch of wood. Pete rides back to the gambling game and invests his ill-gotten gold. He loses. In the twinkling of an eye he has shot out the light, taken the dealer's gold and departed, but not without a slight wound. When the smoke has cleared away the sheriff finds the dealer dead. He gathers his posse and pursues Pete. Pete, faint from the loss of blood enters a cottage where a woman is rocking her baby to sleep. By means of a locket she wears Pete learns that the woman is his sister whom he has not seen since they were children. He asks her the name of her husband and she tells him, Joe Fanwood. He shows her a locket identical with hers to prove their relationship and asks her to hide him from the sheriff. She opens the trap door, lets him into the cellar, then spreads a blanket and a pillow over the trap. She lays the baby on them and is bending over the child when the sheriff enters. He is easily put off, however, and leaves the house satisfied that Pete is elsewhere.

Scene from "The Clutch of Conscience" (Pathe).

Pete's wound is dressed and he leaves. His sister bids him good-bye through her tears. He rides away until he finds Joe Fanwood slowly regaining consciousness. He revives him, gives him all the gold—and a locket for Mrs. Fanwood, then rides away across the border.

Action is the keynote of this film and it is therefore, bound to furnish the pleasant excitement that pleases any audience. It will be released on February 13th.

NEW THANHOUSER LABORATORIES.

Thanhouser Film Corporation have established temporary laboratories at New Rochelle in fireproof buildings at Main Street and Echo Avenue. The new location is about as close to the railroad depot as the old, and is one of the most improved pieces of factory property in the city. The Thanhouser business office will remain awhile in the Cooley Building. The new machinery that had been ordered for the old plant just prior to the fire will be put into the new laboratories without delay. The latter will not contain a single piece of wood other than office furniture.

"In a Woman's Power" (Imp).

In this two-reel drama Jane Fearnley does strong work, the sort that sticks to you, that comes back to you hours afterward or during the next day. It is as the hysterical woman, later the maniac, that she is most impressive. William E. Shay plays the role of the discarded lover of the adventuress. Mr. Shay is always good. He is seen to best advantage in serious work, for it is always plain that he takes his work seriously. R. V. Ferguson has the part of the aged suitor, the successful one for a time, and in his portrayal of the old beau, on the verge of doddering senility, makes the most of his role. Jean Acker plays the wife. There is a large cast. The settings are carefully arranged; particularly does this statement apply to the scenes in the gambling salon. Herbert Brenon produced the picture.

George Reardon, a man about town, is thrown over by Cora in favor of old Lewisohn; he has money, while Reardon has spent all of his. Reardon takes his dismissal to heart and reproaches Cora. In a rage she seizes a pistol and threatens him. He grapples with her. In the scuffle the weapon is discharged and the woman is slightly hurt in the neck. The police enter, and the woman accuses her former lover of shooting her. He is sent to prison for ten years. The woman is scarred for life. When his sentence is half served Reardon is paroled. He falls in love with a girl who has no knowledge of his prison record. He disregards the terms of his parole and does not report. He changes his name.

Scene from "In a Woman's Power" (Imp).

Cora has opened a gambling salon. In the company of a friend, Reardon, who has married Marcelle, visits the place. Cora recognizes him and begs him to return to her. Reardon declines. Cora has Reardon followed, and later sends a letter, threatening to denounce the paroled man to the police. Reardon goes to Cora, to plead with her. His wife discovers the note and follows her husband. She learns that her husband has been in prison and hears the adventuress call up the police and inform them of the address of the man who has violated his parole. The two go to their home to await the arrival of the men of the law. When the policemen arrive at the home of Cora they find a raving maniac. They so report to the station; the man at the desk writes a note to Reardon that the police can pay no attention to the ravings of an insane person. Later Cora, on her deathbed, sends for the Reardons, and she asks and receives the pardon of the man she has wronged.

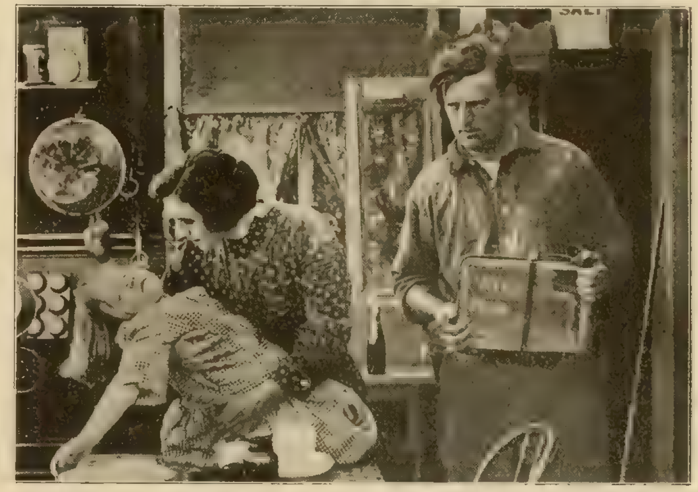
NORTH STAR AMUSEMENT CO. OPENS NEW THEATER.

At the corner of 106th street and Fifth Ave, New York, the North Star Amusement Co., will shortly open a beautiful new house seating over 1000 people. Motion pictures will be shown exclusively. Through Mr. J. H. Hallberg "The Economizer Man," they have purchased two latest model Simplex Projecting Machines. Mr. Hallberg also reports the sale of an Edison Model B. machine, with Hallberg A. C. Economizer, to Union Electric Supply Co., of Providence, R. I., and also another of the same make machine to Chas. P. Gilmore, Oswego, N. Y. Also Power's 6A to Lawler Bros, Greenfield, Mass.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SHERIFF'S KID" (Essanay).

A pathetic story of the West is depicted in a gripping and powerful drama of the above title. Mr. Gilbert M. Anderson, as a rough Western outlaw, but with a heart full of love for children, gives a remarkable interpretation of his most appreciable talent.

Broncho Billy, having disturbed the laws of the state, is thrown into jail. The warden hands the outlaw a cup of water and a piece of stale bread. The latter grabs the warden's hand, pulls it through the bars and threatens the former with a broken arm, unless he unlocks the door. Broncho Billy, having gained his freedom, takes to the woods. The sheriff is notified of Broncho Billy's escape, and goes after him with a deputy. He is surprised at hearing the fall of a body at the foot of the ravine. Pulling his gun from his holster, he rushes in the direction of the noise. He finds a child, about five years old, unconscious from a fall. He takes the young girl to her home, where the mother thanks Broncho Billy from the bottom of her heart. Broncho Billy returns to the woods. The sheriff discovers Broncho Billy in the underbrush and fires at him, and shoots him in the wrist. Broncho then returns to the child's home, where the mother bandages his wound and promises him protection. The sheriff returns to his home, where he finds the child in bed suffering from the fall. Broncho Billy in the next room, trying to reach for a glass of water, accidentally knocks over the wash pan. This arouses the sleuth instinct in the sheriff. He demands that his wife tell him who is in the room. She refuses. Broncho Billy, taking a shotgun and holding it up with one hand, enters the room and covers the sheriff. The sheriff's wife explains to her husband how Broncho Billy had helped the injured child. Broncho Billy backs out of the room into freedom.



Scene from "Broncho Billy and the Sheriff's Kid" (Essanay).

Baby Audrey as the sheriff's kid, demonstrates her juvenile talent in this pathetic feature. G. M. Anderson, in his world wide character role of "Broncho Billy" gives a splendid and interesting performance from beginning to end.

This production is booked for release February 22nd.

"TEACHING HICKVILLE TO SING" (Essanay).

Predominant in this hilarious comedy of incidents, is the remarkable counterplots. Getting away from the ordinary run of theatrical scenarios, this excruciatingly funny comedy is in a class by itself. How many times have pictures been thrown on the screen of stranded theatrical troupes? Hundreds, and yes, maybe thousands, but never has one been shown with effectiveness as the unprecedented comedy sensation "Teaching Hickville to Sing." Exhibitors will be given a treat, that will draw uncountable patrons to their theaters by the booking and exhibiting this photoplay.

Miss Beverly Bayne as Dolly Featherheels, a soubrette, brings out all of her clever characteristics. Her ability to portray parts of this kind has been phenomenal. Augustus Carney, the "Gibraltar of Fun" as the "Shrimp" gives the audience many laughable moments. Eleanor Blanchard in the role of the old maid, plays her part in her comical characteristic manner, which never fails to please photoplay patrons.

This production is booked for release February 20th.

MRS. MARSTON NOW IN FILMS.

After a retirement of twelve years from public amusement, Mrs. Lawrence Marston, wife of the veteran legitimate director now staging photoplays for Thanhouser, has come back—via the film route. And she never thought she would ever act again! She had made a resolution on that score at the time of her retirement, because she felt she could not do all a wife and mother should if she pursued the profession of playing, with its enforced separations from the loved ones. And telling of how she "came back," Mrs. Marston says:

Scene from "Good Morning, Judge" (Thanhouser).

"The blessing of picture work to the married professional woman is that it is stationary work. You are chasing from city to city in stage work, which kills home life. You can work in pictures and have your home life. I was not aware of the boon pictures are to so many acting people until Mr. Marston took up picture directing. Then I came to the picture studio and saw. Behold! and here I am back in harness myself!"

Her first film work is as the Amazon who exclaims "Good Morning, Judge," in the picture of that title released Sunday, Feb. 9th.

SOME SELIG RELEASES FOR FEBRUARY.

"The Governor's Daughter," released by Selig on Feb. 3rd, is a story of life in the West, in which Kathlyn Williams, Eugenie Besserer, Harold Lockwood, and Henry Otto are all seen to good advantage.

"Sweeney and the Million," released by Selig on Feb. 4th, shows the comical experience of Sweeney, a hodcarrier, who suddenly falls heir to a million dollars. The ease with which he spends his fortune and is again reduced to hod-carrying is extremely laughable. Lillian Leighton, and Messrs. Cox and Lancaster play the leading roles.

In "The Three Wise Men," released by Selig on Feb. 5th, Thomas Santschi, Bessie Eyton, Wheeler, Oakman, Frank Clark, and Fred Huntley all appear in parts well suited to their individual talents. The picture itself is well entitled to be called a Selig feature.

"How It Happened" was released by Selig on Feb. 6th. This is a drama of the West in which circumstantial evidence plays an important part. Those popular Selig Western players, William Duncan and Myrtle Stedman, do excellent work.

On Feb. 7th, Selig released one of their famous wild animal dramas. It is called "The Artist and the Brute," and is intensely gripping in its story and daring situations and incidents. Miss Kathlyn Williams is once more seen in hand to hand struggles with ferocious leopards. Hobart Bosworth and Al. Garcia also play important roles.

"Pierre of the North," is a dramatic story of two French Canadian trappers who follows the blazed trail of Le Bon Dieu with disastrous results. Messrs. Bosworth, Garcia, and Rawlinson appear in this story of the far north.

"Don't Let Mother Know," is a drama of modern day people teaching the bliss that sometimes comes from ignorance. Carl Winterhoff and Adrienne Kroell play the principal roles. Released by Selig on Feb. 11th.

"Her Only Son," is the story of a country boy who seeks his future in a great city. The city tries to get him but he gets a grip upon himself before it is too late and wins out. Harold Lockwood, Herbert Rawlinson and Henry Otto play leading parts in this drama. It was released on Feb. 12th by Selig.

Selig's release for Feb. 13th, is entitled "Bill's Birthday Present." It is a merry Western comedy in which William Duncan, Myrtle Stedman and Lester Cuneo appear.

"A Little Hero," is the title of the first half of Selig's split reel which was released on Feb. 14th. It is a story of the thrilling experience of two western children during a disastrous prairie fire. "Baby" Lillian Wade, Selig's famous child actress is seen in a sensational rescue scene. On the same reel is shown "Buddha," on educational subject of unusual interest which shows the colossal work of art made from bronze by the Japanese in 1252 A. D.

"FATHER AND SON" (Great Northern).

This drama deals for the most part with the ingratitude of a son who had gained promotion in the army and found himself outranking his father. The latter is a sergeant and has seen long service on the field of battle, but for some reason or other the son, who has been promoted to a lieutenancy, requests his father to retire so that he will not be humiliated by serving under his son. The father, on the other hand takes it as a honor to serve under his offspring, but the latter still persists in his determination that the father must retire or seek other quarters. The broken hearted old man finally decides to present his resignation to the colonel in command, but as a war is imminent, the veteran is urged to remain and go to the front in the cause of his country.

Scene from "Father and Son" (Great Northern).

He consents and covers himself with glory in many encounters, but on one occasion, during a review of the officers, the son, who is in command of a detachment of which his father is a member, deliberately fails to salute him when the officers are being congratulated for their valor. The old man's heart is almost broken and in the next encounter he pushes himself into the vanguard and not only saves his son's life, but saves the day. During the battle he is cut down by a cavalryman in the ranks of the enemy and dies on the field of battle. His son is at his side and when the body is carried to the field hospital, the commanding colonel orders that unusual dignities be shown. The son stands abashed at the side of the army stretcher and finally arises to uncover and show reverence to the body of the father whom he had urged to retire from the service.

On the same reel is a series of Danish landscape scenes showing interesting marine views of the coast of Jutland.

TO MANAGE FOREIGN BUSINESS.

Claude Patin, assistant manager of the Paris Gaumont office, has been detailed to the Flushing office of the Gaumont Company to take charge of foreign affairs.

SIMPLEX IN MELIES' STUDIO.

The Melies Manufacturing Company, have selected a Simplex Projector, made by The Precision Machine Co., 317 East 34th Street, New York, for installation in their studio at 204 East 38th Street, New York. Over twenty of the photoplay manufacturers are now using the Simplex Projector.

Motion Picture Patents Co. Wins

Justice McCall Decides Against New Litigation of Greater New York Film Rental Co.

Justice McCall, sitting at Special Term Part 1, of the Supreme Court in an opinion handed down last Wednesday, disposes of the attempt of the Greater New York Film Rental Company to resume its litigation against the Motion Picture Patents Company after the latter corporation had defeated the Greater New York Film Rental Company on an application for an injunction in the appellate courts.

Justice McCall does not go into the merits of the case but decides the question as presented to him by the pleadings. The attorneys of the Greater New York Film Rental Company had asked leave to reopen the case by the service of a new and amended complaint. The Justice on the papers before him dismisses the complaints of the Greater New York Film Rental Company and decides in favor of the Motion Picture Patents Company. The full text of Justice McCall's decision is given below.

Greater N. Y. Film Rental Co. v. Motion Picture Patents Co. et al.—The determination of the motion for an injunction pendente lite adversely to the plaintiff, with affirmance upon appeal, is fatal to the plaintiff's case as presented by the motions for judgment on the pleadings. The opinion of Mr. Justice Bijur, which I follow as indicating the law of the case, proceeds upon the discussion of an underlying infirmity in the cause of action by reason of the revocable character of the license given to the plaintiff, without which license he has no rights to assert as the complaint is framed. He cannot have a decree for a new or reformed agreement for a license, since as pointed out in the opinion the collateral oral understanding had with respect to the written agreement could not alter what was expressed as a complete contract with full knowledge of what it contained and accomplished, and every ground which is suggested upon the present argument as supporting a cause of action in equity was involved in the decision expressed. The proposed amended complaint, as I read it, does not make a better case. Nothing is alleged which could support reformation of the license agreement, for there was no mutual mistake in its execution nor even a unilateral mistake. The contract was made as intended and as understood, and at best the plaintiff relies upon a promise by the licensor not to enforce its accepted and undoubted legal rights. Specific performance of that promise is not open to the plaintiff, as ruled upon the motion for an injunction, and whatever the result of the issue sought to be tendered as to the alleged conspiracy out of which the licensor obtains its control of the patents or rights in question, no relief to the plaintiff can follow without the giving of a license to which it has no right and which the court cannot, directly or indirectly, compel any person to extend. Upon the general subject of an alleged conspiracy the case presents features common to those existing in Majestic Motion Picture Co. v. Motion Picture, &c., Sales Co. (Law Journal, October 19, 1912), wherein it was said by Mr. Justice Bischoff: "The plaintiff, engaged in the manufacture of moving picture films, seeks relief against the result of an agreement between the defendants whereby the sale of its product in the market enjoyed by the defendant Moving Picture Distributing and Sales Company is restricted. The theory of the action is that the agreement in question is unlawful as tending to restrain trade. From the allegations it appears that this defendant corporation has built up a trade of distributing motion picture films in the interests of firms affiliated with it, and has refused to the plaintiff the use of its channels of distribution, except at a rate of payment excessive of the charge made to its affiliated firms for the same service. In other words, the plaintiff asserts the right to compel those concerned in a private lawful enterprise to receive it as an associate and give it the benefit of a trade built up through efforts which it has not seen fit to make for its own independent benefit. In matters closely touching the public interest a monopoly of trade to the exclusion of one whose service might further the public good may be regulated or restrained, but the subiect matter of this action—a distribution of motion picture films—is not within the class of public utilities. The case of Rosoneau v. Empire Circuit Co. (131 App. Div., 429) is in point and is controlling." My conclusion is that the defendants are entitled to judgment on the pleadings and that no case of sufficient merit is presented by the proposed amended complaint to justify the granting of the motion for leave to serve it.

Under this decision the victory of the Motion Picture Patents Company in the above case, is final and complete.

WARNER'S FEATURES NOTES.

There have been many alterations in the offices of Warner's Features, at 145 West Forty-fifth street, in anticipation of the big business that will follow the launching of the productions of the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, the Satex films, the Imperial, and one other company now in process of formation. Extra quarters for the use of the rental department have been taken on the eleventh floor of the same address.

Jack Warner, who has been in charge of the Kansas City office, has been made manager of the Buffalo branch. H. E. Lippitt is now at Kansas City. He will take over the business formerly handled by the Omaha office. H. W. McGeary, formerly of Chatanooga, Tenn., well known throughout the South, has taken charge of the Atlanta office and reports a large increase in business.

Mr. Warner has received the still prints of the first picture made by the Imperial company; George P. Hamilton was the producer. Albuquerque, N. M., is the scene.

"THE MIRACLE" IN WASHINGTON.

"The Miracle," the four-reel feature of the German Art Film Company, had a sensational run at Tom Moore's Garden Theater at Washington, D. C. The reels had been hired for three days, but the crowds came so fast that the engagement was extended to a whole week.

SELIG ELEPHANT THROWS MAN TWENTY FEET.

Anyone who thinks that the beasts, held in captivity at the Selig Wild Animal Farm in Los Angeles, are of the domesticated barnyard variety, and therefore easy for the actors to work with, would have changed their minds if they had been watching one of the companies engaged in staging a scene from a wild animal play at the farm one day last week. "Toddles," one of the Selig elephants who had been working beautifully in a remarkable East Indian picture in which he plays the principal part, suddenly seized Al Filson, one of the players, around the neck with his sinuous trunk and hurled him twenty feet through the air and into the farm lake. Filson is rather a heavy man and well past middle age, so that the experience of being suddenly lifted from the ground by the head and "chucked" twenty feet through the air didn't appeal to him overmuch, although he insisted upon doing the scene over again the next day in order to secure a good negative in place of the one destroyed by the accident. That he managed to escape without serious injury was due to his falling in the water. "Toddles" was severely punished for his "break" and, although sullen, proceeded with his part.

GREAT NORTHERN SCENICS.

In addition to its regular releases, the Great Northern Film Company is presenting a series of scenic films which should prove of interest, not only because of their excellency in photography, but also because of the subjects selected. Scenic views of the rugged coasts of Norway, Sweden and Denmark are rarely presented, and it has remained for the Great Northern Film Company to present these in addition to a number of landscape and agricultural views. Among the latter are views of Jutland, on the coast of Denmark, and in this are shown marine views, and also the activities of the farmer folk. This is said to be particularly interesting, because it depicts the vim and energy with which the rugged peasant folk reap their harvests.

Another instructive series of motion picture views are to be seen in a series of views off Kullen, a cape on the west coast of Sweden. These pictures were taken from the deck of a steamship, and the effect is said to be most realistic from an educational standpoint. The Great Northern company intends making a specialty of scenic subjects for the purpose of meeting the demand for educational subjects.

SIDNEY OLCOTT IN TOWN.

Sidney Olcott, director of the Gene Gauntier Players, came up from Jacksonville, last week with the first pictures produced by his company. He brought the negatives of a two and a three reel subject, the first prints of which revealed some remarkable pictures. For sensational war scenes it is doubtful if any thing has been produced equal to those which compose these productions. Mr. Olcott returned to Jacksonville last Wednesday.

THE PICTURE THEATER EQUIPMENT COMPANY SALES.

Two Power's 6A's, with Motors, Inductor and entire equipment, to the City Theater, 530 Spring street, Jersey City Heights, N. J. One Power's 6A to Mr. L. C. Gasteiger, 103 Avenue A, New York City. One Power's 6A and Power's Inductor, Mirroroid Screen, and entire equipment to the Red Bank Amusement Co., Red Bank, N. J. One Edison Model B and Transformer, to Mr. E. Buchwald, Ballinger, Texas. One Simplex Projector, to Mr. F. E. Allen, Elmhurst, L. I.

KEHRLEIN WILL HAVE CIRCUIT.

Emil Kehrlein, Jr., of San Francisco, Cal., who has been in New York for the past two weeks, returned to the coast last Friday with a well defined plan to establish a circuit of twenty or more picture theaters in California and other coast states. Mr. Kehrlein says his company will operate only straight picture houses and will charge a rate of admission of ten, fifteen and twenty cents. Houses will be leased and purchased where possible, but the company will build if necessary. Ample capital has been secured to insure the success of the project.

PICTURES EXPOSE FAKE SPIRITUALISM.

The Pan American Motion Picture Company has been organized in Chicago, to exploit a picture designed to expose the tricks of the fake spiritualist medium. This picture was made by Miss Eva Fay and her husband Fred V. Curtis, well known to the patrons of vaudeville theaters. The officers of the Pan American Company are Fred V. Curtis, Donald J. Clark and Joseph Blake.

R. H. COCHRANE.

The accompanying cut shows R. H. Cochrane, formerly of the Cochrane Advertising Co., who has established a national reputation as an ad. writer of unusual originality and force. For years Mr. Cochrane has been a silent partner of Carl Laemmle, and he is now a prominent executive in the affairs of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

Mr. Cochrane has relinquished active association in the Cochrane Advertising Co., and will devote all his time to the film business. With his brilliant attainments as a writer, in addition to sound business judgment, Mr. Cochrane is certain to loom up big in the film game.

"SNOOKUMS" BROUGHT TO LIFE.

And now comes Eclair with the announcement of the famous McManus cartoon series, "The Newlyweds." This company has just announced that, beginning in March, they will have a two or three reel feature every Wednesday in the Universal program, beginning March 5th with "The Crimson Cross," in three parts. When the change is made, Eclair will have two release dates each week in the Universal program, Wednesday and Sunday. Among the Sunday releases will be "The Newlyweds." This series will undoubtedly make a genuine hit, since the cartoons are actually brought to life and made to move by trick photography. Several of this series have been shown to a number of prominent exchange and newspaper men who were really enthusiastic about the pictures, pronouncing them a real "scream."

MONOPOL'S FIRST FEATURE SHOWN.

The Monopol three-reel feature picture, "As in a Looking Glass," was shown to a small audience of newspaper men and friends at the Broadway Theater on Wednesday evening. This was too late to be reviewed in this issue, but we will print an account next week. There is a strange, almost weird fascination in this story as pictured. Marion Leonard plays the leading role and is supported by a strong cast. In acting, backgrounds, photography and general conduct it is a big offering.

Another new film manufacturer! This time it is a Denver corporation, the Columbine Film Company. It is capitalized at $100,000. It is intended to locate in South Denver, where both day and night studios will be maintained. Three companies, of fifty people each, it is said, will be employed. Five "champion cowboys" will be members of one of the outfits. The board of directors will be Lester Park, Otis B. Thayer, E. B. Deu Pree, Byron Park and William E. Foley. Mr. Thayer, who was formerly with Selig, will be managing director.

EXAMINATION POSTPONED.

The taking of testimony in the suit of the United States against the Motion Picture Patents Company, the General Film Company and others which was to have been resumed at the Hotel McAlpin on February 5th has been postponed until further notice, owing to engagements of counsel for the government. Inquiries at the offices of the United States District Attorneys of New York and Philadelphia failed to elicit any definite information as to the time and place of the next hearing.

GARRIOZZA NOT PRODUCER OF "FALL OF TROY."

Learning of the announcement that Garriozza, the principal producer for Savoia Film Company, has been claimed by that company as the producer of the "Fall of Troy," the Itala Company has cabled a statement to Harry Raver, its American representative, contradicting the claim and announcing that Garriozza had no part in the production of the "Fall of Troy."

MONTREAL'S NEWEST EXCHANGE.

The newest and largest feature exchange in Montreal, Canada, is called the Feature Film Company of Canada. Its first release is the Ambrosio feature "Satan." At an exhibition for the trade in the Strand theater, Montreal, on January 30, this picture was given a splendid endorsement. The Feature Film Company has the entire Canadian rights for "Satan."

PUNCH AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

The Punch motion picture players have established their studio at the Florida Ostrich Farm and Zoo. Members of the company are Harry Lilford, Alice Inward, Arthur Finn, Grace Heath, Jenny Gill, May Presell, Virginia Westbrook, John Kimball, Clifford Saums, Herbert Rice, and Charles H. Weston, director. Mr. Weston is an old Jacksonville boy and had his first stage experience playing various animal parts in musical comedies. Their stay here is indefinite.

A NEW JERSEY BOARD OF EDUCATION WANTS KINEMACOLOR.

The Board of Education, of Arlington, N. J., has applied to the Kinemacolor Company of America for a service of educational films in natural motion photography. The Board wishes to give a Saturday matinee and evening exhibition of the educational films in a hall in one of the Arlington schools, the hall seating 800 people.

"ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF MORMONISM" A SUCCESS.

The six-reel production, "One Hundred Years of Mormonism," had its first presentation at Salt Lake City, Utah, Monday evening, Feb. 3, at the Salt Lake theater. The house was crowded and the audience showed its approval of the story told by the picture by frequent applause.

COBB SELLING "RAMO" PICTURES.

C. Lang Cobb has joined the ranks of the film boosters again, this time as advance agent of the new company known as "Ramo." At present Mr. Cobb is over in Boston explaining the beauties of the new brand to the Yankee exhibitors. He expects to go through to the Coast if necessary to put the "Ramo" on the market right. Some film booster is Cobb.

GILBERT CLAYTON WITH KINEMACOLOR.

Gilbert Clayton, for many years well known as a stage director, has been engaged by the Kinemacolor Company of America to stage some of the natural color fashion films which are becoming such a feature of the Kinemacolor service. Mr. Clayton was stage manager for James T. Powers in "Two Little Brides" which closed some two weeks ago.

POWER'S INSTALLATION.

The Orpheum Theater of Boston, Mass., has just installed through the People's Photoplay Company of New York, a Power's Cameragraph No. 6A.

At a meeting of the Photoplayers held on Saturday evening, Jan. 25th, in Los Angeles, there was a vote taken as to who was the most popular leading woman in the moving picture industry. The vote was taken to decide who was to lead the grand march at the Photoplayers' ball, to be held at the Shrine Auditorium, on February 14th, with President Fred Mace, and when the ballots were counted Miss Mabel Normand, of the Keystone Company, was elected by a very handsome majority.

CORRESPONDENCE

LOUISVILLE.

THE strike situation in Louisville has shown no change of consequence, both exhibitors and strikers evidencing a disposition to fight the question out to the end. The Louisville Photo Play Association, which recently decided that the best policy was to allow the public to forget the affair, is finding the operators and musicians equally determined to keep the affair fresh. Not only are the strikers distributing placards through the city, but negro men carrying banners have been posted along the street in front of each of the eighteen houses composing the Association. Each carries a sign, reading, "This theater is unfair to union labor." The strikers, however, are finding themselves coming out second best in the struggle. Attendance at motion picture theaters has shown no decrease beyond that caused by stormy weather, and with a return to better conditions, receipts have assumed their normal volume. That the operators and musicians are in severe straits is indicated by the announcement that a number of operators have secured some old films and will tour Kentucky with them, showing in various towns. In the meanwhile, the high average of the pictures shown at Association houses has been maintained by the new operators.

George Steurle, Jr., son of George Steurle, a stockholder in the Broadway Amusement Company, escaped drowning in Beargrass creek recently by a slender margin. Young Steurle, who is but twelve years of age, was taking so much interest in the swollen stream that he lost his balance and fell into the stream. He was rescued by a fireman, after it seemed that he was lost.

Charles Olson, an officer of the Central Film Service Company, of Indianapolis, spent several days in Louisville recently. It is probable that Mr. Olson will again be seen in the role of wrestler, his recent work in Louisville in that line having attracted much attention.

The work of Wheatley Glasscock, the blind violinist, has been of such high caliber that Dave Levinson, owner of the Novelty, will make Mr. Glasscock a permanent attraction. The blind youth is a good violin player, an expert on the piano, and is the possessor of a melodious voice. The combination has proven a strong one, and the boy has been the recipient of much praise. He will be seen at the Novelty until he arranges to make his debut in vaudeville.

Kinemacolor has continued to prove a strong drawing-card at the Majestic theater. While the Kinemacolor films have proven a success in every respect recently, feminine patrons have been most favorably impressed with the latest styles, as presented in colors.

The shoe and moving picture business seem to be interlinked to some extent in Louisville. Al Wagner, the young giant who at one time accepted the public's tickets at the Novelty theater, has returned to Louisville and is now floorwalker in a shoe store. Arthur V. Sheckler, at one time a shoe salesman, is now at the head of the Inter-Southern booking agency, which supplies vaudeville for moving picture theaters. Another notable instance is Louis J. Dittmar, now manager of the Majestic theater, and considered one of the most progressive in the country. Mr. Dittmar was formerly a shoe man, and was president of the Louisville Shoe and Leather Club. He now occupies the same office in the Louisville Photo-Play Association.

Devotees of the moving picture are finding the films instructive as well as amusing, and efforts are being extended in Covington, Ky., to have the moving pictures adopted in school work. The School Commission of the city is said to look favorably on the plan, and the matter will be taken up in the near future. Dr. Alvin Ranshaw, a member of the commission, has come out with a public endorsement of the animated pictures. "I think the moving pictures would be a good thing for Covington schools," stated Dr. Ranshaw. "They are of highly educational value." Motion pictures are now being used in Paducah, Ky., schools, their success in that city attracting general attention.

The collapse of a motion picture theater under course of construction at Cincinnati, O., has resulted in a discussion of ways and means of eliminating such accidents in the future. Concrete was being used in the work. After going over the question, the Executive Committee of the Cincinnati Chapter of the American Institute of Architects has exonerated the owners of the theater from blame. The committee recommended the employment of a concrte expert by the Building Commissioner's office to enforce the laws and see that owners get value received for their money. This followed a proposal that owners be forced to employ a concrete expert at their own expense.

With a capitalization of $25,000, the Huntington, Ind., Motion Picture Company has been formed in that city. T. G. Perfect, Harry A. Perfect and O. E. Perfect are associated in the new enterprise.

The Palace theater, at Shelby and Rupp streets, has changed hands, Simon Switow being the purchaser and Mose Bass the retiring owner. Mr. Bass will give his entire attention to other interests. The Palace theater is now a member of the Louisville Photo-Play Association and will employ non-union labor until the present strike of operators and musicians is ended. Mr. Switow also operates the Crystal theater on Market street, which has been the object of many attacks by the strikers. The Louisville Photo-Play Association has displayed impressive tactics since its formation. Fearing that the field was becoming overcrowded, a member of the Association a few months ago purchased a theater and then closed it up. Now comes the transfer of a union house to a member of the Association, who has proceeded to convert it into a non-union amusement place. There is now not a single straight moving picture theater in Louisville using union labor. The Avenue and Hopkins, the chief houses outside of the Association are using vaudeville, the same being true of the Norman theater, Twenty-first and Portland avenue.

The newest invention of Thomas A. Edison, the Kinetophone, will probably be seen in Louisville moving picture houses in the near future, despite the fact that the Keith interests are said to have secured the exclusive rights. Several exhibitors are dickering for the local privileges. Those who have seen the Kinetophone in action say that it is entirely practical. Manager James Weed, of the Louisville Theater and B. F. Keith have announced that the kinetophone will be seen in the Kentucky metropolis shortly. Exhibitors of Louisville are deeply interested in a bill drafted by the Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the feature of which is a provision for the establishment of an Ohio State Censor Board. This board is to censor all films shown in Ohio, each film being taxed $1. The bill was drafted by L. S. Miller, of the law firm of Miller & Frost, which recently was retained by the Ohio League. The new regulations are in line with the recommendations of Governor Cox in a recent message. The proposed bill would make it unlawful for any film to be shown in Ohio without first meeting the approval of the State Censor Board. This board is to be composed of three members. The chairman will receive a salary of $2,000, and his assistants $1,500 annually. A secretary, whose salary shall be $1,200 a year, is also provided for. Any exhibitor convicted for violation of the proposed law will be liable to a fine of not less than $50 and not more than $500 for each offense. There are now 946 moving picture theaters in Ohio, all of which will be affected by the proposed measure. The bill further provides for the establishment of two classes of operators. Those receiving an average of from 81 to 100 per cent in efficiency examinations will be given licenses for two years, those falling below that grade securing only annual licenses, with permission to serve in theaters of 500 seats or less. At the expiration of the year, another examination must be stood, while the first-class operators will be able to extend the two-year period by the payment of $5. A Board of Examiners is the final provision of the bill. The chairman shall receive $1,200 annually, the other two members $1,000 and the secretary of the board $800.

Moving picture operators of Paducah, Ky., must pass examinations before Electrical Inspector Patrick Kilcoyne before permits are issued, according to a recent announcement by Mr. Kilcoyne. The inspector, after looking over facilities in Paducah theaters, announced that all houses are in first-class condition, as far as fire-prevention is concerned, and that the only danger now comes from the possible inexperience of operators. To insure capable men in the booths, all will be subjected to a thorough examination.

Work on the theater to be erected by the Central Amusement Company, of Cincinnati, will begin immediately, the contract having been awarded to Theodore Hirschfield & Sons Company.

Including theaters now under course of construction, Cincinnati will have over 90 motion picture theaters in the near future. Hamilton county will have more than 100. The estimate, given by an exhibitor, does not include those planned. There are now 83 moving picture houses in operation in Cincinnati, the total seating capacity being 23,000. This is compared to 31,000 seats offered by the legitimate theaters. Moving picture theaters now under construction include one on McMicken avenue, near Vine street, 500 seats; 930 East McMillan street, 600 seats; northeast corner of Fifth and John streets; Third and Lawrence streets; Woodward theater, Main and Webster streets and another in Hyde park.

The Nickelodeon, Henderson's pioneer moving picture theater, is to be remodeled shortly in order to keep the house abreast of the times. Stanley Spoehr is owner of the theater. The floors are to be lowered to permit of slooping interior, while the walls will be redecorated. Mr. Spoehr also is head of the Lyric theater company, of Henderson.

N. E. Scales has purchased a building at Lebanon, Tenn., and will spend several thousand dollars on remodeling it for a moving picture theater. The new house will be ready for operations early in the spring.

George A. Bleich has made improvements in the Garrick theater, of Madisonville, Ky. The screen has been enlarged, and other changes made.

Patrons of the Majestic theater were recently treated to a visualization of Maupassant's story of the unfaithfulness of a wife and the malignant revenge of the husband. Kinemacolor was the company offering the picture, with a modern touch added by similar conditions. The presentation has aroused quite a discussion among patrons as to the legitimacy of the proposition. It is conceded, however, that the works of Maupassant are thoroughly worth while on the screen as elsewhere.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

W. WATTS, owner of the Vaudette, Springfield, Ill who is threatening to break into magnatedom, is busy with his two new acquisitions—his new Chicago house and the state rights for the Kalem "From the Manger to the Cross."

The religious special production has attracted quite a little attention already in the middlewest due to the scrap-book series of the pictures which were published by a dozen of the leading papers, and there were a number of interested exhibitors at the first run given January 22, in the Vaudette to members of the Springfield press, clergy and Illinois moving picture men. Two sets of reels will be used in Illinois and the larger cities of the state will be systematically booked. Harry Thurston, a son-in-law of Mr. Watts who dropped a professional career to take an interest in "From the Manger to the Cross," will have charge of the first set of reels. The lecture for this set will be given by Ben C. Whitney who has done such successful work in the central states with "Dante's Inferno" and other high-grade features. The publicity end of the attraction will be given especial attention as each city visited will receive its share of special paper and newspaper advertising.

Labor and building troubles have delayed the progress of the new Vaudette that Watts is having erected at 543315435 South Ashland Avenue in Chicago and February 15 was fixed as the earliest date for opening. It has been decided that Charles Kizer, who has been in charge of the projection at the Springfield house, will be the manager of the new place. The house, which will cost $40,000, is 50 feet x 140 feet, with an auditorium 40 feet x 75 feet and will seat 600 persons. The lobby, 14 x 16 is of marble and mosaic tile. The indirect lighting system will be used throughout with 400 incandescent globes and two arc lights for the street. A color scheme of old rose, gold and white will be used for the handsome interior, set off by plush draperies and brass railings. The same projection policy that prevails at the Springfield house will insure good pictures for the Ashland avenue patrons as two Power's 6a Cameragraphs have been ordered. The $10,000 two-manual pipe organ built by Joseph Bruner, which has chimes and xylophone effects will be installed. This music will be supplemented by an orchestra of piano, violin, cornet and drums. The exact program policy has not been determined and it may include a touch of vaudeville. Watts has a ten year lease on the place and as he has been successful in his Springfield enterprises it is expected he will make the Windy City house pay.

Clifford R. Brown has purchased the Court theater at Kankakee, Ill., from S. B. Roach. Mr. Roach has also retired as managing editor of the Kankakee Republican. The new proprietor has been operator at the LaPetite theater for the last five years.

Hill & Oaks, of Chicago, showed moving pictures in connection with a good roads meeting, under the auspices of the Towanda Improvement Club at Towanda, Ill.

Managers of the theaters at Danville, Ill., held a meeting and decided that the question of Sunday theaters should be put up to the people rather than to test the case in court. This would give the sentiment of the patrons and decide the issue for all time.

The Elite theater at Burlington, Iowa, held a grand opening January 15, in honor of its new $1000 mirror screen. Invitations were issued for the event.

The Pathe Weekly No 2 proved a good attraction at the Vaudette in Springfield, as it was possible to feature Governor Deneen presenting to the Federal Government a monument erected by the people of Illinois to the Illinois men who died and suffered in the Andersonville Confederate Military Prison in 1864 to 1865. The same film also contained the Mississippi River Power Company's dam at Keokuk, Iowa, in which there is a great deal of local interest.

Myer Abe and Harry Broody have purchased the building in Des Moines, Iowa, occupied by the Star theater from I. Ruben who has a ten year lease on the property.

The moving picture show at the Central opera house at McHenry, Ill., has been conducting a baby show.

J. F. Pettit, formerly a passenger conductor on the Lake Shore railroad, has purchased the Rex theater at 404 South Main street, Elkhart, Ind., from O. M. Grubb. Pettit will personally manage the enterprise.

Illinois exhibitors are somewhat surprised that the freak bills already drafted for the state legislature have not included one for the censoring of moving picture shows. The legislature, however, is not yet organized and it is expected before the session is over, that some of the pseudo statesmen will propose an act, whereby the town marshal, the highway commissioner and the pound master will have a right to decide what is moral and what is degrading. Representative Jones, of Marshall county, is the champion of the people in Indiana. His bill provides for a board of censors, to consist of a man chief inspector at a salary of $1,500 a year and an assistant woman censor to receive $1,000 a year. It shall "approve each film, reels or view which is moral and uplifting and withhold approval from those which are suggestive and tend to debase or corrupt the morals." The words "approved by Indiana state board of censors" must appear on all films that are approved. No film can be shown that has not been so approved. The censors are authorized to charge a fee of $5 for each examination. Representative Myron L. Burt, of Bedford, Iowa, sprang into the breach and designed a measure for the Iowa legislature that will provide for a state board of censors. He sees in this plan a way to free the moving picture houses from all objectionable pictures and he classes as objectionable all pictures that depict crime and lawlessness. A fee will be charged for each examination of a film in order to support the new state department. He believes that he can enlist all the educators, club women, city officials and moving picture men in the state in his movement. It would be a misdemeanor to exhibit a picture without the caption "approved by the censorship of Iowa."

Joe F. Gstettendauer of Rock Island, Ill., has written a letter to the city commission of that city protesting against an advance in the price of admission to moving picture shows for Saturday, Sunday and for holiday performances. He declares that these are the only chances that a laboring man has to attend the show.

An inspection of the theaters of Freeport, Ill., is said to have resulted in a report that all the moving picture houses were in first-class condition. Several managers were allowing crowds to stand in the aisles and with this fault remedied the photoplay houses are in a safe condition.

The Celestial at Pekin, Ill., has been equipped with fire escapes at the request of the city authorities.

The age of the operators proved a stumbling block in the passage of an ordinance in Springfield, Ill., providing for the licensing of all operators. It was found upon investigation that one operator who was the sole support of his mother was under age and it would be a cruel commissioner who would legislate such a youth out of his job, especially if he had proved competent.

The Sunday show problem still looms large in the middlewest. At Springfield, Ohio, a portion of the proceeds was given to the local fund for fighting tuberculosis. This action was attacked by Rev. R. H. Hume, pastor of the First United Presbyterian church. He declared the municipal court had no more right to say that they might run providing they gave a part of their proceeds to charity than a man had to murder a fellow with the understanding that he was to give a part of what the man had in his pockets to his family. He would not dispute the statement of the agent of the tuberculosis hospital who expressed herself as being glad to get the money because it was needed in her work and that the pictures were wholesome and uplifting, but the pastor shows the absolute moral decay which follows a desecration of the Sabbath. Picture houses in Des Moines, Iowa, cannot open on Sunday mornings because ministers are said to have protested that the children were kept away from Sunday school. Chief of Police J. W. Jenney, has issued orders that shows be kept closed until noon. The Sunday question as a public issue will not down in Bloomington, Ill., and it is not unlikely that the proposition to open theaters of the city on Sunday will be voted upon at the municipal election in April. The proposition was defeated last April when a special election was held. The theater owners believe that they have a better chance to win this year when the proposition is decided at a regular election when more voters will turn out to cast their ballots. The business men, too, are said to be taking an interest in the question because shows in all the other cities, of any consequence, in Illinois are operated on Sunday.

The Colonial Photo-Play Theater Company, of Joliet, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $12,000 to do a general moving picture and theatrical business. The incorporators are Frank L. Scheidt, Roy C. MacMullen and Leon H. Sandiford. An extension sixty feet deep is being built at the rear of the Colonial theater in Joliet. The lobby is also being enlarged and a new mirror screen installed.

The Majestic theater at Jacksonville, Ill., has been redecorated.

Jacob Moelk has closed his theater in the old Housman building at Stoughton, Wisconsin, and will open a theater in the Erickson building in that city.

The Empress theater at Bloomington, Ill., opened January 11, with a program of moving pictures and songs.

A composition contest for children was used as a means of exploiting the Paul J. Rainey animal pictures in Peoria, Ill. The Rainey pictures have been very well received throughout Illinois.

Evangelist Arthur Long delivered a much advertised sermon upon "Popular Amusements" at the Christian Church, at Pittsfield, Ill. Of course, it resembled the typical evangelistic sermon upon that line twisted to attack moving pictures. Burr Swan, editor of the Pittsfield Republican, owns the moving picture show in Pittsfield and if there is a man who has done more good in any one Illinois community, he has not been discovered.

Manager W. O. Stevens of the Eagle theater at Princeton, Ill., will install a new pipe organ.

Another charge has been hurled at the head of moving picture men. In Springfield, Ohio, John Woods, city scavenger declares that the women go to the picture shows in the afternoon and lock the garbage can in the back porch and it is impossible to secure a satisfactory system of garbage collection.

Manager Buss of the Orpheum theater at Freeport, Ill., who has been forbidden by the city officials to run a vaudeville show on Sunday, has solved the problem by giving vaudeville six days in the week and on Sunday offers four reels of pictures with orchestra music for five cents.

The three reels of pictures of Des Moines, Iowa, taken by the Capital City Film company were shown at the Golden theater in that city in addition to the regular program, the week of January 15.

The Central Illinois Amusement company has opened a vaudeville and moving picture show in the opera house at Auburn, Ill. The house has been remodeled and redecorated and fireproof operating rooms have been installed. Two shows are given each night.

The prompt action of Miss Martha Christman, ticket seller at the Capital theater in Springfield, Ill., lead to the arrest of William Abell, confessed counterfeiter, and the discovery of a crude counterfeiting plant at his home. When she discovered a raised bill she called an officer and the man was taken into custody.

Business men of Pesotum, Ill., are interested in a movement to start a picture show in that city as electric light service is to begin in May.

The Empress vaudeville theater on Second street at Clinton, Iowa, has gone out of business.

The Royal theater at Litchfield, Ill., recently gave a Wednesday afternoon penny matinee for school children when the "Holy City" was shown.

Miss Ruth Straley, singer, was a special attraction at Dreamland theater, Canton, Ill., recently.

The Larkin company of Buffalo, New York, which deals in premium products for the household, is conducting a big exhibit in Springfield, Ill., and in connection with the display, showed its film "The Box From Larkins" and "A Trip to Niagara Falls" at the vaudette theater. The Princess theater at Rochelle, Ill., was used for exploiting the industrial film "Farming with dynamite" January 7. Tickets were furnished through a local store.

John Laffey has gone out of the restaurant business at Delavan, Ill., and will devote all his time to the Savoy moving picture theater.

A company has been formed at Denison, Iowa, to build a new opera house. A site has already been purchased.

The New Albany Theater Company of New Albany, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $1000. The directors are William J. Goodbub, George S. Herbs and Frank Smith.

The Pastime theater at Galesburg, Ill., is now giving a three reel show.

The Princess Feature Photoplay theater at Rockford, Ill., has inaugurated a new policy for picture houses of that city. The matinee price of five cents is unchanged but the evening admission will be ten cents. As the house gives four reels of exclusive pictures it is believed the change will be satisfactory.

Manager Reel of the Moline theater at Moline, Ill., was host to the children of the Bethany home at a performance of Lyman H. Howe's moving pictures.

Elmer Hawkins, manager of the opera house at Mahomet, Ill., has placed an order for an electric player-piano with a harp and flute attachment to be used at his picture show.

The Paul J. Rainey animal pictures were so popular at the Grand in Aurora, Ill., that they were booked for a return engagement February 9, 10, 11, 12.

The Huntington Motion Picture Company of Huntington, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $25,000, to operate amusement places. The incorporators are T. G. Perfect, H. A. Perfect and O. E. Perfect.

The city council committee at Quincy, Illinois, decided that owners of moving picture theaters will be charged a license of $1000 a year or $5 a day if they desire to charge an admission over ten cents.

Industrial moving pictures furnished by the General Electric Company, were shown at the second annual electrical and industrial exposition at the North Dakota Agricultural college at Fargo, N. Dak.

The Grand Amusement Company of Chicago, Ill., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $12,000, to do a general theatrical and amusement business. The incorporators are, Solomon Darmstadter, Herbert J. Freidman and Leonard B. Zeisler.

F. H. MADISON.

NEW ENGLAND.

P. HEINE announces that he has purchased from the Fidelity Amusement Company, of Springfield, Mass., the Globe theater, one of the best appointed vaudeville and picture houses in that city. This house is located on Main Street, and is popularly understood to be a good profit maker. W. E. Cleary has been secured as general manager, and the policy will be as before. The house has a seating capacity of a little less than 600.

The Union theater, Providence, R. I., seems to be prospering with Mutual films, and the management reports "perfectly satisfied." The Union is a B. F. Keith house and always does a satisfactory business.

Caribou, Me., may be in the woods, but it certainly can boast of a live photoplay house, the Dreamland, and a manager, E. B. Tinker, who is also very much alive. The Dreamland is a cosy, up-to-date house that has no trouble in doing nicely on picture programs.

In Boston, they don't hesitate to ask $1.50 for reserved seats to see motion pictures, and this is just what Captain Amundsen is doing at the Tremont Temple. The Captain is showing some extraordinary reels, "Discovery of the South Pole," and is delivering a lecture on them. Fifty cents is the lowest price, and business is most brisk.

Those remarkable motion pictures entitled "Homer's Odyssey" came back strong in Boston recently, when Marcus Loew strongly featured them at his South End Theater, at five and ten cents admission. Such a masterpiece as "Homer's Odyssey" never fails in its appeal to the public, as was proven by the large crowds attending the South End.

The full bench of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts handed down an opinion to the effect that the Mayor of any city has a perfect right to revoke the license of a theater if he believes the character of the production is detrimental to public morals. This, of course, includes moving picture houses, and is of interest to every exhibitor. The ruling was the result of a case in Woburn, Mass., where the mayor of that town revoked the license of a local photoplay house, the full details of which appeared in these columns at the time. Mr. McGann, owner of the Woburn theater, carried the case to law, through Attorney Kelly, and lost his case by the above decision. Mr. Kelly informed the writer that his client will now take the case to Washington.

The Scenic and Casino theaters, both photoplay houses of Westbrook, Me., have entered into an agreement to fight their common foe, the Star theater, which had its initial opening on January 1. The Star is a thoroughly modern and up-to-date theater, and would most likely make large and uncomfortable inroads into the Casino and Scenic. These two houses are giving away tickets, during the afternoon performances, which are good for admission to the other house for the evening performance. In this way the Casino and Scenic hope to divert trade from the Star, managed by Walter J. Cuddy, formerly of Keith's theater, Portland. E. T. Maybury is president of the Star Amusement Company.

S. E. Sherman, of Bristol, Conn., was not at all daunted by the fire that recently swept away his moving picture theater, and is now at work on a new one that is to eclipse the old house in many ways. Mr. Sherman has plans, calling for a theater to seat 1500 people, including a balcony and box seats. The new theater will be excellently located on Laurel Street with a frontage of 65 feet, and a depth of 125 feet. Thoroughly modern and fireproof construction is called for in every way; in fact, brick and iron will be used almost exclusively. Vaudeville and pictures are to be shown at the new house which should be ready by April 15, at a cost of 50,000.

H. A. Chenoweth, manager of the Shawmut theater, Blue Hill Avenue, Roxbury, Mass., has decided to give three shows daily, instead of two as the former policy called for. A daily matinee will be given, with admission at 10 cents, and in the evening two complete shows are scheduled, starting at 7 p.m. For these performances, the prices will be 10, 15 and 20 cents. Reserved seats are to be had for the evening shows with a change of program bi-weekly. Two shows will be given on Sunday evenings. Manager Chenoweth is making good at the Shawmut, and is living up to his name as being a live, able executive.

Loew's South End theater has changed its picture policy, under the general management of N. N. Brooks, and is now showing Universal reels, instead of the former Mutual service. It is stated on most reliable authority, that the reason for this switch can be found in the fact that the Automatic Vaudeville Company of New York, which controls the Palace and Comique theaters, as well as its interest in the South End, desired the two last named theaters to be served with Mutual films. This the Mutual folks could not do, having made agreements with theaters in the vicinity of the Palace and Comique, not to give service to any other houses in that section of Boston. As Mr. Brooks, the Boston representative of the Automatic folks, desired to have all his Boston theaters receiving pictures from the same concern, it was deemed necessary to switch the South End to the Universal program.

Sam Davidson, head-shipper of the New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston, is a happy man. Reason? He is now a married man.

F. H. Kimball, manager of the Standard theater, Bellows Falls, Vermont, finds business excellent, and states that the Standard is doing well and will do even better when Bellows Falls folks realize the quality shows always given. A good bill of vaudeville and pictures is the policy.

Mr. M. Gilman, assistant manager of the Beacon theater, Boston, has the sincere sympathy of the trade in the loss of his mother, who died recently.

In order to stimulate trade, the Keith theater, Portland, Me., has started a pony contest, to be decided by popular vote. Whoever receives the largest number of votes will be presented with a pony team. The contest runs until June 15, and is open to boys and girls only. Manager James E. Moore, reports much interest in the contest. This house is using licensed films to good business.

M. C. Blumenberg of the Casco theater, Portland, Me., has installed a new orchestra that seems to please greatly. Business continues good at the Casco, with pictures and singing novelties.

Two members of the Portland, Me., fire department met their death while fighting a fire, and, as usual, the moving picture theaters came quickly to the front, to help the unfortunate families of the two firemen. Benefit performances were given on January 9 and 10 by Manager I. M. Mosher, of the New Portland theater and by William E. Reeves, of the Big Nickel.

The Gilmore theater, Springfield, Mass., has a new manager in the person of T. Ash, Jr., of Enfield, Conn.

Alderman Walsh is now the man in charge of granting licenses for Sunday performances in Springfield, Mass., having been appointed to this position by Mayor Denison.

On January 11, Mr. James Donovan of the Casino theater, Taunton, Mass., gave a complimentary entertainment for the Young Men's Catholic Temperance Society.

James Boylen has decided that he will manage his new theater, now almost ready, at Taunton, Mass., instead of placing the house in charge of a manager. It will be opened early in February.

Manager James H. Donovan of the Central Square theater, Lynn, Mass., reports that his house did an unusually large business this week when vaudeville was added to the regular picture programs; and that this policy will be continued until further notice.

Manager Fred Lovett, of Lawrence, is mighty well pleased that his employers, Messrs. Toomey and Demana have transferred him to the Broadway and Premier theaters, of Lawrence. Mr. Lovett formerly managed the Nickel theater, of that city, which is owned by the same concern. Mr. Lovett is a clever, hard working manager, and makes good. John R. Oldfield is now in charge of the Nickel theater.

The Woman's Club, Brattleboro, Vt., made arrangements with the Princess theater, that city, and gave a benefit performance on January 22, in the interests of the Day Nursery. Two shows were scheduled with admission at 25 cents. The Boston office of General Film Company supplied the films, free of charge.

Ralph McCausland is now in charge of the Empire theater, Brattleboro, Vt., succeeding F. B. Blake.

An esteemed contemporary, dealing with matters pertaining to vaudeville principally, and with this industry, now and then, incorrectly states that "If the bill introduced at the Masschusetts State House by Senator Bagley, of East Boston, becomes a law, it will mean that every picture house would have to add acts to the bill or go out of business." This is entirely at variance with the truth of the matter. The bill framed by the Massachusetts State Branch No. 21, of the Exhibitors' League of America, states that it shall be permitted to show pictures continuously for one hour, at the end of which time there shall be given five minutes of some other form of amusement. At present 20 minutes is the longest time allowed for the exhibition of pictures; to be followed by five minutes of something else, after which pictures can again be shown for another twenty minutes. The law, most emphatically, does not say that "moving picture shows shall not last for more than one hour," as stated by the vaudeville publication.

Bernard M. Corbett, a Boston boy, for some years a traveling representative of the Edison kinetograph, has resigned. Mr. Corbett will return to Massachusetts for a well earned lay-off, before closing a deal, as several nice offers have been made him. Mr. Corbett is a great favorite in this section, and is well known to all the New England trade.

The Coleman theater, Southington, Conn., has had a prosperous opening, according to a report. The house is owned and managed by D. O. Coleman, who erected an up-to-date theater, showing a strong picture program.

The Rhode Island Dental School, of Providence, R. I., has decided to employ moving pictures to show children how to care for the mouth. The State Board of Health is co-operating with the dental school along these lines and pictures are to be made and exhibited throughout Rhode Island. There is no quicker and easier way to draw public attention to the absolute necessity of keeping the mouth and teeth in good condition, than to employ the means above outlined.

Motion picture managers appeared at the State House, Boston, on January 23, before the committee on mercantile affairs, to urge the bill of Joseph Mack, manager of the Hub Theater, Boston, and president of the Massachusetts State Branch of the Exhibitors' League of America, amending the act of 1908 which restricts the exhibition of films continuously to 20 minutes, and requires that another form of entertainment be given for at least five minutes, before the pictures are resumed. Mr. Mack's bill provides for a maximum period of one hour for continuous exhibition. District Attorney Henry C. Attwill, of Essex County, who, with Hiram E. Miller, of Lynn, was counsel for the league, said that if the original purpose of the act was to protect the eyesight, that the objection was no longer reasonable, because of the distinct improvement of the pictures and machines. Chief of police J. W. Whitney did not oppose the bill. James H. Devlin, of the law department of Boston, opposed the bill on the ground that the twenty-minute law was the result of careful medical examination. The matter is now under consideration.

A fire that started at 5 a. m. January 21, at Lynch's Theater, Woonsocket, R. I., a photoplay theater, did about $75,000 damage. The Exchange Building was wrecked, and Lynch's house is on the first floor. The house seated about 1,000. Indications point to the operator's booth as the place where the trouble started. The heaviest losses were sustained by the Woonsocket Realty Company, owners of the building. Mr. Irving W. Smith, proprietor of Lynch's Theater, has a loss of about $10,000. Only a short while ago the wiring in the operator's booth was changed and accepted as satisfactory by the proper authorities.

A new incorporation is the Boston Feature Film Company, of Boston, a $10,000 concern, with Harry F. Campbell, Samuel Grant and Ephraim N. Cook as the promoters. The Dreamland Theater Company, incorporated for $5,000, has the same directors. Mr. Campbell and Mr. Grant are widely known in this section, having been associated with the business since its infancy.

The Eastern Theater Company has filed its papers of incorporation at Boston for $30,000. Frederic S. Elliott, Charles J. Beatey and Irving L. Rich are named as the promoters.

Joseph N. Carr, who managed the Nelson Theater of Springfield, Mass., since William Fox took over the house, has left the Nelson and is now managing the City Theater, Fourteenth Street, New York, succeeding Mr. Ben Leo.

It is reported in Boston that Michael Shea, of Buffalo, N. Y., intends to build a theater in Toronto, Canada.

On January 20, the Hartford Theater, Hartford, Conn., rounded out forty-four years of existence. Manager Fred Dean, of the Hartford, states that his house is showing bigger returns now than ever before. The house is playing to vaudeville and pictures. Like many other theaters that now play the pictures, the Hartford formerly was a "legitimate" theater, playing Shubert attractions.

Edward Shields, formerly manager of the Bijou Theater, New Haven, Conn., is now at the helm of the Nelson Theater, Springfield. Mr. Shields is a well-known manager of much ability, and is one of William Fox's best men. The Nelson is doing well, with a program of vaudeville and pictures.

Springfield moving picture operators held their second annual ball on January 29. Great preparation were made.

The Franklin Square Theater, Worcester, Mass., has been purchased by S. Z. Poli, the theatrical magnate. The Franklin Square is the second largest theater in Worcester, and was sold by the Willard Taylor Estate on an order of the Probate Court, on January 16. It is understood that Mr. Poli paid about $150,000 for this most desirable property, which will probably play vaudeville and pictures before long.

Fred Murphy, formerly well known to theatrical folk in this section, is now on the job again as assistant manager of the Boston offices of the Mutual Film Corporation.

Burton Holmes, the well-known globe trotter and lecturer, is doing a record-breaking business at Tremont Temple, Boston. With prices ranging upward to $1.00 Mr. Holmes is playing to S. R. O. Some exceptionally fine motion pictures are being shown on Mr. Holmes' present engagement.

Salem, Mass., photoplay theaters expected great things when John F. Hurley became mayor of that city not long ago, due to the fact that Mr. Hurley, in his campaign speeches, prior to his election, had told the voters that he stood for a more liberal observance of the Sabbath, and that one of his first moves would be to grant licenses to photoplay theaters, to allow them to run Sunday afternoons and nights. Mayor Hurley attempted to carry out this promise in spite of the hue and cry raised by ministers, reformers and religious organizations, but an opinion, rendered on January 24, by City Solicitor M. L. Sullivan that the mayor has not the power to permit the electric theaters to open on Sunday, balks his efforts along that line. Mr. Sullivan finds that under the new city charter, the city council has the power to grant all licenses except those granted by the license commissioners, and the mayor has only the power to supervise the licenses. It is expected that the city council will refuse to grant the Sunday licenses.

The R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, of 597 Washington Street, Boston, has installed two Simplex machines in Keith's Theater, Portland, Me. Mr. Marson reports excellent business, both in the supply lines and in film rental.

H. M. Goodhue, manager of the Bijou Theater, Fall River, Mass., reports that his house is doing the best business in its career, and that the mirror screen has been a most distinct addition to the house.

James Barrett is lecturer on the films at the Lynn Theater, Lynn, Mass., and Manager Jeff Callan reports that Mr. Barrett's work has made a hit with his patrons.

The Cambridge Theater, Lynn, Mass., opened to the public on January 27, and is managed by Mr. Arthur E. Lord. A bill of feature pictures is the policy.

There seems to be much distress these days in Fall River, Mass., and it is all about Mayor Kay and the licenses for Sunday openings. Mayor Kay failed to approve certain applications for Sunday afternoon shows. It looks as if the Academy of Music will be the only theater allowed to be open on Sunday afternoon, while the St. Michaels, Palace, Bijou, Academy of Music, Star, Globe, American Hall, and Lyric will be open Sunday evening. For some reason, the Puritan has not secured its license and Mayor Kay is quoted as stating that the cause for this was the fact that the manager of the Puritan had not placed his application on time.

The Globe Theater, Boston, was the scene of a real tragedy this week, when Miss Delia O'Hare was suddenly taken ill with heart trouble, and died in the theater.

Work is now being started in earnest on the new Million Dollar Theater at Scollay Square, Boston. The old building is being torn down, and a large force of men are at work.

An educational theater party was held on Tuesday evening, January 28, by the New England section of the Electric Vehicle Association of America, at which members of that body of the Electric Motor Car Club; many city officials and officials of the fire departments throughout New England were present. A block of 200 seats was reserved for the visitors at the Bijou Dream Theater, Boston, and a special exhibition of pictures, showing the Springfield, Mass., fire department in action; several pieces of apparatus being battery propelled, and the parade of the Electric Motor Club, of Boston, last Memorial Day, when scores of electric vehicles were driven through the streets of Boston were shown.

The William Fox circuit, of New York, has just purchased the new theater now being built at New Britain, Conn. This house should be ready for its opening performance by March 15, when regulation bills of vaudeville and pictures will be presented. It is understood from reliable authority that John Zanft, general New England representative for William Fox, put the deal through for the New Britain Theater, which represents an outlay of nearly $175,000, with a seating capacity of nearly 2,000. This house will be one of the finest in New England devoted to vaudeville and pictures, and is a distinct addition to Mr. Fox's growing chain of New England theaters in Hartford, Springfield and Waterbury. The only real opposition to the New Britain Theater is Keeney and McMahon's house, also a first-class theater.

William Fox hopes to open his new theater at Waterbury, Conn., by February 28, when big programs of vaudeville and pictures will be the policy.

The Trimount Theater Company, of Rutland, Vt., was awarded $1 damages in its suit against Smith and Casey, a vaudeville team, for a broken contract.

S. Kantor, manager of the Canton Theaters, at Norwalk and Danbury, Conn., reports excellent business in both theaters. Manager Kantor has signed an agreement to use the new talking pictures in each house.

The Camden, Maine, Opera House is now playing to picture programs, having indefinitely eliminated the vaudeville. The Opera House is doing a very nice business, with good pictures, and sees no reason why it should throw away good money on bad vaudeville.

Al V. Rosenberg, manager of the Rockland Theater, Rockland, Me., has changed his policy, and is now changing his films on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, having decided to do away with the daily change idea.

The Kinemacolor Company has opened an office in Boston, Mass., at 162 Tremont Street, under the charge of W. E. Atkinson, who states he will have all the Kinemacolor releases for the entire New England territory. Kinemacolor is a great favorite in Boston, as is attested by the large crowds going to the Tremont Temple to see the Kinemacolor reels that are shown there from time to time.

PHILADELPHIA.

WILLIAM BARRY is about to have erected a new theater at Sixth and Girard Avenues, which will be one of the model places in that section.

A report is out to the effect that Cullen & Conway, of the Drury theater have purchased a site for a new theater which will cost about $150,000. It is also stated that the plans call for a house which will seat about 2000.

The new Artic theater, at Atlantic City, is meeting with great success according to Manager S. Stern, who was a visitor in Philadelphia recently.

Another moving picture theater will soon make its appearance at No. 1918-24 North Front street. It is to be conducted under the management of George Weber and A. W. Munsick. The buildings occupying the site of the new theater are now being torn down.

Announcement was made a few days ago that the old Restein Hall, one of the oldest landmarks in South Philadelphia, will be demolished to make room for a theater which will cost something like $50,000. Just who are the contracting parties could not be learned.

The Subway motion picture theater located at Reading, Pa., which is in course of construction, will be opened in February. The theater has exit doors on the four sides of the building, and affords more means of egress than any other picture house in the state.

Plans for a theater to be built at Sixtieth and Locust streets are being sent out to the local builders for a contract price. This theater will cost about $175,000.

The Model Amusement Company has conveyed to David Sablosky, the theater building, No. 425-27 South street for a consideration of $70,000, the assessed valuation.

E. Throp has opened a new picture house at Lesburg, N. J., and is receiving the patronage of the entire community. Ten cents for four reels of pictures is the policy of the house.

The Egg Harbor theater has been meeting with such great success that Manager King will enlarge the place, increasing its seating capacity to about 800 persons.

Walter Martin, manager of the Grand theater, Vineland, N. J., has been laid up with a complication of diseases for the past few weeks, but is now recuperating and is expected to be up and around before long.

A large number of the churches of Philadelphia are running picture shows during the week days, and are entertaining large crowds. The St. Patricks Church is giving a show every night, while the St. Peters Church, Fifth and Girard streets, is showing pictures twice a week.

C. H. CONGDON.

INDIANAPOLIS.

THE city building inspection department has begun a rigid enforcement of the ordinance governing the construction and arrangement of motion picture houses, particularly in regard to emergency exits. Several places have been ordered to provide better emergency exits, and many have been found where the illuminated exit signs, required by the ordinance, have not been provided. Motion picture theater men are showing a willingness to assist the inspection department in its efforts to carry out the provisions of the ordinance.

Mrs. Gertrude E. Oakes, who for many years had disbursed charity funds provided by motion picture theaters, died at her home here on January 14. She was sixty-two years old and devoted most of her life to charitable work. The motion picture theaters contribute $100 a week from their Sunday performances, for charity. A memorial in the form of a cottage at Cheeryvale fresh air farm is to be erected and called the Oakes cottage, by the motion picture theater interests.

A vigorous protest against a proposed increase in the annual city license fee from $25 to $100 is being made by the owners of some of the smaller houses on the outskirts of the city. These men say that a $100 license fee would practically be prohibitive, while the downtown houses appear to be satisfied with the proposed increase.

Owners of motion picture theaters in the Eighth Indiana Congressional district recently met at Muncie for organization purposes. Two locals of the Indiana Exhibitors League were formed. T. C. Lacey was elected president of the local formed for Muncie and John Rosenberry president of the Anderson local. The two new locals expect to pay special attention to having motion pictures introduced as a part of the regular course in the public schools.

W. J. Goodbub, George S. Herbst and Frank Smith have organized the New Albany Theater Company, at New Albany and will conduct a motion picture theater in that city. The company has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $1,000.

A film exchange will be conducted at Warsaw by the newly organized Wayne Film Corporation, which has been incorporated with an authorized capitalization of $20,000. Those interested in the company are A. D. Whitman, O. W. Clemmer and W. P. Clemmer.

Safe blowers recently entered the office of the Wells Bijou theater at Evansville and, after blowing a safe open, escaped with $1300. It is thought that the safeblowers hid in the theater after the last night performance.

John B. Davidson of Muncie, Richard Kilmere and Adam McCormick have organized the Middle West Film and Exchange Company, which will conduct a film exchange in Indianapolis. Articles of incorporation, showing an authorized capitalization of $10,000, have been filed with the secretary of state.

A new motion picture theater is being erected in this city by George Schick at the southeast corner of Sheldon street and Roosevelt avenue. The building is to be a one story brick, fireproof structure and will cost about $6,000.

A motion picture theater will be conducted at Huntington by the Huntington Motion Picture Company. This company has just been organized and incorporated by T. Guy Perfect, Harry A. Perfect and Ora E. Perfect and is capitalized at $25,000.

With an authorized capitalization of $50,000 the New Era Amusement Co., has been organized here by P. H. Rich, E. F. Harrold and J. I. Wolmer, and will conduct motion picture theaters in different parts of the state.

C. L. CUMMINS.

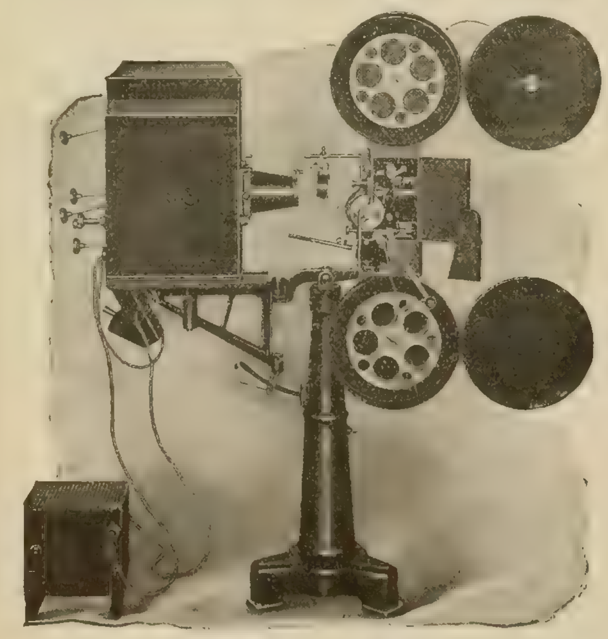
ACCURACY

What is it worth to you?

How many times have you ordered repair parts for that other machine and when they arrived they didn't fit? How many hours have you wasted trying to make them fit, and even then you knew you hadn't done as good a job as you required, but you had cussed and fussed and then let it go at that.

Many, many times we have heard operators say, "Why don't the manufacturers make parts that fit?"

So we made up our minds that we would make all parts of our machine absolutely accurate no matter how much it cost, and it does cost like sin, but it is going to pay us and pay you, Mr. Exhibitor, and Mr. Operator. With that in mind we named the company The Precision Machine Co., and we have lived up to that name in the full sense of the word.



Simplex

projectors are made of the best materials possible to find for the purpose, and that fact combined with their accuracy insures such long wear that those who are used to other makes of machines are astonished at the condition of Simplexes that have able, for they are accurate.

When the time comes, however, that new parts have to be used you can depend upon it that they will fit. They will go on like an old glove, not too loose or too tight, but just comfortable, for they are accurate.

A machine made that way cannot help but be better than that other kind.

Our Name is Your Guarantee.

Catalogue A will tell you more about it.

SPECIAL

THE REDEMPTION

Feb. 21, 1913 Kalem, Two Reels

A strong moral drama in which is proven the theory that "a criminal is only a criminal because he has not had the proper opportunity to develop an honest character."

"Red" Ellis, a knight of the underworld on whom the experiment is tried, twice starts to betray Grey, his benefactor, but each time his conscience restrains him. The second time, however, his old gang outwits him and one of their number makes off with a necklace belonging to Grey. The guilt falls on Ellis; but Grey, still believing in Ellis, allows him to go on his promise to recover the necklace in half an hour. The time has almost expired when he rushes in to Grey's parlor gripping the necklace in his hand.

THE LOST SON

Feb, 17, 1913 Lubin, Two Reels

John Nolan, in the heat of anger, strikes down his opponent with a billiard ball and, believing him dead, runs away. Ed Jennings, the injured man, recovers.

Nolan's mother advertises for him and instructs the police to find her boy, but in vain.

Ten years later, George, his younger brother, holding a position of trust and supporting his now widowed mother, is robbed of some of his employer's money and tries to make it up by playing the races. He loses, and in desperation returns to the "bookie" and tries to put up his watch. The "bookie" opens it and sees his mother's picture. George tells him that Jennings is alive, and the little family is reunited.

Chains of an Oath

Vitagraph. Two Reels.

The father of Donia, a pretty Russian peasant girl, whom he has betrothed to Gregory, compels her before departing for America, to take an oath to return and become his wife. In America Donia falls in love with Ivan, a fellow countryman, who has become Americanized and is in every way a worthy young man. Ivan asks her to become his wife. She is reminded of her oath to Gregory and, heartbroken, returns to her native land.

Ivan follows her to Russia and is discovered by Gregory while pleading with Donia to return with him. Furious at Ivan's attentions to his betrothed, Gregory dogs his footsteps awaiting an opportunity to kill him. During events which follow Gregory awakens to the realization that Donia does not love him, and placing Donia's hands in Ivan's, he revokes the oath and leaves them alone in the ecstasy of their love.

A Drama in the Air

Pathe. Two Reels.

Ray Newell and Paul Van Arsdale, aviators, are in love with Betty Chapman. Betty announces that she will accept the winner of a race soon to be held. Newell, fearful lest he lose the prize, disables Van Arsdale's machine.

During the race, Van Arsdale's machine, slightly in the lead, suddenly drops to the ground and he is buried under the wreckage.

Newell's treachery is unearthed in a clever manner by Van Arsdale's friend, Harry Wilson. Later Betty and her father visit Van Arsdale in the hospital and Betty naively informs him that he has won her heart, if not the race.

The Last Blockhouse

Kalem. Two Reels.

A vivid portrayal of Western Frontier days, based upon historical incidents.

A party of Western pioneers, while constructing a block house, are guarded by a troop under Captain Steele. Crow, a renegade half-breed, tries to become friendly. He annoys Dot, the wife of Jim, a young settler, and is quickly repulsed.

Crow, infuriated at her scorn, incites the Indians to attack the settlers. The block house is destroyed. Crow captures Dot before the attack and rides off toward the camp.

Jack, the sole survivor, manages to reach the young husband, who is away in the woods, while Jim and Captain Steele recapture Dot from the Indians and in a hand to hand struggle with Crow, Jim avenges the fate of the pioneers.

The Millionaire Cowboy

Selig. Two Reels.

A brilliant comedy which smacks of the clean humor of the Western Plains.

During a wonderful exhibition of horsemanship and cowboy skill "Bud," the foreman of the Diamond S Ranch, is handed a telegram summoning him to Chicago to claim a fortune left him by an uncle.

There he falls in love and marries the stenographer in the office of his attorneys.

After a year he tires of the monotony of the life he leads and wires for the entire outfit to come on to Chicago and wake the town up. They carry out instructions elaborately, much to the embarrassment of Mrs. "Bud." After they leave, "Bud" embraces his wife and to her great relief whispers "Never again."

A Tale of Old Tahiti

Melies. Two Reels.

Teria, the daughter of one of the most influential chiefs of Tahiti, falls desperately in love with a young French Midshipman.

She pleads with her father to secure him for a husband. The French officers laugh at the idea.

The chief orders him taken prisoner. He loves Teria, but loyalty to his country demands his return. He is held captive despite his efforts until an expedition from his vessel comes ashore and tears him away in the very height of his love, with only her last gift—a flower—by which to remember the sweetest experience of his existence.

January 27, 1913.

The Guiding Light

Lubin. Two Reels.

Peter Fife, keeper of the light at Casco Bay, lives alone with his 17-year-old daughter born blind.

Harry, the girl's lover, saves all of his scant salary and gives it to Fife for an operation to restore Marie's sight. Dick Drayton is caught in the act of stealing the money and soundly thrashed. Bent on revenge he extinguishes the light. Marie through her quick wit and fortitude restores the light, thereby saving Harry and his companions, who are in danger of being dashed on the rocks in the darkness.

The brave girl's reward comes in the form of a successful operation and her engagement to Harry.

CINES.

THE CONJURERS Feb. 18).—Penniless, as usual, Stout and Thynne hit upon a bright idea for raising funds. Advertising themselves as sleight-of-hand performers, they entertain a large and enthusiastic audience. Stout poses as the "wizard," while Thynne, hidden under the table, attends to most of the "magic," The scheme works well until Thynne, taking a fancy to a chicken which is used in one of the tricks, quietly disappears through the door with it. Stout bravely keeps up the performance alone, but during the excitement which prevails in connection with the disappearance of a member of the audience in a magic trunk, manages to sneak off after his partner. Their flight is soon discovered, and the crowd pursues until the two impostors are hauled over to the police.

VIEWS OF NARNI AND LAKE TRASIMENO (Feb. 18).—After witnessing several unusually interesting panoramic views of Narni, we are shown scenes along the River Nersa and the famous Lake Trasimeno. A visit to a pheasant preserve on the Isle of Polvese concludes the subject.

HIS REDEMPTION (Feb. 22).—Anne and Joseph are engaged to be married and are as devoted as any pair of lovers can be, until, one day, a friend informs Joseph that Arthur, the brother of his intended bride, is a bandit. Greatly shocked, Joseph relates what he has heard to his fiancée, and insists upon breaking off the engagement. Anne closely watches her brother's actions and, one day, secretly overhears him with one of his accomplices planning a robbery. At the appointed time the two bandits conceal themselves near the highway, and when a carriage rounds the corner, quickly spring out to halt it. But, to their astonishment, who should step out but Anne, who, tearing the disguise from her brother's face, rebukes him severely. Unable to endure the condemnation, Arthur seeks refuge in the hills, where later, in solitude and remorse, he is discovered by Joseph, to whom he makes a full confession of his crimes, and promises to lead an honest life in the future. Joseph forgives, and arm in arm they return home, where a complete reconciliation takes place, and love lives again.

ECLIPSE.

GETTING EVEN (Feb. 19).—Detective Slender is hopelessly seeking a clue to the Alice Cole murder mystery when his daughter, Maud, shows him a photograph which she took of a young man in the park that morning. Slender has a sudden inspiration: the photograph accords with the description of the alleged murderer. He therefore has it published as such with a well-written story, in the "Evening News."

The next morning the young man is greatly surprised to behold his picture in the paper, represented as that of the murderer, and remembering the incident in the park, resolves to take revenge. While the young lady was taking a snap-shot of him, his camera wasn't idle. He now sends her photograph to the newspaper with the story that Alice Cole could not have been murdered or he could not have obtained her picture in the park the day before.

The genial detective is greatly dismayed to see his daughter's picture under the name of the famous Alice Cole in the newspaper, and accompanied by Maud, immediately rushes over to the office to complain. There they meet the young man, however, and explanations are folllowed by a hearty laugh over the whole affair and the beginning of a friendship between the young people.

SNAKES AND FROGS (Feb. 19).—A remarkable nature study subject, showing how snakes are captured and the venom extracted; interesting specimens of Green Tree frogs conclude the film.

LUBIN.

TRAINING A TIGHTWAD (Feb. 17).—Mrs. Wad wants some money, but Wad reminds her that he gave her a dollar the week before, and goes to his office to fire the boy, because he finds a penholder in the waste paper basket. The Wad girls get the idea of having a rummage sale to get the money from their father, and win their mother's consent. The papers get hold of the story, and Wad rushes home to stop the sale. The bystanders prevent any action, and when he appeals to a policeman, the officer buys an old hat and tells Wad to chase himself. Wad goes to the station house, but gets thrown out. He then comes home to buy out his wife's business, which is offered for $5,000. The lesson lasts.

WILD MAN FOR A DAY (Feb. 17).—Two stranded actors being down and out, ask a carnival manager for work. He tells them he has no work, but he has a good scheme to make money. He says he has a large wild man's cage which is empty, but if one of them will blacken up and play the wild man and the other act as lecturer and barker, he will share the profits equally between the three. They accept and an argument arises as to who will be the wild man. Finally the short fellow says he will be wild man. They start in business and a large crowd comes to see the savage. The barker then says he has a scheme to double business; he will frame up an escape and cause the farmers for miles around to join in the chase. That night the wild man is let loose and given an hour's start. Then the barker rings the fire bell and tells the farmers that the wild man has escaped. He is liable to kill all of the women and children he meets. They form a posse and start out to hunt him. They see him two or three times in the moonlight, but he always eludes them. Finally, at an arranged place, he is captured by the barker and several of the show boys, who chain him down to the bottom of a wagon and stand guard over him. They bring him back, put extra chains on him and a large guard around the cage. Next day the farmers for miles around bring their families to see the savage they helped to catch last night. On the last night of the carnival the manager, wildman and the barker are busy counting their money and laughing when an old maid from the village peeps in through the curtain and sees them and hears them talking. She rushes away and pulls the fire bell, arouses the village and tells them what she just saw and how they had all been humbugged. They are all excited when the constable suggested to turn the hose on them. They run a line of hose over the tent, pull open the flap and play the hose on them, washing all the color from the wild man. Then they tear down the tents and chase the showmen out of the town.

THE ENGRAVER (Feb. 18).—Red Galvin is chief of a gang of counterfeiters, his headquarters being an old shack in the mining section of the West, where he and his men pose as prospectors. One of the gang, John Taylor, an expert engraver, who is in the last stages of tuberculosis, has almost completed the plate of a twenty-dollar gold certificate. His daughter, Madge, loathes her father's work. One day, when Galvin is particularly brutal to Taylor, a quarrel ensues, which causes Taylor's death. A strike is declared by the bank note engravers in a city several miles away, and Ralph Davis, an expert engraver, who is the sole support of his mother, is unable to secure employment. He places an advertisement in the local newspaper, which is seen by Galvin, and Davis receives an offer of steady work. Davis accepts and on his arrival at the shack is told at the point of a pistol to complete the work on the plate. He refuses and puts up a fight, but is overpowered and forced to obey. As the plate is nearing completion, it is necessary to secure a supply of sulphuric acid, and Galvin writes an order for the liquid, which he places in an envelope and gives it to Jose, a half-witted Mexican. At this moment the guard warns Galvin of the approach of a horseman and as Galvin leaves Davis seizes the opportunity to outwit him. With the assistance of Madge, he attracts the attention of the Mexican, takes the envelope from his pocket and hastily writing a note stating that "he is held captive by a gang of counterfeiters," he loosens the seal of the envelope, and slipping his note inside, reseals it and puts the envelope back into Jose's pocket. When the Mexican arrives at the general store and delivers the note, the proprietor notifies the sheriff and Jose is followed back to the shack. The lookout, however, discovers the approach of the sheriff and gives the alarm. Galvin locks Davis in another room and in the hurry to make a getaway, the oil stove is overturned, setting fire to the shack. Several of the sheriff's men rescue Davis and others pursue Galvin, who is shot and mortally wounded. Galvin, with his last breath, exonerates Davis.

ANNIE ROWLEY'S FORTUNE (Feb. 19).—Harry Waters, a detective in the employ of a New York agency, is assigned to the task of locating Annie Rowley, whose godmother in England has willed her a hundred thousand dollars. Before they left England the Rowley family had been mill workers, so the detective begins a search of mills in the cities. He locates Annie in Philadelphia, but conceives the idea of winning the girl's heart before telling of her good fortune, with the idea of gaining control of the money himself. His plans are well laid and he succeeds in impressing the girl, much to the sorrow of Jim Graham, her "poor but honest" sweetheart.

The Rowley family is a large one, but it doesn't daunt the detective. He takes them all automobiling and otherwise makes a "good fellow" of himself. In Bing street, where the Rowleys live, Waters becomes known as "Annie Rowley's dude." Jim Graham is naturally suspicious of Waters, and one day confronts him, asking his object in courting Annie. Waters declares that he is a rich man and intends to marry the girl. Jim realizes that he has no right to interfere if Annie wants to marry Waters, who has wealth to offer. Jim decides to give up the girl. But when Waters finally proposes, Annie finds that her heart really belongs to Jim and hesitates to become engaged, despite the urging of Waters and her mother. She says she wants time to think. That night when Waters leaves her house, he has to pass a corner, the hang-out of the neighborhood toughs. The toughs dislike "the dude" and pick a fight with him. Annie sees the fight from her doorstep, and rushes for assistance. She finds Jim and begs him for her sake, to save Waters from the gang. For her sake Jim goes to the rescue and is being beaten himself when the police arrive and arrest all hands. A cut over Jim's eyes is all Annie needs to know that she loves him. The prisoners are searched at the station house, papers are found on the detective which prove what he is and apprise Annie of her good fortune. Jim guesses she doesn't want him, now that she's rich, but she tells him she really loved him all the time and loves him more than ever now and needs a manager for the mill she's going to run.

THE UNKNOWN (Feb. 20).—Julio, an unknown peon in Spain, desiring to increase his value by studying English, is caught by the majordomo and abused. The young man takes exception to the abuse and strikes his overseer. Realizing the penalty, he runs home and determines to sail to America. He tells his parents and leaves. In the meantime, the gendarmes search but fail to find him. He arrives in Mexico, and from there overland to the United States. After crossing the line, while he is waiting to be passed by the immigration authorities and custom inspectors, he sees a child standing in the middle of a railroad track upon which a train is approaching rapidly. He drops his bundles and runs to the rescue of the child, catching him in his arms as he is struck by the engine and both are thrown to the ground. The child's sister comes in time to take her little brother up in her arms and finds him uninjured, but the unknown man is taken to the hospital, where he lives for some time. Prior to his recovery, Juanita had secured her father's permission to have him visit them, and after he leaves the hospital he goes to their home and is given employment, becoming the personal body servant of the child.

Juanita's sweetheart, Robert Tyler, returns from abroad after a long absence and is welcomed by her. The unknown witnesses this meeting and is heartbroken. Later Robert and Juanita are married and leave home. The unknown determines to return to Spain and his parents. He starts overland back to the coast, but en route he meets with an accident; he falls over a cliff where he is discovered by a cowboy, who reports the accident to a detachment of United States Cavalry. They go to the unknown's rescue and find that an injury to his head has caused him the loss of his voice. He is succored by them and we leave him in the hands of power and kindness.

ART AND HONOR (Feb. 21).—Arthur James, a young artist from the North, goes south to the home of J. W. Hawkins, a southern planter, to paint a portrait of the former's wife. James is treated hospitably by the planter and made to feel perfectly at home. After a few days, Hawkins goes away on a business trip, leaving the young painter to begin the portrait. James is delighted with the beauty of the place and with Grace. She is much younger than her husband, and for the first time in her life is enjoying the companionship of a man her own age.

The portrait is begun in the attic, which is the only place where James can find the proper light. An old-fashioned dress, with a low neck bodice, is

The Motor Driven Motiograph Equipment No. 1002-M

APPROVED BY

National Board of Fire Underwriters—Is the Best Projection Machine on Earth

We invite comparison with the heaviest advertised machine —You will find that liberality is a better salesman than paid space in journals.

You get more real and actual value in one $250.00 MOTIOGRAPH than in two machines of that price of another make.

Our quality is not to be compared with those cheap, heavily-advertised, "assembled" machines you have wasted good money on.

The most successful watch factory.

The most successful automobile factory.

The most successful Motion Picture Machine factory is that one which still does, and always did, make every part and screw in one factory and under the personal management of its own officers.

Beware of any "assembled" machine—Buy the machine that invites mechanical comparison, and yet projects the most perfect picture there is—that "painted on the wall" kind.

unearthed from an old trunk, and Grace daily puts it on for the sitting. Their constant companionship results in their falling in love without either of them realizing it.

On the planter's return he asks to see the portrait. His anger is aroused by the low neck dress and by a new look that he sees in his wife's eyes and he turns abruptly on James and accuses him of a breach of trust. James denies it so emphatically that Hawkins is convinced and apologizes. Grace realizes the true state of her feelings and goes to James to help her. He sends her away and all night fights his battle between love and honor. The next morning at dawn, before anyone is awake, he rides away alone.

VITAGRAPH.

A CORNER IN CROOKS (Feb. 17).—Two hoboes, Shorty and Sandy, arrive in town by local freight. They steal a newly-filled nursing bottle from a baby and start the kid bawling. The nurse girl comes to its assistance and discovers the cause of its distress. She notifies the town constable, and he and she and his assistants start in chase of the tramps. They are captured and brought before the chief of police. While he is listening to the complaint of the nurse girl and the witnesses, Sandy knocks the constable over the railing, and during the confusion, the scallywags escape. They hold a council of war and Sandy starts out on a foraging expedition. He secures some clothing and fresh bread, wrapped up in a newspaper. While they are eating the bread from the newspaper, their eyes light upon a notice offering a reward of fifty dollars for their arrest. Sandy has an idea. Shaving off his beard and donning the newly-acquired clothes, Sandy leaves Shorty sleeping and goes to the local chief of police, tells him he has information which will lead to the arrest of the tramps. He sends his constable to arrest the law-breakers and Shorty is apprehended and brought before his Honor. Sandy receives the reward and Shorty is fined ten dollars. Sandy, pretending to sympathize with the offender, pays his fine and Shorty is released.

JUST SHOW PEOPLE (Feb. 18).—The performance of "Mlle. Rose," the wife of "Piquet," the leading clown at the Hippodrome, is applauded by thousands. She is the sensation of the age, in her triple somersault from a trapeze platform at the top of the theater into a net below.

Mons. Le Bang, an acrobat, looks with covetous eyes upon her and he tries to win her love. He entices the clown to drink and gamble, to keep him away from his home, while he pays court to his wife. She is insensed at her husband and La Bang tries to poison her mind against him.

One night at the theater Le Bang tells her her husband is a drunkard and asks her to leave Piquet and live with him. She repulses him by striking him in the face. Piquet enters the dressing room at this moment, very much under the influence of liquor, and noticing his wife's agitation and Le Bang's attitude, is suspicious and denounces him. Le Bang resolves upon revenge. He cuts one of the guy ropes of the net she uses in her act, is detected by Piquet, and has the clown locked up in his dressing room accusing him of being fighting drunk. The sensational feature is due. Rosa is about to make her dive. Piquet smashes his way out of his room, rushes to the stage and warns her of her danger. She, thinking him intoxicated, does not heed him. Piquet climbs to the trapeze on which she is standing and prevents her from jumping. Le Bang, enraged, follows him. The two men struggle on the platform. In the conflict, Bang, by a misstep, plunges to the stage into the net, the severed guy-rope breaks and he is killed. Rosa throws her arms around Piquet and far above the astonished audience, they stand in love's embrace.

BEAU BRUMMEL (Feb. 19). — In the early part of the Nineteenth Century, Beau Brummell was the most talked-of person in all the world, the extreme of fashion, the personification of elegance and the most pretentious individual imaginable.

Helen, the daughter of Lord Ballarat, falls a victim to his charms, although she is warned by the Duchess of Devonshire, against him. Beau, not the least disconcerted, persists in his attentions to Helen and proposes to her. He is an intimate of the Prince of Wales and all the nobility of the period. They copy his style and ape his manners. Lord Devonshire and the Prince of Wales are very close friends, and when Beau Brummell insults the prince, the lord forbids Helen seeing Beau until he apologizes to the prince. Helen pleads with him to make amends to his highness, but he refuses, rather than disregard his own conceit or sacrifice his overbearing pride.

The prince does not fail to resent Beau Brummell's effrontery and through him, Beau's privileges and importance are very much lessened in swelldom. He indulges in all sorts of extravagances, irrespective of his means, and is soon reduced to social and financial ruin. Yet his pride is not at all disturbed, for he takes occasion again to snub the prince, whom he chances to meet. In desperation, Brummell endeavors to recoup his fortune with his few remaining crowns, by staking his all at cards and he loses.

He is now besieged by creditors and placed in a debtor's prison. Helen Ballarat, in sympathy, sends him, through her bankers, five hundred pounds, and he is released. With shattered mind, he retires into seclusion, and after five years of destitution he is rescued from poverty and the madhouse by his old friend Alvanley, who gives him a comfortable home where he passes his time in dim memories of the past.

MR. FORD'S TEMPER (Feb. 20).—My, but he has a terrible temper! Even on the return voyage of their honeymoon, Mr. Ford's temper is painfully apparent when he violently objects to being disturbed by the sailors. Again, when he has a difference with the taxi chauffeur in the settlement of his fare. He is naturally a gentleman, but his ungovernable temper makes him almost brutal. His young wife is almost driven to despair when Ford takes exception to the attention shown her at an evening reception which they are giving at their home. He flies into such a passion his behavior drives their friends in horror from the house.

One evening, his wife is cleaning a pair of gloves, and placing them on a pair of hand-forms, standing them in the window. The shade being down, the shadow of Mr. Ford can be seen wildly gesticulating, apparently striking his wife. A policeman passing the house sees his actions and when Mrs. Ford appears to fall upon the floor, sees the false hands in a supplicating attitude. He immediately summons other policemen and they try to break into the house.

Mr. Ford, hearing the banging on the door, rushes downstairs and violently protests against their intrusion. They point to the window and he rushes upstairs to his wife's room, followed by the policeman. When they see the harmless forms on the windowsill, they all indulge in a hearty laugh at the expense of the over-zealous officer. This turn of affairs brings Mr. Ford to a full realization of his prevailing fault. He solemnly promises his wife to mend his ways.

VIEWS OF IRELAND (Feb. 20).—There is but one Ireland, and those who have had the good fortune of having visited this interesting country can testify to many quaint, beautiful scenes which meet their astonished vision. The views presented on this film are the same magnificent scenes brought within the reach of all.

CINDERELLA'S SLIPPER (Feb. 21).—Surrounded by every indication of wealth, Alice Morton, the only child of an indulgent father, is courted by Jack Leigh. Being in moderate circumstances, Jack is too proud and conscientious to ask Alice to marry him and live in less pretentious conditions. Through unfortunate business transactions and a sudden slump in the market, Alice's father, not only loses his money, but, upon learning of his losses, is stricken with heart failure and dies, leaving Alice almost penniless. She is obliged to teach music, to earn a livelihood. Jack loses all trace of Alice just previous to her misfortune when he was compelled to go elsewhere in his business interests.

Their reunion comes about in a very singular way. Alice is invited to attend a reception, and in preparation, purchases a pair of dancing slippers at once of the city stores. On her way home with them she loses one of the slippers. Jack is now settled in the city, a successful business man, comes along and picks it up. Not knowing who the owner is, he takes it home with him. Alice does not wish to give up the evening's entertainment and wears one slipper and one of her walking shoes. She attends the dance and some of her more fortunate acquaintances who are jealous of her beauty, detect that Alice wears two different kinds of footwear. She is somewhat fussed and they ridicule her embarrassment. Jack Leigh, who has also been invited to the reception, is very much sought after by the girls. His escort happens to be a friend of Alice and she introduces her to Jack. They both recognize each other immediately. They are so pleased that they cannot hide their joy. Jack tells her about the episode of the slipper. She confesses that it belongs to her. He then takes the lost slipper from his back pocket, telling her he has carried it in the hope of some time finding its owner. She shows him her slippered foot and then the other with the walking shoe on it. Jack sees at once that the slipper he found and the one on her foot are exactly alike. He kneels down, removes her shoe and asks her to be his wife.

THE LOCKET (Feb. 22).—Intently talking to a friend in a street car, Mrs. Jenkins shows her a locket which she had just gotten from the jeweler which contains a photograph of herself. Continuing her conversation, she replaces, as she supposes, the locket in the side pocket of her coat, but instead of doing so, she inadvertently places it in the pocket of Mr. Bunny, who is sitting next to her. When he reaches home, his wife finds the locket. While he is sleeping on the lounge, she becomes so upset at this unexpected discovery, she angrily and hastily goes to her parent's home, leaving a note for her husband, telling him she refuses to live longer with so base a deceiver and he will now be free to give his attentions to the woman whose locket he carried in his pocket. On awakening, Bunny finds the note, and ignorant of its cause, thinks his wife crazy and calling her parents up on the telephone, tells them to humor her delusions until he reaches their home.

In the meantime, Mrs. Jenkins has discovered her loss and comes to the conclusion that Bunny, the man sitting next to her in the car, was a pickpocket, and stole the locket. She and her husband notify the police, but with no result. In the evening, she and her husband are on their way to the theater and meet Bunny on the street, hurriedly going to his mother-in-law's home in search of his wife. She recognizes him as the man who stole her locket, calls an officer and has him arrested. Bunny induces the officer to allow him to go to the rescue of his wife first and Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins go with them.

After reaching his mother-in-law's home, where he finds his wife, the whole matter is cleared up and Mrs. Bunny realizes how her hubby was made an innocent victim of Mrs. Jenkins' suspicion and her jealousy.

ESSANAY.

BOUND TO OCCUR (Feb. 18).—Mr. and Mrs. Carney are sublimely happy until Carney's father-in-law presents Mrs. Carney with a dog. The Carney household is turned into a veritable "lion's den." Mr. Carney leaves his home, goes to New York, joins a club, and lives there. Several months later Mr. Carney is presented with a telegram from his wife stating that he is the proud father of a son, and to come home immediately. The new father packs up his belongings and goes home. His wife meets him at the door and together they go to the bedroom where he brushes his wife aside, makes a rush for the cradle, throws the drapery to one side, and discovers that his new son is a pup. Whether Carney leaves home again or not is left to the imagination.

WHERE THE MOUNTAINS MEET (Feb. 19).—Dad Melton gives consent to the marriage of his daughter, Florence, to Ben Stapleton, with the understanding that Ben protect Florence and guard her with his life. Ben agrees. The two lovers leave Dad Melton and go to the neighboring town. A year later deserted, Florence returns to her father's humble home with a new born babe. Dad Melton swears vengeance, and starts out to find Stapleton and kill him. Stapleton is discovered with another woman and is shot. Sometime later at the trial, Dad Melton is requested to tell the jury why he shot Stapleton. Melton explains. He is discharged. Stapleton, now remorseful for his conduct, tells the judge that he will right the wrong. Florence and Ben are married. Dad Melton rejoices in the happy reunion.

TEACHING HICKVILLE TO SING (Feb. 20).—A fly-by-night theatrical troupe is stranded. Dolly Featherheels is left in the small vilage of Hickville without funds or friends. The constable of the town asks the young lady if he can be of any assistance to her. She explains matters to him. The officer takes her to Deacon Cogwell's house, where she is told to make her headquarters until she receives funds from the East.

During her stay the young fellows of the town become infatuated with fair Dolly. One, the village cut-up, suggests that Dolly form a singing school. This she does. The cut-up, Augustus Carney, commonly known to the "village-ites" as the "Shrimp," creates a furore at the first meeting. He is ejected. Later he annoys Miss Featherheels by serenading her with a flute beneath her window. He is captured by his rivals and locked in the woodshed. Dolly disappoints the "natives" by returning to New York with her sweetheart, who has come on to take her home. "Shrimp' is released from his prison and, not knowing of Dolly's departure, plays again beneath her window. He is surprised when a hand comes forth from under the window shade. He kisses it fondly. He is more than surprised when he discovers the owner of the hand is the old maid, Sue Simpkins. At this moment Shrimp's four rivals arrive on the scene. They make Shrimp promise to marry the old maid.

IDENTICAL IDENTITIES (Feb. 21).—Andrew and Bill, twins of different caliber, live in the same apartment. Andrew is of the goodly sort, while his brother is a full-fledged sport. Bill, while out with two or three friends, accidentally brushes against a building which has been freshly painted. Returning home he sends for a cleaner who comes and gets the suit. Andrew complains to his brother of a severe headache. A note is delivered to Andrew requesting that he call at his sweetheart's home to discuss arrangements with her father for the church fund benefit. Bill suggests telephoning that Andrew is too ill to attend. A better idea comes to him, however. He puts on his brother's suit, discards his cane and goes to his brother's sweetheart's home. He is requested to play a piece on the organ and shocks his new acquaintances who have taken him to be Andrew, by playing rag-time. In the meantime Bill's suit arrives at his apartment and Andrew dons it. The good brother is met on the street by several of Bill's friends who, not detecting the difference, insist that Andrew join them in a drink. Andrew does so and "Oh, what a headache." The two brothers return to their apartment, where they retire. They both dream of their experiences of that day. The two brothers are played by one man. The confusion that develops in the brothers impersonating each other is screamingly funny.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SHERIFF'S KID (Feb. 22).—Broncho Billy, having disturbed the laws of the state, is thrown into jail. The warden hand of the outlaw a cup of water and a piece of stale bread. The latter grabs the warden's hand, pulls it through the bars and threatens the former with a broken arm unless he unlocks the door. Broncho Billy, having gained his freedom, takes to the woods. The sheriff is notified of Broncho Billy's escape and goes after him with a deputy. He is surprised at hearing the fall of a body at the fact that Hargrave's daughter is married to his holster he rushes in the direction of the noise. He finds a child about five years old unconscious from a fall. He takes the little girl to her home and the mother thanks Broncho Billy. Broncho Billy returns to the woods. The sheriff discovers Broncho Billy in the underbrush, fires at him and shoots him in the wrist. Broncho then returns to the child's home where the mother bandages his wound and promises him protection. The sheriff returns to his home where he finds the child in bed suffering from the fall. Broncho Billy in the next room, trying to reach for a glass of water, accidentally knocks over the wash pan. This arouses the sheriff. He demands that his wife tell him who is in the room. She refuses. Broncho Billy, taking a shotgun and holding it up with one hand, enters the room and covers the sheriff. The sheriff's wife explains to her husband how Broncho Billy had helped the injured child. Broncho Billy backs out of the room into freedom.

SELIG.

TWO MEN AND A WOMAN (Feb. 17).—Raphael Salvator, one of artistic New York's youngest and most highly famed portrait painters, is commissioned by Banker Hargrave to paint the portrait of his daughter from a photograph. Salvator, unaware of the fact that Hargrve's daughter is married to his old fiend Conrad, falls passionately in love with the photograph. He puts his best work into the portrait and develops a masterpiece. The finished painting is sent by Hargrave as a present to his son-in-law and daughter. By coincidence, Salvator arranges to spend his vacation with his old friend Conrad, whose wife he has never met. Upon arrival at the Conrad's,' he meets Carrie, and the shock of her identity partially crazes him. He keeps secret his love for Conrad's wife until at last it overpowers him. Then in a wild frenzy of jealousy he destroys the painting, wrecks the Conrad home and slays the unconscious object of his misery—Carrie. He is apprehended in his work of destruction and killing by Conrad, and the two men grapple. During the struggle the frenzied men fall from the veranda into the lake below, and the tragedy ends with the rippling waters gradually quieting o'er the murky grave of two former friends.

THE PINK OPERA CLOAK (Feb. 18).—Ella Markham is left penniless and alone in the world through the death of her father. She is advised to seek work in Chicago and arrives in that big city with many misgivings but a stout heart. She secures employment as demonstrating model for a fashionable modiste. Laura Keene and her mother, ambitious social climbers, enter the shop in quest of an opera cloak. Ella displays and sells them an expensive pink garment. They ask her to deliver it at their home and Ella departs with the package. As she is leaving the Keene residence, Ella passes handsome John Foragan, who is calling on the Keene's. As Ella is departing from the house, Laura's young brother accidentally mashes a peach on the new opera cloak, causing a bad stain. He runs from the room to escape the wrath of his mother and sister. Ella is sent for and told that she had ruined the coat in delivering it. She denies this, but is forced to take the cloak back to her employer. The modiste refuses to believe Ella's story, and she is discharged. Young Foragan overhears the incident and, thoroughly disgusted, seeks out Ella and offers her a position as companion to his invalid sister. Later Ella and Foragan are married and the Keene's are placed in an embarrassing position, when they call to meet Foragan's wife for she is wearing the pink opera cloak.

THE EARLY BIRD (Feb. 19).—Huntington Morgan, a leading man "out of work," finds himself one day penniless and breakfastless. This is his lucky day, however, and fortune leads him straight to a wallet containing several hundred dollars in greenbacks. The wallet was dropped by footpads, who had held up a wealthy real estate man named Alesbire. In the wallet is Aleshire's address. Aleshire, however, has recently rented his town house to a spinster, Miss Hahaffy, and has moved to a suburb.

Overjoyed at his find, Morgan crosses the street toward a restaurant to stay the pangs of hunger. He is knocked down and rendered unconscious by a passing automobile. The owner of the car finds Aleshire's address in the wallet, concludes that the victim is the owner of the name, and forthwith transports him to the Aleshire town house. Miss Mahaffy is out. A maid, who has just been hired that day, allows the frightened car owner to deposit the injured actor in Miss Mahaffy's bed. Miss Mahaffy soon returns. Also Mr. Morgan awakes. He takes in the situation in a moment, and cleverly allows the flustered spinster to believe him to be Mr. Aleshire, whom she has never seen in person, having done business through his agent. The fun waxes fast and furious. Mr. Morgan's false pretenses are at last discovered, but he handles his discoverers so cleverly that he gets away with the roll of greenbacks after all.

NOBODY'S BOY (Feb, 20).—Little "Bobby," a ragged but good-hearted newsboy, is left an orphan by the death of his mother. Mrs. Lane, a rich society woman, loses her boy about the same time. She mourns the loss of her child and spends much of her time at his grave. One day, while at the cemetery, she meets "Bobby" who is crying over the grave of his mother. Mrs. Lane questions the child, learns his story, and adopts him. "Bobby" becomes a model child, but one day, chancing to meet some other boys in play, he falls from grace by soiling his new clothes. Mrs. Lane reprimands him and sends him to his room. "Bobby" misunderstands the motive and decides to run away. He sneaks out of the house and goes to the grave of his mother. There he finds his foster-mother, Mrs. Lane, in the act of placing flowers on his own mother's grave. Unseen by her, the child hurries home and resolves to be the bestest boy in all the world thereafter.

THE YOSEMITE VALLEY IN WINTER (Feb. 20).—A unique travel picture showing the beauties of California's fairyland.

RANGE LAW (Feb. 21).—Ted, the foreman of "The Diamond S. Ranch" is in love with Dora, Dad's daughter. Tafe is the leader of a band of desperate characters that have been terrifying the neighborhood for some time. He sees Dora and immediately decides to try and make an impression upon her. Tafe and his friends apply for work at the ranch, but Ted doesn't like their looks, and refuses to employ them. "Dad," however, overrules Ted's objections and sets them to work. Soon after this, Tafe insults Dora. Ted hears of it and after roughly handling their leader, he discharges the entire band. Tafe and his roughs steal a herd of unbroken range horses from the ranch, in an effort to wreak revenge upon the foreman. Ted apprehends the thieves and gives chase. During the pursuit the outlaws become hard pressed and are forced to drive the entire herd at break-neck speed over the plains and foothills. They are eventually captured, and pay the penalty for their misdeeds, while Ted is rewarded by the hand of Dora.

KALEM.

THE BUCKSKIN COAT (Feb. 10).—Joe, a dissolute settler, comes to the little church where Ed and Nell are being married. He realizes that Ed has won a prize which he has lost through his profligate habits. He tramps through the woods until he reaches the Indian camp. The unhappy man casts his lot with the Indians. He spurns the love of red Wing and assumes a mantel of impregnable silence.

One day Joe passes the cabin where Ed and Nell have their home. The renegade watches the young woman and determines upon revenge. A few days later, while Ed is at work in the woods, the renegade sees the young settler's buckskin coat on the ground. He appropriates the coat, and after mutilating it with his knife, takes it to the cabin, where he informs Nell that her husband has been injured. Through this subterfuge Nell is led to the Indian camp, where Joe disillusions her and declares that she will never return to her husband.

Red Wing hastens to the village and informs Ed, who secures a number of settlers and succeeds in liberating his wife.

THE BELLE OF NORTH WALES (Feb. 12).—Gladys and Owen plight their troth and begin to make their plans for the future. Owen, proud of his conquest of "The Belle of North Wales," finds he has an added incentive to reach the goal toward which he has been striving—the ownership of a small farm and a happy home.

One morning the Hon. Percy Morander arrives at the crossroads and, asking for refreshments, is served by Gladys. Morander invites her to go for a spin in his motor. Gladys gives little heed to what Owen may think and she enjoys the novelty of a ride in Morander's car. Owen sees the couple and is broken-hearted. He comes to Gladys, charges her with being unfaithful and in the resultant quarrel his ring is returned to him. A party of ruffians, learning of Morander's presence in the vicinity, plan to attack and rob him. Owen overhears a chance remark which informs him of Morander's impending danger. The young farmer has a momentary struggle with his conscience and finally subduing all thought of revenge he renders timely assistance. Morander realizes that he has been extremely selfish. He brings the sweethearts together and wishing them good luck, continues his journey.

THE GAME WARDEN (Feb. 14).—In his free and easy life which rarely brings him in touch with the outside world, Heck Thompson is of the opinion that he need not observe any law which conflicts with his viewpoint. The young mountaineer therefore takes it as a personal insult when the Game Warden arrives and posts a notice in a public place.

Heck tears down the notice and further demonstrates his contempt by disregarding the regulations and hunting as he sees fit. His conduct does not escape the attention of the officer who arrests the young man and conducts him to jail. Seeing that he has no defense, Heck pays his fine and sets forth to wreak vengeance on the Game Warden. Heck's sweetheart, Alice, attempts to dissuade him and meeting with no success, she goes out to warn the officer. She is just in time to assist the Game Warden when he meets with an accident in the mountains, breaking his leg, and assists him to her cabin.

The cabin catches fire and all escape, save the Game Warden. Heck returns from his uncessful mission, meets the distracted family and is told of the officer's peril. The mountaineer's finer instinct asserts itself and running into the burning building, he drags the Game Warden to safety. Heck eventually realizes that the Game Warden makes a better friend than an enemy and he develops a wholesome respect for the law.

TRIXIE AND THE PRESS AGENT (Feb. 14).—Trixie Blossom, a popular actress, has an efficient press agent who wishes to secure some free publicity for the young woman. He therefore prepares an article, stating that she has been robbed of her jewels and then sets forth to effect the burglary himself. To his consternation he discovers that two real burglars have been there first. Nothing daunted, the press agent recovers the jewels, captures the burglars and then proceeds to capitalize on the affair.

A LIFE IN THE BALANCE (Feb. 15).—Edward is unable to withstand the lure of the gaming table and squanders his money. He is a near relative of Florette, a wealthy and charming young lady, and Edward knows that in the event of her death he will come into her estate. At the lawn party given in celebration of Florette's birthday, one of the young ladies sprains her ankle and Dr. Albers is summoned. Dr. Albers renders skilled assistance and becomes a warm friend of the hostess.

Sometime later Edward receives word that Florette is quite ill. A dastardly scheme occurs to him and he immediately calls upon Fealy, an unscrupulous doctor noted for malpractice. To him he confides his plan and it is agreed that Fealy shall be presented to Florette and prevent her recovery. Edward introduces Fealy to his cousin whose insinuating manners appeal to the invalid girl and she accepts the proffered services. Florette grows perceptibly weaker and the miserable conspiracy is in a fair way to succeed when the very vice in which Edward indulges becomes the means of changing the situation. The gambling room visited by Edward is raided and a fierce struggle between the officers of the law and the gamesters takes place. Edward escapes from the building, badly injured, only to fall in the path of an automobile driven by Dr. Albers who is on his way to visit a patient. The subsequent kindness which Dr. Albers exercises toward Edward brings the young man to his senses and makes him conscious of the enormity of his conspiracy against his cousin. When Dr. Albers is told of the plot he takes charge of Florette's treatment, restores her health and brings about the conviction of the malpractitioner.

THE PERIL OF THE DANCE HALL (Feb. 17).—After the death of his wife Pablo Florenti, an Italian, takes his little daughter, Pepita, and embarks for America, where he secures employment as a common laborer. Reaching young womanhood, Pepita becomes a typical American girl and is a source of joy to her father. One morning the old man meets with an accident while on his way to work and is assisted to his home by Ralph, a young motor-cyclist policeman. Ralph thus makes the acquaintance of Pepita. Pepita has refused several invitations to visit a public dance hall, knowing her father's objections. Her acquaintance with the honest police officer causes her to temporarily forget the affair, but there comes a day when her girl friends prevail upon her to accompany them to the hall. That night she informs her father of her purpose, and when he protests she upbraids him and flounces from the room.

As the evening progresses, Pablo is unable to shake off his apprehensions, and he makes his way to the dance hall. When the odd character appears in the hall he is made the subject of derision and his anxious inquiries for Pepita are met with ridicule. Suddenly he hears a voice and breaking away from his tormentors he seizes his daughter. The place is suddenly clothed in darkness, when the officers of the law arrive to close the hall. Shots are fired, only the flashes indicating the turmoil. When the lights are turned on it is found that Pablo is seriously wounded.

When, later, Pepita realizes the consequences of her conduct, she makes her old father happy by promising never to go to such a place again, and still happier by pledging her troth to the young policeman.

PANIC DAYS IN WALL STREET (Feb. 19).—Edna Harding acts as secretary to her father, a Wall Street broker. On a falling market, Harding sustains losses which cripple him financially, but the stock manipulation which crushes him brings a fortune to Thomas Gregg, a young broker. Edna finds it necessary to secure employment, and as she has developed a lodged hate for Gregg, whom she has never seen and with whom she has no intimate acquaintance, she conceives a bold idea when the young broker advertises for a stenographer. Edna obtains the position and planning a system of signals with a friendly broker whose window faces hers, she proceeds to give out bits of information which she gains in her new office.

As time progresses, Edna is brought to a realization of the fact that Gregg is not such a bad fellow after all. She notices his charitableness and consideration for unfortunate ones. Much to her distress, Edna discovers that she is falling in love with her kind-hearted employer, but she does not abandon her determination to ruin the man who wrecked her father's business. At an important meeting, Edna learns of impending transactions and betrays her employer. When the day of action arrives, Gregg's rivals in full control of affairs completely baffle the young man, who is unable to cope with them.

Just as Gregg is about to be crushed, he is visited by an old veteran to whom he has extended an act of kindness and who furnishes the necessary capital to thwart the operations of the rival organization. Gregg rushes to the floor, stems the tide and returns to his office victorious. Unknown to Edna he has made an investment in her name which enables her to share in the profits and when she humbly confesses her duplicity he proposes a life partnership and is accepted.

THE COLD STORAGE EGG (Feb. 21).—Eva longs for a lover and discovers to her consternation that no likely suitors ever visit the egg packing establishment, where she is employed. Unable to curb her romantic spirit she one day places a small photograph of herself on an egg, together with her name and address, and secretly packs it.

Several years pass. Jones labors assiduously at the village store and comes to the conclusion that it is time he had a helpmate. While he is thus soliloquizing, he unpacks a crate of eggs which has recently been delivered from cold storage and is captivated by the smiling face of Eva. Jones arranges with his employer to take a vacation. Jones reaches the address and, behold, the ideal of his dreams welcomes him at the door and bids him enter. But visions of romance are rudely shattered when he sees two small children playing on the floor. The call is a short one. Jones says things on the way home and breaks the egg with fitting ceremony. He decides that in the bestowal of faith, eggs are to be avoided together with princes.

ODD OCCUPATIONS IN NEW YORK (Feb. 21).—In the great metropolis of New York there are thousands of people making a living by unusual occupations, which are seldom thought of by their busy brothers who are engaged in better known pursuits. In this production the spectator will be able to spend a few moments with the wood butcher; the line-up man; the window demonstrator; the umbrella-mender; the bird hospital; the steeple-jack; the man who warns pedestrians on Death Avenue and many other interesting characters.

THE REDEMPTION (2 reels—Special—Feb. 21).—Harrison Grey, an eminent sociologist, advocates the theory that a criminal is only a criminal because he has not had proper opportunities to develop an honest character. One of Grey's newspaper articles comes to the notice of Edward Graham, a friend of the sociologist. Graham, skeptical to the extent of being cynical, laughs at Grey's theories and informs his friend that they cannot be proven.

The two men walk into a park to continue the discussion. "Red" Ellis and Mag Milford, two members of the underworld, pass through the park and attract the attention of Graham. The latter, recognizing the character of the passerby, tells his companion that the way has opened for him to test his theory. "Call this young fellow over, extend him an act of kindness and you will soon see that you have not only lost your time, but have opened the way for this crook to take advantage of you." Grey accepts the challenge and makes Ellis' acquaintance. He gives the young fellow money and invites him to call.

Ellis joins his friends and tells them of the affair. The money is soon spent and he decides to accept the invitation to call at the Grey residence, thinking he will have an opportunity to ply his trade. The hospitality of the sociologist completely disarms Ellis for a time, but when the occasion presents itself, the crook pockets a purse which Grey has purposely left on the table as a temptation.

When he reaches the street Ellis is troubled by a guilty conscience for the first time in his life but he is not strong enough to follow its dictates. At a street corner, he sees a Salvation Army meeting. Heretofore, he has scoffed at the earnest mission workers, but now something within causes him to stop and listen. He overhears the testimony of a happy man who has given up his evil ways and the message is not lost. Ellis retraces his steps and, full of remorse, restores the purse to its owner. "You are mine!" exclaims Grey. "Never again will you return to your old life."

Ellis is taken into the Grey household and a promising position is secured for him. Through his industry, he rapidly progresses and becomes a respected member of society. One day, while on his way to work, Ellis is accosted by two of his old companions, Mag and Shifty. They invite him to visit the old meeting place and are disgusted when he refuses.

Ellis resolves to save Mag, whom he has long admired. He therefore visits the dancehall and in a moment of weakness is tempted to take a drink. Losing control of himself, he tells the gang of a necklace, which he has recently seen in the Grey residence and they induce him to secure it. Ellis returns home and finds the jewels. Just as he is about to join the gang he awakens to the mistake he is making and buries his face in shame. Mag, who has been suspicious, looks through the window and learns that Ellis has overcome the temptation. The woman creeps into the room and, unseen by Ellis, makes away with the necklace. The noise of her departure is heard by Grey, who is entertaining Graham in the parlor. Grey and his guest come into the room, where they discover the loss of the jewels and the compromising attitude of Ellis. The young man is horrified when he sees that the gang has outwitted him. He pleads his innocence and while Graham smiles with cynical satisfaction, Grey declares that he still has faith in the unfortunate man. Anxious to free himself from suspicion, Ellis states that he will secure the necklace and return with it in half an hour. Despite the protests of Graham, Grey permits Ellis to depart.

The young man finds it no easy matter to keep his word. Mag refuses to give up the jewels and when he finally secures them he is attacked by the gang. After a desperate struggle Ellis gains his freedom and, with the necklace tightly clutched in his hand, he bursts into Grey's parlor. The time has almost expired, but the sociologist's faith has never wavered. Graham is obliged to acknowledge that Grey's theory has been given a practical demonstration and cordially shakes hands with Ellis.

THE MOUNTAIN WITCH (Feb. 22).—Edwin Revell, a young clergyman, receives the appointment as minister at the Church of the Village of Fairbrook. In the letter which advises the young man of his appointment, it is pointed out to him that—owing to the old age and feebleness of his predecessor—a part of the congregation has become somewhat indifferent and negligent. The new minister, however, is received at his new post with kindness. He finds particular friends in Jacob Drake, a deacon and magistrate in Fairbrook and in his daughter, Christine, who at once becomes impressed with the strong personality of the young clergyman.

Revell finds a certain defiant attitude among the church members who have grown into neglect, but a particularly difficult problem presents itself for the new minister in the case of Garrie, The latter, a recluse, is a middle-aged peasant woman whom the villagers dislike and, because of her peculiarities and reticence, call "The Mountain Witch." Through an unusual chain of circumstances Revell gains for Garrie the respect of the community and pacifies a certain ignorant family which has been led to believe that Garrie is in league with evil spirits.

MOLLY'S MISTAKE (Feb. 27).—Sam, a young fisherman, and his wife, Molly, lead a simple, happy life on a little fishing island. One day a yacht anchors off the island and a party of city folks land for luncheon. Molly wanders toward the group and Jack, one of the party, is smitten with her beauty. Unconsciously she is attracted by his clean-cut city appearance and returns home thinking of him.

The party needing water, Jack and several others call upon Sam. Sam introduces them to Molly, who directs them to the nearest spring. Returning from the spring, Jack calls upon Molly and escorts her to the luncheon party. They offer her champagne, which she at first refuses, but after much persuasion, tastes. Then Jack, by flattery and caresses, induces her to accompany them back to the city. But hardly are they aboard the yacht when Jack forces his kisses upon Molly, who then divines his evil intent.

Meanwhile Sam has returned broken-hearted to find his wife gone. But his sorrow is not of long duration, for Molly has demanded her release and returns that evening, takes up her duty of mending Sam's fishing nets, and so he finds her—truly repentent for her mistake and still his loving wife.

EDISON.

THE OLD MONK'S TALE (Feb. 15).—The tale deals with a dark-eyed beauty of Spanish blood who had won heart after heart and has put them all aside because they did not bring her a lap full of jewels. A stranger fell under her spell and although she knew that he had won her heart yet she would not surrender herself until he had secured the jewels she so long sought.

Another fair Senorita, who was jealous of the attentions that the gallant paid to the coquette one day, creeping close to the stranger, told him where he could get the jewels his sweetheart longed for.

He at first laughed at the idea, but the seed of evil had been planted and something slowly crept into his soul, and going out into the night he wended his way to the mission by the sea and took the jewels that decorated the neck of the Madonna. Then he fell at the feet of his loved one and tossed into her lap the jewels, but before his eyes there was a haunted dread.

At a ball given by the Governor there was laughter and gaiety. The coquette was in all her glory; ropes of pearls hung from her neck and the stranger stood pale and calm beside her. Suddenly above the joy and mirth a cry sounded and the voice of a certain priest was heard. His voice rang out in denunciation of a crime, a theft, a desecration of their altars. The place was in a tumult and threats of vengeance were in the air. Hot words, a struggle and the guilty lovers escaped through a window. Out along the path to the sea they went. A moment's pause upon the brink and a shot rang out which ended the life of the guilty lover. The heartbreaker saw the body of her lover sink into the waves and a moment later she leaped after him. So ends the tale told by the old monk at the mission by the sea.

CONFIDENCE (Feb. 17).—The president of a suburban bank refuses a loan asked by one of the citizens of the place and "to get square" the man circulates a rumor that the bank is not in safe financial condition. The plan is so successful that a run is started in spite of the president's assurances and knowledge of his solvency. A young clerk in the bank, anxious to do something which will make the president favor his suit for the latter's daughter, hits on a plan to restore public confidence.

With the girl he goes to an old nail mill and fills the empty coin bags from the bank with nails. Just as the last money is being taken from the vaults and the depositors are frantic, they see the youth and girl drive up guarding with shot guns an express wagon apparently loaded with bags of bullion. Confidence is restored by the sight of so much ready money and, of course, the president feels enough of the same quality to indorse the young man's aspirations cordially.

HIS ENEMY (Feb. 18).—George Trent is the son of a widowed mother. He is engaged to marry Sylvia Bennett, and is a cock-sure egoist. An old clergyman, his mother's friend, gets him a chance with a prosperous architect in a large city, but his faults get him into a nest of trouble. He is careless with his work, unwilling to take advice and consequently his downfall is brought about. At the same time Sylvia gives him the mitten because he has displayed before her a bad trait.

He has seen part of a letter from his employer to the Rev. Mr. Roberts in which the assertion is made that "he has a bad enemy." He goes to the clergyman and demands to know who his enemy is, for he has concluded that his downfall is due to this mysterious person, and in answer the clergyman leads him to a mirror. To his surprise and consternation he learns that his enemy is none other than himself.

The result of realization is regeneration. His entire attitude changes and he is given another chance with his old employer. At the end of the picture we see that he has learned his lesson well.

AFTER THE WELSH RABBIT (Feb. 19).—A prince among good fellows is John Northrup, who loves his club, but never forgets he has a home and a fond, loving wife. He keeps good hours notwithstanding the jibes and jests of his fellow club members. One night, he is pleased to find his wife preparing a Welsh rabbit for him. After finishing the rabbit he sinks into the old arm chair at the fire place to smoke a cigar and soon doses off to sleep and has a most remarkable dream.

He sees himself about to die, supposedly of having over indulged in Welsh rabbit. The doctor at the bedside pronounces his case beyond hope; he bids his wife and friends goodbye and dies. His spirit is transported Heavenward by an angel, who guides him to the golden gates of Heaven. Here he meets unexpected obstacles, and plead as he will, he fails utterly in gaining admission. Finally in despair he inquires for Tom, Dick and Harry, who were his pals at the club and learns that they have been sent to the world of darkness, so sadly he begins his journey on the downward path and finally reaches the domain of his Satanic majesty, who gives him a royal welcome and bids him enter, assuring him that his friends Tom, Dick and Harry are inside.

Upon reaching the depths below he finds it uncomfortably hot, owing to the fact that the Satanic stokers are working overtime. He meets his friends, Tom, Dick and Harry and a devilish bartender serves them with fiery drinks after which they initiate him by roasting his feet in a blazing furnace. At that moment he is awakened from his nightmare and is overjoyed to find himself in his own room, so close to the grate fire that his slippers are scorching. At that moment he espies his wife, who loks askance at her chuckling hubby. Describing his dream, she laughs heartily as he declares no more Welsh rabbit at midnight for him.

THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE (Feb. 21).—This is a story of more than common interest showing where the "boss" of a small sized city, not knowing whom to put up for mayor, falls on the idea of putting in Blanchard, the reform man, and run his chance of getting some power over him. The chance soon comes; too much politics and too little attention to business cause Blanchard to run short of working capital and as the bank refuses to take any more of his paper, he turns for advice from the "boss." Realizing the power in holding some of Blanchard's paper, the "boss" loans the amount on a ninety day note. Next we see him trying to force him to turn a paving contract his way with the threat of publishing his note broadcast. Blanchard refuses and tries to get back the note which is not yet due. This is all overheard by his old bookkeeper, who decides to try to turn the tables by getting some power over the "boss."

He goes to the latter's office and discovers a torn letter in the waste basket. A fragment shows the words "paving contract." This excites interest in the old man and gathering all the fragments he pastes them together. These he gives to the mayor's wife. She comes to the rescue and forces the "boss" to return the note. In the meantime Blanchard has carried the matter to the committee chamber and, through the force of public opinion behind him, has defeated the iniquitous measure.

THE MINISTER'S TEMPTATION (Feb. 22).—Rev. Henry Reyburn, a minister in a small town, with the usual accompaniment of an insufficient salary, is informed by his family doctor that an operation is absolutely necessary to save the life of his little girl, which must be performed by a noted specialist and will cost five hundred dollars.

The minister applies to his wealthiest parishioner for a loan of the amount, but is refused. At this critical juncture the minister receives a letter from a wealthy lady, a former parishioner, enclosing a check for five hundred dollars for the benefit of his needy parishioners, according to his best judgment. We now see the terrible temptation to use the money to pay for the operation in spite of the fact that his conscience tells him it would be the same as theft. Alone in his study, the minister fights the battle between his conscience and a father's love for his only child. As he prays in anguish for Divine guidance he sees a vision of the Saviour in the Garden of Gethsemane as He, also in his crucial hour, prays "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me." He sees the chalice as it appears before the Saviour and in his vision it appears to fade into the face of his suffering child. This decides him to use the money and take the consequences.

The operation is performed, and is successful in restoring the little one to health; but the minister's conscience gives him no rest and he tells his wife the story of how he used the check and that he must tell his congregation all and then resign his pastorate.

He makes a public confession after the Sunday services which rouses sympathy of his congregation, especially the wealthy Mr. Wakefield, who publicly accuses himself for refusing the loan and volunteers to give the amount to charity and the minister is absolved from blame and his self-respect restored.

BIOGRAPH.

THERE WERE HOBOES THREE (Feb. 20).—Three hoboes see an "ad" in the newspaper in which it is stated that there are positions open at the Mountain Inn for two young men—one to act as a life saver on the lake in the mountains, the other as a guide. They apply and two land the jobs, but the third hobo—the Patsy of the trio—gets left, until, after a deal of persausion, the hotel manager engages him to play the part of an echo in the hills. The poor echo's lot is a dull one until chance makes him the hero of the party.

AN UP-TO-DATE LOCHINVAR (Feb. 20).—She has three suitors—one her father favors, the second is her mother's choice, but the third is the boy for Dora. Her father, seeing how determined she is in favor of the third, gives the young man a chance to gain his consent by suggesting that he go out and make good. This is agreed upon and the young man goes to a neighboring town to improve his fortune. Things go badly—he is broke and stranded. This is as papa expected, and to give his daughter once more, and the last chance, he promises her that her favorite may have her if he comes to claim her by noon the next day. He gets there all right, and in such a novel way that papa is forced to admit that he is clever.

DRINK'S LURE (Feb. 17).—Jim Anderson was more weak than intenaionally bad. Salvation Anne, however, at last aroused his pride by her constant kindness to his family. He promised to stand by the good, but temptation proved too much for him. He left his wife in the care of the Salvation Army, but a force of circumstances brought them together again, placing him out of temptation's reach.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 7—1913 (Feb. 10).—Laconia, Wash.—The tremendous falls of snow in the Cascade Mountains have seriously interfered with the railroads.

Lowenburg, Germany.—Because of floods the people here are being driven from their homes.

New York, N. Y.—A seven car local on the Third Avenue elevated crashes into another train, killing one and injuring twelve. The passengers are compelled to climb from the windows to escape.

Partenkirchen, Bavaria.—The sons of the German Crown Prince are here spending their midwinter rest from their studies.

Charlestown, Mass. — The old U. S. Frigate Wabash, once the pride of the American Navy and now a receiving ship at the Navy Yard here, has been sold for the old iron she contains. The frigate will be burned.

A DRAMA IN THE AIR (2 reels—Feb. 10).—Ray Newell and Paul Van Arsdale, aviators, are in love with Betty Chapman. Betty announces that she will accept the winner of a race soon to be held. Newell, fearful lest he lose the prize, disables Van Arsdale's machine.

During the race, Van Arsdale's machine, slightly in the lead, suddenly drops to the ground and he is buried under the wreckage.

Newell's treachery is unearthed in a clever manner by Van Arsdale's friend Harry Wilson. Later Betty and her father visit Van Arsdale in the hospital and Betty naively informs him that he has won her heart, if not the race.

THE PRODIGAL BROTHER (Feb. 19).—Fairfax Browning is the black sheep of a wealthy and respected family. At his sister's engagement banquet he receives a blackmailing letter from a money-lender. He is excused by the guests, but not without his sister being aware that he is in trouble. Browning leaves hurriedly to compromise with the Shylock and is followed by his sister. Her prospective husband, Paul Pritchard, sees her leaving the house and follows. The money-lender has a note of Browning's and by the latter's attempt to take it by force, a revolver is accidentally discharged and the money-lender wounded. At the sound of the shot Browning makes his escape; his sister flees, but a locket is torn from her throat and falls to the floor, and Paul forces an entrance to find himself standing over the unconscious form of the money-lender. The police find the dying man, the locket, and Paul, and the latter, to save the name of his sweetheart, declares himself guilty. The brave sacrifice has a far-reaching effect, for not only does it prove to Miss Browning the depth of Paul's love for This is the story of a servant who dons her mis- her, but it frees him eventually and reforms the prodigal brother.

MAGGIE TRIES SOCIETY LIFE (Feb. 20).—tress' fashionable apparel and goes promenading. She meets a young and handsome automobilist, who, after he leaves her home, asks to call again. After he has gone Maggie discovers that she has lost her mistress' mesh bag. The next morning the young man, wishing to return the bag, and unaware of Maggie's masquerading, sends a note to Mrs. Swallers, asking if she will receive him and to wave from the window if she will. Mr. Swallers gets the note, waves, and raves when he gets the young man indoors, accusing his perfectly innocent wife of flirting, until Maggie enters the scene and claims the young man as her sweetheart.

HIS DATE WITH GWENDOLINE (Feb. 22).—Harry has a date with Gwendoline to meet her at two o'clock in front of a department store. He kept his appointment, but a sale of gloves kept Gwendoline from meeting him. While Harry is waiting he is arrested for loitering and thrown into a cell, where he becomes the boon companion to the happy possessor of a dreadful thirst. This latter gentleman makes life miserable for Harry until he is again summoned to the bar and allowed to keep his belated appointment with Gwendoline, who is at the police court to recover a pocketbook which was stolen from her at the department store.

BORNEO POTTERY (Feb. 14).—In Borneo one of the chief occupations of the natives is the making of pottery. The crudity of the tools they use for the beautiful earthenware for which they are noted will be an entertaining surprise to everyone.

LOVE (Feb. 18).—A wealthy and elderly widower finds that he is in love with his beautiful young ward and that the girl is in love with a handsome young soldier. The elder man does not give up the struggle immediately, but after he is saved from death by the soldier he realizes that there is no hope for him and that youth will love youth.

THE GREAT CENTIPEDE (Feb. 21).—The centipede is a well-known venomous and vicious insect which derives its name from the number of its legs. It is the terror of all other insects, being capable of paralyzing them immediately they come in its path. Its bite is poisonous to human beings so that, although it is not a good thing to meet personally, a study of its nature on the screen is profitable and entertaining.

FLAMES RAGE

The theater was crowded, when a film caught fire suddenly. It is supposed that the operator stopped the film or ran it too slowly and the heat set fire to it. Suddenly there was a flash, the pictures stopped and a small blaze appeared in the operator's box, above the front entrance.

OPERATOR IS BURNED

Meanwhile Frank Starks, the operator, was waging a losing fight in an effort to extinguish the blaze. He used hand fire extinguishers, but just when the fire seemed almost conquered, other films caught and soon the whole box was roaring. The operator fled after he had been burned severely about the hands. No one else was injured.

The blaze was extinguished finally by the fire department. The loss will exceed $1,000. Four films, ranging in value from $100 to $200, and two machines, valued at $175 each, were destroyed.

THAT OTHER GIRL (Feb. 23).—Chester and Harold are admirers of Pearl. She favors Chester. He is visiting her one day and is just about to leave, when Harold arrives. Chester drops a letter out of his pocket and Harold sees it. The letter mentions a certain Belle Archer, and Harold leaves it where Pearl is sure to see it. This she does and immediately becomes angry at Chester. He calls again but she telephones Harold while he is there and Chester leaves in a fury. The next day Chester is on his way to the armory with his gun. He meets Harold and immediately chases him. Harold is afraid that he will be shot and rushes home. Chester, meanwhile, cannot understand Pearl's actions and determines to call on her again. He does so, and demanding an explanation, Pearl shows him the letter that she found. He laughs and shows her another letter, which explains that Belle Archer is a race horse that he was backing and that she had won her race. Pearl immediately comprehends and she and Chester renew old ties, leaving Harold out of all consideration.

SCHULTZ'S LOTTERY -TICKET (Feb. 23).—Schultz is an artist. He purchases a lottery ticket from his friend, Holtz. This he puts in his coat. Mrs. Schultz decides to buy her husband a new coat for his birthday. This she does and gives the old one to a dealer in old clothes who passed the door. Schultz's friend informs him that his ticket has won the prize of $5,000. Schultz immediately takes his friends and proceeds to celebrate. Upon arriving home, ten minutes after his wife has given his coat away, he begins to look for the ticket but cannot find it. His wife explains and he immediately sets out to find the man with his coat. After numerous false clues he runs across the man and the man runs away. He throws the coat over a fence when he sees that he cannot escape and Schultz gets hold of it just as some boys were throwing it onto a bonfire. He saves the coat and is pleased to find the precious ticket safe. He rushes home and is mortified when his wife informs him that his friend had again called and left a note explaining that the ticket was a counterfeit and that Schultz's hopes were all in vain.

BILLY'S STRATEGY (Feb. 18).—Billy and his sweetheart have had a little quarrel, and just to make him jealous, she accepts the attentions of another suitor. When she thinks she has punished Billy enough, she decides to break her engagement with Billy's rival, and to again accept Billy's attentions. But before doing so she requests Billy's rival to return to her the letters that she had written to him during their short courtship, which he absolutely refuses to do. He informs her that he is going to Europe, and that when he returns he will amuse the boys at the club with the letters. In desperation she informs Billy of his rival's intention, and informs him that she cannot accept his offer of marriage while his rival retains those letters.

On Billy learning that his rival, whom he has never met, is about to sail for Europe, he decides to burglarize the house and get his sweetheart's letters. But, unfortunately for Billy, his rival misses the boat and returns in time to catch Bill robbing the house. Not knowing Billy, and thinking that he is a burglar, the rival 'phones for the police. He then confronts Billy, who in turn thinks the rival has gone to Europe, mistakes him for a burglar, and when the police arrive Billy has him arrested; but as they are taking him away, the butler, whom Billy has robbed of the keys so that he could enter the house, arrives with a policeman and identifies the rightful owner. They then return to the house to arrest Billy, who succeeds in getting out of the house with the much coveted letters. He returns them to his sweetheart, who then accepts his proposal.

BISON.

THE SONG OF THE TELEGRAPH (2 parts—Feb. 16).—Lieut. Richards is in charge of the engineering corps which is running the telegraph line across the desert. Many of the Indians have never seen the poles and the wires before and are afraid of the "strings which sing." Little Mona is not afraid, but is very curious and wonders what weird song the wires sing. She tiptoes cautiously to the pole, puts her ear against it and listens entranced at the musical hum. Lieut. Richards watches her with cynical amusement. He accosts her. She is much interested in the good looking, kind white man. He sees her again and again and amuses himself with her artlessness. She, poor child, falls in love with him and gives him a pretty string of beads. Her head and heart are so full of this stranger that she no longer listens to the young brave, Choco, and he grows suspicious and watches.

A dispatch is sent to Richards from headquarters, telling him to use every precaution to avoid trouble with the unrestful Indians. He warns his men. Richards meets Mona near a telegraph pole and takes her in his arms and kisses her. He tells her that the wires are singing to her "I love you, I love you," and that they will always tell her the same sweet story. She, poor child, believes him. Choco hears and sees it all and going to his chief tells him. The chief orders Mona to stay in the camp and to keep away from the pale face. She rebels.

One day an Indian tries to steal a gun and belt. A trooper fires at him and wounds him. He escapes to his tribe and the Indians jump at the excuse to start a fight. Mona divines their intentions and runs away and tells her lover of the uprising.

The Indians surprise the advance body of engineers and massacre them. They tie the body of one man on a horse with an arrow still in him, and set it loose. The horse reaches the cavalry camp. The captain, doubting his ability to cope with the Indians, sends a man out to climb the nearest telegraph pole and send a message for help. The man is seen by the Indians, but manages to climb the pole and is able to send part of the message before a bullet finds its billet in his body and he falls.

The unfinished message tells enough of the awful tale to enable the commander to know where to send reinforcements, and they start for the scene of unrest. Lieut. Richards and his party are hemmed in at Elks Horn. They suffer from thirst and Richards offers to go and try to break through the Indians and get water. Mona, from a hillside, sees his brave action and steals away and joins him and helps him get the water. He suffers a temporary collapse. She revives him and helps him on his way back. He gets through and the water is passed around to the suffering men. The cavalry arrives and relieves the gallant little band. Mona helps to nurse the lieutenant, but as he recovers he gets tired of her attentions and his one desire is to get East. He is promoted and granted a three months' leave of absence.

Choco escapes and determines upon a terrible revenge. He gets his bow and arrows and stealthily awaits his chance to kill Richards for stealing Mona from him, for he knows the lieutenant is not in earnest. The time for Richards' departure arrives and he gets his belongings together. Mona, with a premonition of disaster, will not leave him and he looks around for an excuse to get away from her. He gets her to sit by the telegraph pole and listen to the love song and promises to return very soon. He puts his coat over her shoulders and his hat on her head and leaves her so.

Choco steals up, sees what he believes to be the accursed white face and a quivering arrow pierces the trusting girl's breast. He runs up to gloat over his rival's suffering and is grief stricken at what he finds.

Lieut. Richards forgets all about his flirtation with the Indian maiden as he clasps the "girl he left behind him" in his arms and Choco stands, immobile, with the grief eating his faithful heart out by the grave of little Mona in the solitary desert.

FRONTIER.

THE GIRL OF THE RANGE (Feb. 19).—This story deals with the characters of the days of the '60's when cattle rustling was carried on in disregard of the laws and of the hardy ranger scouts who were anxious for the scent that would lead them to a battle with the cattle thieves. Their operations became so extensive that Captain Charles Barnes, a noted ranger, was sent to Arizona to break up the rustling, his wife and son going with him. Shortly after reaching Arizona, the sweetheart of Bruce Barnes, son of Capt. Barnes, decides to visit her lover. The journey is made with safety, but she finds that Bruce is not the same. A short time after the arrival of Rosaline at the office of Capt. Barnes, he receives notice that a gang of rustlers are working a short distance away. One of his scouts is sent out. He comes back badly wounded, reporting that the rustlers are in force. Preparations are made to corral the band, and Capt. Barnes and his rangers ride away toward the scene of action. Rosaline cares for the wounded ranger and while assisting him, Bruce, her sweetheart, comes in. She supposes Bruce is with his father, and asks him the reason why he is different to her. He evades her answer and leaves her.

Rosaline decides to find out the reason for his indifference, and as Bruce rides away she mounts the horse of the wounded ranger, and follows him. She sees him meet May, the daughter of the boss rustler. Realizing Bruce has been false to her, she awaits her opportunity, returns her engagement ring and tells him that she will go out of his life forever.

There are constant skirmishes between the rangers and the rustlers, and in one of these the boss rustler is wounded unto death. Bruce, because of his love for May, decides to turn traitor to his father's cause and just before May's father dies, he promises the dying man that he will lead the rustlers on to victory. The rapidly changing scenes bring complications, and at last Fate brings the rangers and cattle rustlers together in a last hand to hand battle. May, in her anxiety for Bruce, insists upon riding at his side. A stray bullet finds lodgment in her frail body and she dies. The horrible situation appalls the rustlers and they are easily overpowered. Capt. Barnes is wounded, and as Bruce, his son, now a captive, is brought before him, he learns for the first time that he is a traitor. Bruce, filled with remorse, begs his father to send him to prison. The sentence is passed by the father and the boy is led away. Time passes, and the penalty has been paid. The prison doors open and Bruce Barnes is met at the portals of liberty by Rosaline, who has found it impossible to forget him, and still loves the man to whom long ago she pledged her troth. A little later, there is a happy reunion at the Barnes home.

TWO SIDES TO A STORY (Feb. 21).—The barber is reading. It is the slack time of day. A customer comes in. The towel is arranged round the customer's neck and the razor is sharpened when the barber starts back and his face assumes a look of hatred mixed with a desire for revenge. As he shaves his customer, he tells him a story with concentrated venom and bitterness. He tells how he was once a happy man, devoted to his wife. One day he left her in the morning after the usual affectionate leave taking. Arriving at the shop he found he had forgotten the key. He returned and as he approached the house he saw through the window a stranger embracing his wife with warmth and enticing her with nuggets of gold. It was evident this was no chance meeting and that their familiarity was nothing new. Broken-hearted and discouraged he went away from his home and left the woman who had deceived him.

The tale finished, the customer looks bored until he catches the look of murder in the barber's eye as he cries, "and you are the man." There is a desperate struggle for the razor, and holding the barber's hand, the customer forces him to hear his side of the story.

The customer tells the barber how he left the barber's wife, long ago, standing forlornly at the station as he went forth to carve out a fortune in the gold fields. Success came and he returned and looked her up and finding her, he clasped her in his arms and showed her the nuggets.

WILLY WANTS TO CURE HIS FATHER (Feb. 23).—"Chicken! That's it! I'm sure with a diet of chicken he will be himself in a few days."

Well, Willy loved his dad—in fact he considered his dad his best pal. If the doctor said it should be chicken—then chicken it would be. Willy never faltered a moment on that resolution.

But our young hero neglected a most important item when he went out on his errand—he didn't have any money. Far be it from Willy to stop for a little thing like that though!

Well, he almost got one, but the owner spied him. Not so at the next attempt, and home to dad went Willy with a delicious roasted fowl.

The disappearance of the aforesaid bird naturally caused some real disturbance, and a delegation, headed by police, are off in pursuit. They visit Willy and his Dad—but when they see the cute little imp feeding his poor invalid Dad, everyone decides that he has worked hard enough for the "chicken diet."

A DEAD TOWN.—This dead town of Baux, in Provence, in early ages, was inhabited by cave-dwellers. Visited by the Phoenicians, it was captured successively, by the Romans, the Byzantines and the Visigoths. It afterwards became the splendid capital of the Southern States, and during the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, or Revival of Art, the town of Baux was quite brilliant.

After becoming one of the greatest strongholds of Calvinism, it was destroyed at his greatest height of magnificence by Cardinal Richelieu. Now it is only a heap of ruins, retaining the traces of all its successive stages, and remaining a subject of admiration to visitors.

THE TELEGRAPH OPERATOR (Feb. 18).—"Well, Bess, one thing's sure, we'll never get ahead this way. This operating is dull enough any time, but when working in a one-horse town like this, it's awful, that's the word. Now, what's the answer?"

"That's funny, Jim. I've been thinking about that all day. Lately, somehow, I've been hearing the call that has lured so many thousands up to the Yukon. Seems as though we have just as much chance as the others who have struck luck—if we try! Was reading just this morning about a young couple from this same state who have found a great claim. What do you think?"

"Say, girlie, that's just what's been in my mind. Funny, isn't it? Let's reall figure a little on that."

There they were, sitting in the little bare operator's office up in Vermont, discussing this all-important subject—the future. They were ambitious and not in any way satisfied with the kind of an eventless life they were living. The fever grew and soon they took the trail. As it was half a love pilgrimage, the days sped happily.

After long struggles they arrived at the gold fields. Here they came across an odd looking old cabin, which looked as if it had been deserted for many years. Upon the front of the cabin in rough lettering was a sign:

"To whomsoever enters:—Make this your home. I am leaving for a better land. May happiness ever dwell within these walls. LITTLE TOM, SERGEANT R. M. P."

They broke in the door and upon making a light, they noticed a Royal Trooper's uniform on a chair by the fire place. Evidently the former tenant had been a member of the mounted police. Here was the hand of providence, and if confirmation of the fact was needed, it came the following day, when lucky Jim found the shining specks of pay dirt in his pan of stones. In his haste to tell the joyful tidings to Bess, he did not notice one of the daughters of a pair of claim jumping rascals, who were operating in the neighborhood, who caught a glimpse of the gold as she passed him. When these men heard this, they lost no time in descending upon Jim Sheldon, who was alone in the cabin at the time.

A few minutes later Bess returned, and upon looking through a window, saw Jim bound and at the mercy of the two claim jumpers. Mindful of the days of the telegraph key, she tapped a message to him on the window pane. Jim's practiced ear caught and interpreted the sound. Backing up to the window, under the very eyes of his unsuspecting captors, he conveyed directions to his wife by the same means. His scheme was for her to climb up on the roof, crawl down the chimney, take the uniform of the dead trooper, who had bequeathed them their cabin, from the chair by the fire place, put the uniform on and go to the neighboring post of the mounted police. Bess hurriedly donned the uniform and went to the highway, where she demanded a horse from a passing traveler "In the Queen's Name." Then she galloped away to the army post. The police returned with her after an exciting ride, and they reached the cabin just in time to save Jim from violence. The two claim jumpers were placed under arrest and all was happiness in the cabin.

THE GREAT UNKNOWN (2 reels) (Feb. 20).—He stumbled into the saloon, an ill-kempt old man, marked with the unmistakable scars of a desolate life in the wilderness. In the corner stood an old piano. The stranger staggered over to the instrument and slowly his fingers began to roam over the keys. Across the room sat Dan McGraw, noted as a bad man. Dan conducted the gambling table of the saloon, and at his left stood the woman known as Lady Lou. She was his wife and his "lookout" at the gaming table. As he is seated at the piano a vision comes of this man's career. How he, as a young miner, had been in love with a young girl in the settlement. But he was poor and thought that he could not go to this girl with his tale of love until he had the riches which he felt sure could be found in a few short months in the golden valleys of the Yukon. And so we see this young man tramp out into the wilderness. We watch him shooting the rapids and breaking the trail through the snow. His bed is the snow bank, his companions are his dogs. Finally, half frozen, worn out and crippled, he tries to return, but falls exhausted in the trail. Here he is found by his rival; but instead of giving him assistance, the rival takes his lead dog and allows the unfortunate victim of this unknown land to remain half buried in the snow drifts. The lead dog is taken to the girl and in the settlement as evidence of the death of her former lover.

Along the desolate trail comes the "Lone Trail Maid" of Indian race. Finding the unfortunate man, the Indian girl places him in his sleigh, leaves food and then departs. Awakening with renewed strength, the prospector makes for the cabin of his sweetheart, but finds her in the arms of the man who had deserted him in the wilderness.

Again he goes away to search in the great unknown land. Losing his way and being unable to find food, he is compelled to eat his dogs. And then—alone—he drops, sick unto death, a mere shadow of his former self.

But again the "Lone Trail Maid" comes with her dogs. Soon well and strong, he goes on again, searching for the muck called gold. His "Lone Trail Maid" comes to him in the wilderness, but even she is taken away and then again he is alone in "The Great Unknown."

The music stops with a sudden crash, and the stranger turns and speaks.

"I'll bet my words are true, but one of you is a hound of hell, and that one is Dan McGraw."

The lights went out. Two pistols flash in the dark and two men lay stiff on the floor, but around the stranger's neck was the lady known as Lou.

AN IMP ROMANCE (Feb. 20).—George Barr and Howard Sloane, two young sculptors, are contenders in a prize contest for the most artistic statue to be finished and presented at the art school within the month. Neither one has sufficient capital to employ a model, but together they start out to find someone who will pose for the statue and take a chance on getting paid.

They accidentally come upon a company of mov-picture actors who are rehearsing a scene. In the company is Violet Horner, the leading lady. In her the boys see a wonderful subject for the statue. They make her acquaintance and after telling her the situation prevail upon her to pose for them.

During the sittings the boys fall in love with her, but she cannot decide which one she likes best. Barr's statue turns out the best. Sloane realizes this and one afternoon when the studio is locked and the statues covered, Sloane sneaks in and, without removing the cover, smashes the statue which he thinks is Barr's, but which in reality is his, for the main in cleaning up, has changed the position of the statues. Sloane's perfidy is not discovered until the day of the contest.

Violet, while in the studio looking over some picture films, comes upon a piece that was taken by one of the Imp cameramen on the afternoon that Sloane smashed the statue. She telephones to the hall where the contest is being decided and requests the judges to delay their decision until she arrives. Jumping into an auto, Violet is driven to the scene of the contest. Sloane is denounced and Barr is awarded the prize. Violet accepts Barr's offer to pilot her through life.

BINKS—THE STRIKE BREAKER (Feb. 22).—The waiters at the Astoria Hotel are working in perfect harmony, until they find that one of their staff—"Fatty Marston"—is a scab, and will not join the Waiters' Union. In the midst of the busy dinner hour, the "walking delegate" arrives, blows his whistle, and to the dismay of the guests and the manager they instantly quit work. He appeals to them to stay; but they will not listen to him, and after beating Fatty Marston, they leave the place.

The manager puts this notice outside his hotel —"WAITERS WANTED." This attracts the notice of Charley Binks, who is out of work. He goes in and applies for work, the manager is pleased, but he wants to see Binks' references. Binks hands him one, showing how he was released from a lunatic asylum. The manager will not hire him, but as all the guests are clamoring for service, he decides to take a chance. He rigs Binks up in a dress suit and, owing to his lack of knowledge of the art of waiting, all sorts of mishaps occur, culminating in a perfect riot when he serves an order of "Lobster Salad Undressed," in his nightshirt.

THE PURCHASE PRICE (Feb. 21).—Jack Wilson, a young mining engineer, asks for the hand of Helen, the millionaire's daughter. Old Walker, the father, tells him he is unreasonable; he has no money. When he can come to him with anything over $100,000 he can marry Helen. Wilson gets out to achieve this task.

Two years pass and Jack has made a name as an engineer and has accumulated $5,000. Old Walker goes to Arizona to inspect a mining property that he contemplates buying. He writes an old friend, Spencer, to recommend a man. Spencer recommends Jack, who trusts to his beard to prevent recognition. Walker does not recognize Jack when he arrives at the property, but Helen does. She does not let Jack know this. Walker and Jack make an appointment to meet at the hotel for his report.

The owner and an accomplice waylay Jack and when they learn that his report is not a good one, they offer him 10 per cent. of the $100 purchase price and Jack tells them what he thinks of them. They seize him and after a severe struggle make him descend an old mining shaft, and tell him it is a case of a good report or starve.

On the following day Jack is desperate and in his anger picks around the old shaft. He unearths the lost vein and decides to fool the rascals. When they come he tells them he will do as they say, He is drawn up, signs a commission note and tells them he will make a good report, and the scoundrels are delighted. All this is overheard by a young fop who is traveling with Walker and who has been turned down by Helen. He promptly informs Walker that the engineer is Jack Wilson and that he is in league with the rogues to cheat him.

When Jack arrives at the hotel, the mine owners go in to cinch the deal with Walker and Helen delays Jack outside and tells him that she knows him. Jack shows her the ore and tells her that he is fooling the others and she is pleased. Jack is sent for and when he recommends the purchase to Walker, the old man denounces him. Jack follows the owners out and succeeds in buying the apparently worthless mine for $5000.

Helen tells her father of the found vein, and a reconciliation is made and they all go together to see the mine. Walker sees he has a great thing and offers Jack his check in payment. Jack tells him the price of the mine is $250,000 and his daughter and Walker sees the point. The young couple finally plight their troth at the bottom of the shaft.

WHEN A MAN MARRIES (Feb. 17).—Bachelors are foolish things. They are like spinsters, always making nice sounding rules against marriage until the right man or woman comes along and changes their creed. The particular bachelors obtruding themselves upon the screen in this picture are no exception to the rule, as is evinced by the speech of the teastmaster, who states that whoever marries during the ensuing twelve months, must pay for the next banquet—moved, not seconded and carried.

Eddie and Lee go afield. They find their right girls and lose their foolishness. They go further than this—they marry.

Both boys determine to hide their marriage from the other boys and it so happens that they choose the same hotel upon their honeymoon. They take their girls to their respective rooms and go in search of the bar. Of course, they meet and try and make excuses to get away from each other. They eventually manage this, Lee making a bolt for the elevator and Eddie choosing the fire escape.

All would be well but for a new, and, therefore, officious policeman fired with zeal and a desire to run some person in. He sees Eddie—Ha! a burglar caught in the act. He calls upon Eddie to stop, but Eddie has not the time nor the inclination to listen to him. Eddie makes a bolt for the nearest window and gets in. It is room 12, instead of room 10, and moreover, it is the temporary habitation of his friend and Dolly, instead of his own apartment. Lee comes in at the door at the same time and does not quite know what to make of it, as Eddie's explanation that he has made a mistake and likes climbing is rather thin. Louise hears her hub's voice and comes in to find him. The girls are both surprised at the efforts of the boys, not to know them, and their astonishment is increased by the entrance of the policeman through the window. He asks the boys if these are their wives and the boys say "no," at the same time bestowing large winks upon the copper. He is a thick-headed person and without trying to solve their change of front, when they say that the girls are their wives, he promptly runs them in. They are taken to court and the mystery is untangled. The boys are forgiven and they arrange to each pay half of the next banquet, if they fail to fool their bachelor friends.

THE HARVEST (Feb. 19).—Mary has two admirers, John and Hal, but while her father and mother approve of John, Mary selects Hal, marries him and moves to another state where, after staking out a claim, both start to work it. Mary is injured by an explosion at the mine, and Hal writes her parents to come.

In the meanwhile, he has met a dancehall girl, Cally, and as the accident has blinded his wife, he makes love to "the woman who don't care" in her presence. Doctor Scott performs an operation on Mary's eyes and after removing the bandages, lifts the shade, but the first thing the wife's eyes fall upon is her husband with Cally in his arms.

It is the last straw, for months she has been made to realize how thoroughly worthless a man she has married in preference to the nobler John. Cally and Hal elope, but the horse runs away, instantly killing the woman, and Hal soon follows her. However, Mary is not left alone, for her parents arrive and with them is John, who has come to offer what aid is in his power, and to later take his place beside the woman he loves and who now loves him.

THE FINER THINGS (Feb. 17).—Broken under the strain of Wall Street, Saddler arrived in the West, bringing his butler and some few comforts to which he had been accustomed. He saw Jim Worthy and his child Helen and saw a miracle that he did not understand, for Worthy was happy and hard working. He looked first with contempt, then with envy at the happy farmer and then marveled at it all. His butler brought his mail and he angrily ordered it away. His wife and mother arrived by automobile, and he angrily and irritably ordered them from the premises. He wandered for miles over the countryside, nervous, quarrelsome, easily irritated, until one day, Little Helen, daughter of his happy neighbor, came to visit him. Her childish innocence, her sweet baby ways, brought about a revulsion of feeling in him. Why could he not be happy like her—like her father?

A great resolve came to Saddler. He went to Jim Worthy and asked for work as a farm hand, and the delighted Jim was only too pleased to oblige him. One long year did this Wall Street man stick to his work, rising early and going to bed with the same promptness. After that lapse of time he surveyed himself in the mirror. The dark circles were gone, the step was elastic and hope and happiness swelled in his bosom.

Then came his wife and daughter and he welcomed them with open arms, showing Helen, the child that had caused it all. And so he returned to his old life, a wiser, a healthier and a better man.

THE COWBOY HEIR (Feb. 20).—Bill Ford, inheriting at his father's death, an extensive western ranch, decided to visit his property, disguised as a common cow boy. Arriving, he met Betty, daughter of the foreman-manager, and they promptly fell in love with each other. Of course, father refused to have his daughter marry a common cowpuncher, but Betty's brother, Gene, less practical, thought it would be an excellent idea to "slip one over on his father." They arranged an elopement, Gene and another cowpuncher dressing themselves as Betty and Bill, respectively, the latter attiring themselves as two cowpunchers. Hence father gave chase to the wrong couple. Arrived at the minister's the deed was done and the happy pair returned to secure father's blessing. This was obtained without much trouble, and when father demanded to know how Bill expected to support his wife, Bill's answer brought happiness all round.

LOVE IS BLIND (Feb. 22).—Lady Mayne and her daughter, with her orphan niece, wired Lady Berryman that they would be glad to entertain her almost blind son in the quiet and seclusion of their hills. Jack Berryman came and Lady Mayne tried at once to arrange a love match between the wealthy Jack and her daughter. Her plans bade fair to mature, for Jack was much in the company of the pretty daughter, much to the daughter's dismay, for be it known the daughter was much in love with Jimmy Harrison. Then suddenly Jack Berryman went stone blind and Lady Mayne's daughter eloped with Jimmy Harrison, exacting a promise from the niece that she (the niece), would impersonate her. This was done with such excellent effect that the niece found herself deeply in love with Jack and Jack continued to love the gentle presence near him more fervently.

And then the day came when Jack's sight was restored, and he saw the pretty impostor whom he had learned to love. And thus he went to the shrewd mother and surprised her.

THANHOUSER.

GOOD MORNING, JUDGE (Feb. 9).—A young clubman, who prided himself upon his popularity, made a wager with a friend that he would marry a certain society girl. His wooing met with great success as far as the girl was concerned, but her father, a judge, did not look with favor upon the young man, so the latter induced the girl to elope. She wrote her husband-to-be, telling him to have a closed carriage at a certain corner near her home and she would fly with him. The clubman received the note and rejoiced. But he carelessly left the missive in his coat and his valet took the garment to the tailor to be pressed. The letter fell out and the tailor carelessly put it into the wrong coat, which, it later developed, belonged to a meek little man whose wife ruled him with a rod of iron.

The husband had told his wife that he would be detained at the office that night, and when the woman read the letter she was convinced that he was false to her. So she kept the appointment indicated in the missive, and when the carriage rolled up to the curb she dived into the carriage before the astonished girl, who was also waiting, could interfere. The carriage drove rapidly off. In the darkness the woman did not notice that the man was not her husband, but a stranger. She was strong and used her umbrella with telling effect. When the police, summoned by the alarmed cabman arrived, the young man was a sorry looking object. Both eyes were blackened and his clothing was torn. The officers who brought the pair to court nursed sundry bruises, dent helmets where the woman's umbrella had hit them, and numerous scratches where she had clawed them.

The judge before whom the culprits were arraigned, was the girl's father. He did not like the clubman and he pitied the henpecked husband, so the young clubman and the jealous wife each got fifteen days in the workhouse. The girl heard of the affair and promptly broke the engagement, while the henpecked husband read a "Declaration of Independence" of his own to his wife when she returned from her labor for the city, and henceforth his life was far more happy than before the time when she had to say, "Good Morning, Judge."

A MYSTERY OF WALL STREET (Feb. 11).—A great financier, a power in Wall Street, fell in love with a society girl. Feeling sure that she would accept him, he proposed, but she had the bad taste to prefer a younger and poorer man, and the financier, filled with rage and chagrin, determined to be revenged.

The girl's father was a broker in Wall Street, and it was at him that the financier struck. In the daily battles on the stock exchange the shares in which the broker was interested steadily sunk in value. The broker, on the verge of ruin, learned who his enemy was, and asked him to spare him. The financier laughed at him and said that he meant to ruin him. And he certainly would have kept his word if the successful suitor had not intervened.

The young man told his future father-in-law not to worry, but on the following morning to lead a determined onslaught upon the financier's holdings, for the latter, he assured the worried broker, would not be on hand to lead his forces.

By a clever ruse, the financier was decoyed away from his home, and he did not return to New York until the market had closed for the day. The silent ticker in his office told its own story. During his absence the girl's father had recouped all his losses, while the financier had lost heavily.

Why the financier happened to be absent at such a critical time is one of the mysteries of Wall Street. A few venturesome people have asked this question of him, but all they received was a fierce glare and a snappish, "None of your business." The broker, too, is silent, but when the matter is discussed in the presence of his son-in-law, a suspicious twinkle comes into the young man's eyes.

SOME FOOLS THERE WERE (Feb. 14).—A very pretty girl came to the summer resort hotel. Three bachelors, who had been idling away their time at the resort, brightened up perceptibly, and laid plans to make her acquaintance. But unfortunately, the girl chanced to pass as they were discussing the details and overheard them.

The first man "sprained" his ankle. The girl and her aunt helped him tenderly to the hotel. The "sprain" ceased as soon as the two women left him. The second man "accidentally" hit the aunt in the back while golfing. He was a good golfer and the ball struck her where he had intended it should, right between the shoulder blades. He profusely apologized and was forgiven, incidentally making the girl's acquaintance. The third man, older than the others, and a finished prevaricator, informed the girl the he knew her father. She did not ask any embarrassing questions, but charmed him by the confiding way she accepted his statement.

There was intense rivalry among the bachelors, but the girl seemed to like all of them. She delighted in posing them in odd attitudes while she snapped them with her little kodak, telling them how "funny" they looked.

The day came when the belle had to leave. The three bachelors sadly bade farewell, but she assured them that they would hear from her soon. They did! For the evening's newspaper contained a picture of the fair enchantress, who, it seemed, had been stopping at the hotel under an assumed name. She was really a well-known writer, who had been collecting data and photographs for a magazine article on "Fools One Meets at Summer Resorts."

The bachelors were stunned. They remembered the cute little snap shots the girl had taken of them, and realized that they would look "funny" (as the girl expressed), in a magazine article. They had been very sentimental and foolish, they all realized, and there was no doubt that they had furnished much material to the young authoress.

RELIANCE.

BUD TILDEN, MAIL THIEF (Feb. 12).—Bud Tilden, a mountaineer, is in love with Jeannette. Hank Holliday, his rival, tries to win the girl away from Bud. Finding this useless, he resorts to mean methods. He places an improper book in Bud's pocket and then, before all the men, he takes it out and shows them the sort of literature Bud reads. He decides that Jeannette must know of it, so wrapping up the book, he addresses it to Jeannette and drops it in the mail. Determined that his sweetheart shall not see the volume, Bud holds up the carrier and secures the book. He is apprehended and arrested. But at his trial, when the judge hears the whole story, Bud is freed and Hank is taken into custody.

WITHIN THE TEN COUNT (Feb. 15).—Billy leaves his country home and starts for the city determined to win fame and fortune as a pugilist. He is under the care of Larry Delevan, a well known trainer. Billy leaves his sweetheart, Mary, back on the farm. At first he is only anxious for the money that it may bring her to him and that he may give her the good things of life. But he meets Vida, a pretty show girl, and she uses all her arts and wiles on him with the result that he is soon infatuated with her and forgets Mary. Billy takes Vida out to various cafes in the city and she urges him to drink champagne, which he does, time and time again, thus breaking his training. Delevan is not pleased with Vida's influence on the boy and tries in many ways to break the intimacy.

The day of Billy's big fight arrives. Mary, unable to bear Billy's long silence, seeks him in the city and arrives on the day of the fight. In his dressing room she looks through a hole in the wall and watches the battle. Billy is knocked senseless in the eighth round. He has lost. Vida laughs at him. Desperate and alone, Billy finds himself on a park bench, a common tramp, when slowly the voice of the referee penetrates his brain; he is counting nine; one more and he will be the loser. It was all a dream, he still has a chance. He scrambles to his feet and wins the fight.

Later, in his dressing room, surrounded by hosts of flattering friends, he remembers the dream and what would have happened had he been the loser and not the winner. Mary comes forward and he takes her hand. Slipping off his championship belt, he hands it to Delevan, saying, "I'm through." Delevan cannot believe, but Billy is firm. He leaves the bright lights of Broadway and the glories of the ring and, hand in hand with the girl who truly loves him, he returns—home.

BRONCHO

THE SHARPSHOOTER (2 reels) (Feb. 19).—Jack Krone, a blacksmith, lives with his father and sister, Edna. The squire's son, George Burns, lives in ease and idleness. There are mutterings of war, and the local militia is in frequent rifle practice. George stops to have his horse shod, and takes advantage of the opportunity to force his attentions on Edna. As he is attempting to forcibly kiss her he is knocked down by Jack, who reports the incident to his friends and George is expelled from the militia. The war breaks out and Jack goes to the front. Bitter at the southern boys, George secures a commission in the northern army, as he is the crack rifle shot of the locality, and sharpshooters are in great demand. As the fighting progresses and time goes on, little Bud Krone, Jack's brother, enlists as a drummer boy, and one day during an engagement, George is up in a tree picking off officers and sees him. Taking careful aim George brings the boy down. Jack looks at his dead brother for a moment, and then leaps towards the clump of trees from whence the firing had come. He sees George and shoots him through the shoulder, and when he discovers the identity of the man he has shot he attempts to kill him, but is captured by a squad of Union soldiers. Wounded, George goes home on a furlough, while Jack languishes in prison. Poverty has forced old man Krone to mortgage his property to Squire Burns, and the latter demands payment. George makes ardent love to Edna, and to save her old father she consents to marry him, not knowing that he is the slayer of her brother. Jack finally secures his release from prison and comes home, learning of the marriage of his sister. He sends her a note to meet him, and Burns sees them together, away in the distance and shoots Jack. Edna manages to support her brother to a negro's cabin, where he is hidden, and determines to ride to the nearest Confederate encampment for assistance. She dons Jack's coat and hat and mounts his horse. Burns sees her, and thinking she is Jack he lifts his rifle to his shoulder and takes careful aim. A storm is approaching. With a sacreligious boast Burns says: "With my eye upon the sight, not even God can save him." And as he goes to press the trigger a blinding flash of lightnng destroys his eyesight. Groping along in terror, he is harassed by visions of his foul deeds, and finally falls over a cliff. Edna reaches the soldiers and saves her brother.

PUNCH.

A CLOSE SHAVE (Feb. 13).—A salesman passing through a western town, sells safety razors to all the miners, much to the dissatisfaction of the one barber.

Some saleswomen visit the town a few weeks later, selling barber supplies, and the owner of the shop contracts to take a great quantity of material if the girls will pose in his place as "Lady Barbers." They consent for the sake of the sale, and the next day as the men pass the store, they read a placard announcing "Lady Barbers in Attendance." One and all flock into the shop. The girls ask what razors they have been using. The safety razors are displayed, but the girls refuse to shave them unless they throw the safety razors away.

This is done in short order, and as each man takes his place in the chair, a girl presides—but only for a second. The barber deftly executes the shave, but the victim leaves, content, positive that he has been shaved by the girl.

That evening, after taking a big order, the girls board an east-bound train, leaving a crowd of miners mourning their loss.

Next day, they all stroll sadly into the old shop, minus their safety, and realizing how badly they were stung.

KAY-BEE.

THE COUNTERFEITER (2 reels) (Feb. 21).—The counterfeiter, Golden, lives in luxury with his daughter. His partner is captured by the police and put through the "third degree," and confesses. A raid is made on Golden's plant and his men are made prisoners, but by a clever trick Golden knocks down the detective who is watching him and escapes, taking his daughter West with him. Dick Farron, of the secret service, is detailed to catch the fugitive. Golden buys a cattle ranch, and a long drought threatens his stock. Mary falls in love with Lieut. Graves and promises to marry him. Detective Farron is injured in a stage coach accident and is rescued by Golden and his men. He accepts the hospitality of the Goldens, unaware that he is in the house of the man he is searching for. The drought has worked havoc with the Indians, and they come to the fort and demand rations, but the colonel is unable to assist them. Golden loses his cattle, and is unable to pay his men. The money for the fort payroll is sent from Washington, and the colonel is advised by wire. In desperate financial straits, Golden secures access to the money chests and substitutes counterfeits for the genuine greenbacks. The soldiers get their pay and when they try to pass the money in the town it is refused, and a big fight is started. An investigation is started, and Detective Farron discovers that Golden's men have been paid off with new ten-dollar bills. Golden endeavors to destroy his plates, but is watched by Farron, who arrests Golden on the night of his daughter's wedding. Golden pleads with Farron to let him remain free until after the wedding, and the detective remains at the side of his man, watching him closely. The ceremony takes place, but before the detective can get Golden away the fort is attacked by the Indians, and a fierce struggle takes place. Golden, to save his daughter from disgrace, fights like a mad man, exposing himself again and again, and is finally struck down by an Indian bullet. The redskins are repulsed, and the detective goes away without having revealed his secret.

MAJESTIC.

TEACHER WANTED (Feb. 9).—Mary, the pride of her father's heart and the adored of all the cowboys on the ranch, is as good a shot as any of them. Her father decides she must go east to school as she is growing up too wildly, and despite her protests and the boys' pleading, off she goes. Her father dies in the years that follow, and when she is twenty she finds herself all alone in the world.

In her Massachusetts school she receives an offer to come to Colorado and take charge of a little school house there. She accepts. Once out there, the boys think her a Boston school marm and decide to play all sorts of tricks on her. Three of them enroll themselves as her scholars and do everything in their power to make the children laugh. Seeing that she cannot maintain order by kndness, she resolves to use other methods. Next day she has her big six-shooter hidden in her frock. When the first cowboy shows signs of foolishness, she takes out her gun and bids him recite "Mary Had a Little Lamb." He refuses. She fires a bullet into the ground right under his feet. Before he realizes it he is reciting for all he is worth. She submits all three of the boys to this same treatment, making them sing, dance, draw on the blackboard, by reason of her skillful handling of the big gun. This action on her part so wins their respect that before the week is out she has a dozen suitors, and before the end of the month she has accepted one and once more the "Teacher Wanted" sign hangs on the school house door.

SAY UNCLE (Feb. 4).—Lily Doeem tells her boob sweetheart, A. Lolly Popp, that she wants a pearl necklace and that if he is stingy she will "shake" him and make love to a sausage manufacturer.

Mr. Popp is distracted. He has no money, and his only stock in trade is a mustache and a rich uncle. He doesn't know how to raise money on the mustache, therefore, his only alternative is the uncle. He writes to said uncle, in which he tells him that he has a great scheme and that five thousand would float it. Also he writes to his Lily that he has communicated with his old fool of an uncle and that he has told him the "tale" and he hopes that his old uncle will fork out and that Lily will then get the necklace.

Unfortunately he puts the wrong letter in the wrong envelope. Consequently, the uncle gets the letter which was to be sent to Lily Dooem. Accordingly, when Lolly Popp calls on the uncle to collect the five thousand, uncle is ready to greet him.

The uncle has informed his servant that he is to tell Lolly Popp that he (the uncle), is very nervous, and that Lolly must do nothing to cross him, and must obey his every whim. Lolly Popp, anxious to get the money, is willing to humor him.

The uncle asks Lolly Popp to wheel him around in his wheeling-chair. It is a warm day and Lolly suffers from the heat. Uncle enjoys the wheeling and doesn't seem to mind how far they go. They arrive at a shallow river. Uncle wants to cross. Lolly Popp has on his perfectly good white trousers and his pet tennis shoes. It almost breaks his heart when he has to wade into the wet and push the go-cart ahead of him.

When they arrive on the other side of the river the uncle wants more. He tells Lolly Popp to do it some more, that he likes it. Lolly Popp is almost ready to drop. The hope of the five thousand is his only solace.

At last they return to the house and Lolly Popp feels that he has earned his money, and that he will get it. He sits at the desk and writes a letter to Lily as follows: "The old lobster pays. You will get the necklace." In the room is a large oil painting of the uncle, life size. The uncle has sought to catch his nephew in just such incriminating actions and has moved the picture from the frame. He has seated himself in the space. As Lolly Popp holds up the letter exultantly, the uncle steps out of the picture, as it were, and pinches Lolly on the ear. Whereupon, all dreams of the five thousand and his future as Lily's sweetheart vanish.

HUGO REISINGER

11 Broadway NEW YORK

DOGS WILL BE DOGS (Feb. 6).—Willie Live has informed a friend at the Dog Pound that he wants a dog, not yet in frankfurter form. He receives a letter from a friend saying that he has one to give away, if he will call for it. Willie calls for the animal, which is a largesome brute and he goes walking with him.

Willie is sensible to the charms of women. He sees a pretty girl pass, and soliloquizes that "Many a kind heart beats beneath a peekaboo waist. I would go to work for a girl like that!" The girl has a little dog half the size of Willie's dog. Nero, Willie's dog, decides that he will make the acquaintance of the girl's dog. He starts after the smaller dog. Willie tries to hold him back. Nero races down the street pulling at his rope. It is down hill and they quickly gain on the girl and her pet. The girl joins her parents in the garden of their home, wherein follows Willie and Nero. Willie with great courage, declares that he loves the girl. They repulse him, whereupon he pulls from his pocket a formidable appearing cannon, which he puts to his head as though to blow out his brains. Rather than have him muss up the garden, the girl's parents decide they would have him for a son-in-law. After Willie has won the girl, however, he shows that he had just about as much intention of committing suicide as he had of opening a Chinese laundry. He opens what was presumably a revolver. It was a cigarette case. He blandly offers a cigarette to his newly elected papa-in-law. Although chagrined that they had been so fooled, the parents value the novelty of the ruse and decidde that they will allow him to enter the family. And the dogs, of course, come to an understanding and they, too, enter the matrimonial boat.

DEEP SEA SHELL FISH (Feb. 6).—The Bernard Hermit lives at considerable depths on the sea coast. It dotes on feet and keeps a stock of ten all the time. The front ones have pinchers. To protect its soft abdomen, it takes keen interest in shells. It turns them over and over before selecting one. It then installs itself within and goes away carrying its house. The Hermit is a scrapper, and would rather fight than eat. They are the champion fighters of the Atlantic Ocean.

Sea anemones sometimes live as parasites on the Bernard Hermit and form a stylish headgear of plumes. Some parasitical sponges, while developing, shorten the life of the animal upon which they live. The Bernards live on fish and molluscs and convey food to their mouths with the pinchers.

LUX.

THE LEOPARD AND THE BURGLARS (Feb. 21).—Seeing that several desperadoes are causing the police much trouble, a detective purchases a leopard, and gets on the trail. With amazing alacrity the burglars hasten from out the scene, with the leopard hard upon their trail.

WHEN UNCLE MADE HIS WILL (Feb. 21).—Upon learning that their uncle is about to make his will, the Spoofems hasten to pay their respects to him in the hope that they will not be forgotten. The journey is a long one, and their haste leads them to adopt every possible form of locomotion that is possible to find. They arrive in the most rural of country, and there are reduced to the uttermost limits of despair by the lack of good locomotive power. Their experience in donkey barrows, or in riding steeplechases upon cows' backs, provide an amusing film.

SOLAX.

BURSTUP HOMES, DETECTIVE (Feb. 19).—Mrs. Kane is working in her kitchen. Her ring bothers her and she removes it from her finger, placing it on the table. She completes kneading her bread and places it in the oven. Soon after she misses her ring. After a fruitless search she 'phones Defective Burstup Homes.

That great sleuth soon arrives and begins to gather clues. He finds a paint brush high up on the door frame, pronounces the odor of onions "a strange perfume" and then goes outside. On hands and knees he traces the winding steps of the grocery boy to a point where a gardener had knelt with a flower pot. He rises, takes ceremonious leave of Mrs. Kane, and later from his office writes the following:

"Dear Madam: A thorough process of discrimination and concoction convinces me that your ring was taken by a tall red-whiskered man wearing a silk hat and given to religion, strong drink, and a strange brand of perfume. I shall proceed to apprehend the villian. Burstup Homes."

The manhunt is then begun. Homes tries to arrest several innocent suspects and finally drags Deacon Nyce to the police station. The deacon and the above description are synonymous. Mrs. Kane is then 'phoned.

In the meantime that lady has discovered her ring in the freshly baked loaf of bread. She goes to the police station and causes the release of Deacon Nyce, and as a reward for his efforts, hands the loaf to Defective Burstup Homes.

TILL THE DAY BREAKS (Feb. 21).—Cora Drake, a graduate of a training school for nurses, leaves for a hospital in another town to take up her duties. Here she becomes acquainted with Dr. Williams, the young house surgeon, and soon learns to love him. But the young doctor is already betrothed to Mabel Rivers, whom he dearly loves. One day while Dr. Williams is out motoring with his fiancée they meet with an accident and Mabel is borne to her home unconscious. The doctor telephones to the hospital for a nurse, and Cora is sent to Mebel's home unaware who the patient is until she arrives at the house. During the weeks that follow a great affection springs up between the young nurse and her patient. When Mabel is pronounced well enough to do without the services of a nurse, Cora prepares to return to her duties at the hospital. The night before her departure a fire breaks out in the house and Cora bravely rescues Mabel at the risk of her own life. Mabel is taken to the house of a friend, and Cora is brought to the very hospital she expected to return to the following day.

Doctor Williams, who is on duty that night, knows nothing of the fire at his sweetheart's home until Cora is brought into the hospital unconscious. His duties will not permit him to leave the hospital, and while he is attending to Cora's injuries, he is filled with fears for Mabel's safety. But Mrs. Rivers telephones to the hospital, telling the doctor that Mabel is uninjured, but owes her life to Cora's bravery. Cora dies in the early morning, but before she passes away, she tells the doctor that she loved him and feels that her sacrifice is not in vain, knowing that his happiness is assured.

MISCELLANEOUS

KINEMACOLOR

THE VIOLIN (2 reels).—To save the life of his granddaughter the old violinist pawns his beloved instrument. When the girl recovers, both bend every effort to retrieve the violin. The girl goes out to work, the old man copies music, almost starving in his effort to save the pennies he earns. To the rich home comes a famous violinist. The account of his playing is read in a newspaper by the pawnbroker, and the old man's violin is sold to the rich musician. When the poor people have saved the ten dollars necessary to redeem the violin, they hasten to the pawn shop only to find that, the interest not having been paid, the violin has been sold.

The rich and celebrated violinist is the guest of the people for whom the girl works. There she sees her grandfather's violin. She cannot resist the temptation to play upon it. The professor hears her and hastens into the music room. When he learns her story, he takes the girl and violin back to the old man, who hugs his lost treasure to his breast and, oblivious to all his surroundings, pours out his soul upon the violin.

THE STRUGGLE (2 reels).—Tom is hurt in a football accident; the doctor uses hypodermic injections of morphine and Tom becomes a morphine fiend. He manages to keep his secret hidden from his friends. He goes home with Bob for the holidays. At the ranch he meets Bob's sister, Helen; they love and Tom is accepted, His fight against the drug continues, even his love for Helen cannot overcome the cravings for morphia. Bob surprises him in the act of using the hypodermic needle and demands an explanation. Tom confesses his inability to stop the drug and sinks upon the bed overcome with shame. Bob determines upon a cure. Two boys wander on the desert. Ill, Tom sinks, overcome. Bob determines to put him to the test. He has pretended to lose the trail, but he leads Tom to the hut of an old miser. They prepare to sleep in the attic. Bob slips the hypodermic where Tom can see it. For a moment there is a struggle, but love wins, and Tom throws the fatal instrument out of the window. Bob keeps the secret, and on their return home places his sister in Tom's arms.

THE ALCHEMIST (2 reels).—An alchemist has brewed a powerful poison; he has also experimented on an antidote. A prince and courtier come to the house to learn of their future, see the alchemist's daughter, and both fall in love with her. The girl, dreaming of the handsome strangers, forgets her pet dog: he drinks from the bowl of poison and is dying. Her screams bring the father. Eagerly he tries his antidote; it works; the dog is saved; the scientist is triumphant.

In the castle the prince longs for the girl. With the aid of his friend he steals her, and places her under a lady-in-waiting in a room in his castle. There he tries to woo her without success. His friends enters the girl's room and attempts to take her in his arms. Frightened she flies to the prince for protection. He tells her his love is honest, and that on the morrow he will ask her father for her hand in marriage. With a heart full of hate the false friend goes to the alchemist and gets poison, telling the poor heart-broken father it is for the prince. The courtier puts the poison in water; the girl is dying. In this condition she is discovered by her lady-in-waiting. The prince is told and heart-broken falls beside his dead love.

Meanwhile, the father consults the stars. In them he sees his daughter's peril. Taking the antidote he climbs through a window in the castle and saves his child. When the priests and courtiers come with the prince and his friend to bury the girl, she rises and denounces her would-be murderer. The priests, who came to bury the girl, marry her to the prince.

ON THE CORNISH RIVIERA.—The film opens with some beautiful studies of Cornish scenery taken in the vicinity of the Manacles, a line of dangerous rocks along the coast near the Lizard. Mullion Cove is next seen. This is reputed to be the headquarters of a band of smugglers now extinct. St. Michael's Mount is a rocky island some distance from the main land. Upon its peak is a fine old castle. The town of St. Ives is next shown; it is the chief winter resort of the West country. Views of the harbor are given. Newquay is then visited. This is the principal town in the Cornish Riviera.

MYSTIC MANIPULATIONS.—First some examples of palming are given, and then the conjurer cust an orange in half and closes it with the pulp undisturbed. Opening the orange again, he shows that all the pulp has gone, a duster having taken its place. A number of tricks with colored balls follow and a very effective section shows milk poured into a bowl from one glass and then claret added from another. Then comes the surprise, the claret suddenly leaves the milk with which it had been mingled and the milk follows, each liquid going back into the glass in which it was at first.

CORSETS AND WAISTS.—In this reel of the Kinemacolor Weekly Fashions are shown close views of some of the new styles of corsets, exhibited on living models. The waists show many novelties in advance styles.

As the Operator Looks at it

As the Operator Looks at It

Just notice how easy this operator takes it. He doesn't have to work over a dangerous juice consuming rheostat at furnace heat anymore since the was installed.

He can control the machine perfectly now with one hand--gets a clearer, whiter, steadier light and can adjust it to any of the three intensities without even the faintest flicker.

When we sold this machine we guaranteed it would absolutely

Cut 2-3 from the Monthly Lighting Bill

That sounded almost too good to be true, but they put one in on our 30 day free trial plan.

Did the machine "make good?" Well, the first month it reduced the bill from $22.70 to $9.24 and they operated more hours and got better light than ever before.

We can do just as well for you regardless of what voltage you are using and if you will send for our little free booklet, we'll explain how we do it.

Remember you are paying the Lighting Company 66 2-3 per cent more than you need to every day you wait.

Half Way to Reno

Suppose you and your wife had a quarr—well, some unpleasantness—and she left a note behind saying she was going back to mother. Suppose you yourself had taken a train out-of-town, certain that your wife would repent; that a strange woman rushed through the train and dropped a strange baby in your lap; that your wife rushed through right afterwards and found you holding the baby! Well, we only wish your troubles would end as peacefully as our hero's did!

The Pretty Girl in Lower Five

He had a lot of time on his hands, for it was a long, uneventful trip from Chicago to Los Angeles, so he became interested in the pretty girl across the aisle—in a gentlemanly way. That is, he never obtruded himself on her, and she on her part ignored him. She made the poor chap feel sorry for merely being lonely—awful crime!—and he spent the journey in much misery. Then came a rift of sunshine through the clouds, and Lonely Man and Pretty Girl became Firm Friends.

Friday, February 21

The Two Sisters

"Useful and Ornamental" would apply to them. The "Useful" sister loved a lawyer who finally became enamored of the "Ornamental" one—who, as is apparent, was stronger on looks. He was a fickle fool who really didn't deserve the persevering girl Miss Useful was, and she, in turn, wasn't deservant of the heart-ache inflicted on her by her sweetheart's and Miss Ornamental's elopement. And she for—for the heart-ache when her sister, through the worthless husband's ill treatment, needed her.

The Universal Announces

Ever Shown

"THE NEWLY-WEDS" are a series of ANIMATED CARTOONS that will bring screams of laughter from the most callous picture fans in the world. They are not real people dressed up to imitate the famous McManus cartoons, but are DRAWINGS THAT MOVE! The trick photography required to produce such wonderful effects is the work of the "Eclair" people. You've been asking us for novelties. Very well, watch for "The Newly-Weds"!

IMP

"THE SISTERS" (Drama).
Monday, February 24th.

A pleasant little country romance ends with a dramatic punch that will keep you gaping with expectancy. The kind of picture that will bring them back a second time.

"KING DANFORTH RETIRES" (Drama).
Thursday, February 27th.

King Baggot in any kind of a picture is an attraction, but when you have him, surrounded by a very superior cast, interpreting a powerful dramatic story, you have the acme of motion picture production. It is a real box office magnet.

"BINKS, THE TIGHTWAD" AND "MARDI GRAS, NEW ORLEANS."
Saturday, February 29th.

If you have never felt the pleasure of a real long laughing spell, here's a chance for you to experience this delightful sensation. Along with it a vivid view of New Orleans in gala attire.

CRYSTAL

"A NIGHT IN TOWN" AND "AN INNOCENT BRIDEGROOM."
Sunday, March 2nd.

Fifteen minutes of pure and unadulterated comedy, a smile in every inch, a laugh in every foot. You will revel in the glory of having seen Pearl White in such a clever role.

FRONTIER

"THE STRANGER'S TRAIL" (Drama).
Wednesday, February 26th.

There is something about this Western drama that will fascinate you from start to finish. The thrilling situations are interspersed by a love theme that will make the women folks adore it and the men folks like it. Perfect photography.

101 BISON

"THE COWARD'S ATONEMENT" (Two-Reel Feature).
Tuesday, February 25th.

A massive production with a colossal cast. Replete with thrilling situations and war scenes. Countless number of soldiers in deeds of daring and deadly combat. Bridges and houses blown up; the terrors of war with all its horror enacted with wonderful realism. Produced through an enormous expenditure of money and the assistance of men and horses.

"THE RED GIRL'S SACRIFICE" (Two-Reel Feature).
Saturday, February 29th.

Get ready for another Western knock-out. Not a minute that there isn't something doing that will keep you wondering what will happen next. The rapidity of action and the thrilling situations will startle you.

REX

"IN THE SOUTH SEAS" (Drama).
Thursday, February 27th.

An exciting drama wonderfully staged, giving a graphic description of the devilish instruments of torture used by a hoard of Chinese bandits to secure the possession of a valuable pearl. The thrills do not end until the last scene has faded from view.

"IN THE BLOOD" (Drama).
Sunday, March 2nd.

The love of a child conquers the adamant nature of the father, and the family ties which were rent asunder by his selfish impulse are joined through the tender ministrations of a wronged woman.

GEM

"BILLY JOINS THE BAND" (Split Comedy).
Tuesday, February 25th.

Billy Quirk, the inimitable comedian, finds a new way to keep you good-natured for fifteen minutes. Lots of fun and plenty of real Quirk merriment.

UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO.

The Greatest Novelty On The Screen

"THE NEWLY-WEDS" will come only once every two weeks, and then only in half-reel lengths, because IT TAKES TWO WEEKS TO MAKE HALF A REEL of this sensational novelty. The other half of the reel will be either hand-colored film or some of the Eclair's wonderful scientific pictures. You'll give three wild cheers for the Universal when you see "Snookums," the terribly funny Newly-Wed baby, open his one-toothed mouth and yell "Wow- wow, wow" all over your screen!

POWERS

"TRICKS IN ALL TRADES" (Comedy).
Wednesday, February 26th.

The comical situations come so thick and so fast that you will hardly catch your breath for one convulsion of laughter as you finish the other.

"THE LAW OF COMPENSATION."
Friday, February 28th.

Marx liked the excitement of stealing things. He delighted in pitting his wits against that of the famous detective. He outwits him at every turn. The climax is a grand surprise.

ECLAIR

"THE MAN WHO DARED" (Two-Reel Feature).
Thursday, February 27th.

A powerful story of the noble sacrifice of an outlaw who suffered death to re-unite two loving souls, parted through the wiles of a fascinating, designing woman of the Northwoods. Beautiful settings, forceful interpretation.

"A COMEDIAN FOR LOVE" AND "LIFE IN EGYPT" (Split).
Sunday, March 2nd.

Gontran, the joy dispenser, has conceived of another brilliant idea to make you shout with glee. Along with it an exceptionally interesting, educational study.

ANIMATED WEEKLY

A living, breathing newspaper. If it's worth talking about, THE WEEKLY will get it. A camera man in every city of the world.

NESTOR

"A FOOL FOR LUCK" AND "A PIG'S A PIG" (Split Com.)
Monday, February 24th.

Laugh? Why you'll laugh so hard you're bound to get a stitch in your side. Nothing funnier ever produced. Two of 'em. One funnier than the other.

"THE VORTEX" (Two-Reel Feature).
Wednesday, February 27th.

The moral leper fascinated the mountain girl, and she deserted her fiance on the wedding eve. Later he found her—abused—dying. The climax is highly emotional and teems with excitement.

"ON EL CAMINO REAL" (Drama).
Friday, February 28th.

He left the home he had wrecked to start life anew. He prospered. Years later his son disclosed his father's past record. A most tragic ending to a finely staged dramatic production.

VICTOR

"A COUNTERFEIT COURTSHIP" (Comedy).
Friday, February 28th.

You will be delighted when you see the many laughable situations which led to "Jack's" falling in love with the deacon. Very superior cast, very superior acting.

CHAMPION

"THE DUKE AND THE ACTOR" (Comedy).
Monday, February 24th.

A decidedly new form of comedy. The smiles, giggles and laughs will re-echo throughout your house as this funny story is unfolded.

GREAT BIG NEWS

Price on All 101-Bison Features to be Raised!

For weeks and months we have been urging and begging the exhibitors of the whole country to "DEMAND UNIVERSAL FEATURES WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE." Only a few have done so. The result has been that we have been selling our features at a dead loss of $3,000 to $4,000 weekly, BUT THE EXHIBITORS HAVE NOT REAPED THE BENEFIT. Had they derived a benefit, we would have been satisfied to continue selling features at a loss, but we see no good in losing money for nothing! Therefore, the price to exchanges on all 101-BISON FEATURES will be raised, beginning with "The Coward's Atonement" a wonderful release of Tuesday, February 25th.

"SNOW WHITE," a gorgeous 3-reel Powers with special 3-sheet and 6-sheet posters will be released Wednesday February 19th. Demand it and pay nothing extra for it!

THE ORIGINAL CAST of the 101-Bison outfit appears for the first time in a wonderful 2-reel subject "The Coward's Atonement." A military sensation. Get it!

"KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN" is coming soon! It will pack and jam your house to the limit. Beautiful special posters. Demand it and pay no extra charge for it!

BIG POSTERS EVERY DAY! The Universal will issue magnificent 3-sheet posters every day; and stunning 6-sheets several times a week. That means big profits for YOU!

QUIRK SCRIPTS WANTED! The Universal will pay fat prices for comedy scenarios especially adapted to Billy Quirk's inimitable style. Rush us your best!

Begin to Demand "THE CRIMSON CROSS"—Eclair

The Universal will soon release a feature of 3 wonderful reels from the Eclair, entitled "The Crimson Cross." Critics who have seen these three masterly reels declare that "it will be the Passion Play of the Independents and will be a drawing card for years to come." Hundreds of people were employed in its production and no money was spared in obtaining the most lavish settings and costumes. THIS FEATURE WAS MADE IN AMERICA to suit American tastes. Begin to demand it right now and keep ding-donging at your exchange until release day!

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" is a flawless 2-reel Imp with King Baggot in the title role. It comes to you without extra charge and has novelty 3 and 6-sheet posters. GRAB IT!

LINCOLN J. CARTER'S first release for the Universal will be that world-famous melodrama "The Flaming Arrow." Keep your eyes open for later announcements. Begin to DEMAND!

THE REX HAS "COME BACK." The Rex releases with both of the Smalleys in the cast will be released very soon. They beat the old Rex releases for perfection if such a thing is possible.

SCENARIO PRICES. We are paying $25, $50 and $75 respectively for good one, two and three reel scenarios; and $25 extra if they are exceptionally good. RUSH US YOUR BEST QUICK!

COMEDY DIRECTOR wanted immediately. Send your communication to the "office of the president." Give your references and address. Don't call in person until sent for. All communications will be held in strictest confidence.

AS IN A LOOKING GLASS

A MARION LEONARD FEATURE PRODUCTION

Greatest Dramatic Production Ever Conceived

INDISPUTABLE PROOF

From BUYERS and PRACTICAL FILM MEN

"Today it was my good fortune to personally inspect on the screen the first Marion Leonard production, 'As in a Looking Glass.' I must confess that the picture was a revelation in motography to me. Never before have I seen as much real action in every foot of a film as contained in this one. Accept my order for two sets of every Leonard feature you release."

JOS. HOPP,
Pres., Standard Film Exch., Chicago, Ill.

"The greatest American feature I have ever seen. Put me down for two sets of all Leonard productions for Eastern Pennsylvania."

J. B. MCDANIEL,
Gen. Mgr., State Rights Film Co.,
1204 Race St., Phila., Pa.

"'As in a Looking Glass' is certainly one great production."

JOE ENGEL,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.

"I do not hesitate in proclaiming it one of the greatest dramatic feature productions I have ever seen."

HARRY WARNER
Warner's Features.

From CRITICS

"Miss Marion Leonard was never seen to better advantage than in this forcefully dramatic picture. The character she plays is so wide in its scope, so full of storm and sunshine, that it gives her an almost unexampled chance to use her great power of depicting emotion. The spectator sitting before the screen is held from first to last by the strong, affecting story so truthfully acted and by the indescribable beauty of its backgrounds that have been photographed into lovely pictures."

H. C. JUDSON,
Moving Picture World.

"It is seldom that a producer has enough faith in the excellence of his picture to show it without titles, and to show it to such a critical audience as that assembled for the first showing of the Marion Leonard picture. 'As in a Looking Glass' shows an almost unbounded confidence. The confidence was justified, however, for nothing but praise was heard. Marion Leonard has been heralded as 'the Rachel of the Silent Drama,' and in several scenes her emotional work entitled her to first rank as a motion picture actress. Much credit is due to Director Taylor. The continuity of the picture could not be improved upon. The photography is unusually good, particularly some of the double exposures, which are among the best turned out this year."

F. J. BEECROFT,
Dramatic Mirror.

In MOTION PICTURES

The above are three short cuts to success!

They represent only three inches of "The Prisoner of Zenda," and it is every inch a film! Every foot is a photographic feat! Every reel, realism!

As a silent drama, it is eloquent; as a masterpiece of love and sacrifice, its theme and moral are the essence of nobility; as a picture presentation, it is a production with a soul!

Mr. Hackett's virile art, vigorous characterization and sincere acting lend the picture personality! His masterful delineation of the characters in his dual role stamp him as an excellent pantomimist, and inject into his performance a note of strength and sympathy.

"Pickwick Papers"

Feb, 28, 1913. Vitagraph, Two Reels

PART ONE records the Adventures of the Honorable Event, and introduces Mr. Pickwick, Mr. Jingle, Mr. Winkle, Mr. Tupman, Dr. Slammer and all the familiar members of the Pickwick Club. These gentlemen are involved in the Honorable Event, which is brought about by the rascally Jingle. Dr. Slammer and Mr. Winkle are prepared to fight a duel, but a most extraordinary and humorous situation arises by the timely discovery that Jingle and not Winkle is the man who insulted the Doctor.

PART TWO embodies the Adventure of Westgage Seminary. Pickwick, at the suggestion of Job Trotter, Jingle's chum, goes on a wild goose chase to the Seminary to prevent Jingle from eloping with one of the girls. Trotter and Jingle are thus given a chance to get away and escape the discovery of their rascality. Sam Weller, Pickwick's faithful servant, is much in evidence in the laughable adventure.

Every scene in both parts was made in the famous haunts of Pickwick, in merry old England. Every character seems a living reproduction of Cruikshank's famous cartoons.

"MOTHER"

Feb. 24, 1913 Pathe, Two Reels

Tom Dawson, having written his mother that he has been made ranch foreman, loses his job on account of drink. Not having the heart to tell her of his misfortune, he writes her that he has been elected sheriff. He steals two horses and, suspected, has to flee, pursued by the sheriff and his posse.

At this inopportune time his mother decides to visit him. Arriving at the little town, she tells the boys she has come to see her son, the sheriff, and proudly displays his picture. When the sheriff returns they explain the circumstances to him; he pins his badge upon Tom and allows him to masquerade as sheriff until his mother returns to her home. As the train fades away the sheriff's badge is removed and Tom is confined to a cell, while his mother is in happy ignorance of his plight.

The Redemption

Kalem. Two Reels.

A strong moral drama in which is proven the theory that "a criminal is only a criminal because he has not had the property opportunity to develop an honest character."

"Red" Ellis, a knight of the underworld on whom the experiment is tried, twice starts to betray Grey, his benefactor, but each time his conscience restrains him. The second time, however, his old gang outwits him and one of their number makes off with a necklace belong to Grey. The guilt falls on Ellis; but Grey, still believing in Ellis, allows him to go on his promise to recover the necklace in half an hour. The time has almost expired when he rushes into Grey's parlor gripping the necklace in his hand.

The Lost Son

Lubin. Two Reels.

John Nolan, in the heat of anger, strikes down his opponent with a billiard ball and, believing him dead, runs away. Ed Jennings, the injured man, recovers.

Nolan's mother advertises for him and instructs the police to find her boy, but in vain.

Ten years later, George, his younger brother, holding a position of trust and supporting his now widowed mother, is robbed of some of his employer's money and tries to make it up by playing the races. He loses, and in desperation returns to the bookie and tries to put up his watch. The bookie opens it and sees his mother's picture. George tells him that Jennings is alive, and the little family is reunited.

February 14, 1913.

Chains of an Oath

Vitagraph. Two Reels.

The father of Donia, a pretty Russian peasant girl, whom he has betrothed to Gregory, compels her before departing for America, to take an oath to return and become his wife. In America Donia falls in love with Ivan, a fellow countryman, who has become Americanized and is in every way a worthy young man. Ivan asks her to become his wife. She is reminded of her oath to Gregory and, heartbroken, returns to her native land.

Ivan follows her to Russia and is discovered by Gregory while pleading with Donia to return with him. Furious at Ivan's attentions to his betrothed, Gregory dogs his footsteps awaiting an opportunity to kill him. During events which follow Gregory awakens to the realization that Donia does not love him, and placing Donia's hands in Ivan's, he revokes the oath and leaves them alone in the ecstasy of their love.

February 10, 1913.

A Drama in the Air

Pathe. Two Reels.

Ray Newell and Paul Van Arsdale, aviators, are in love with Betty Chapman. Betty announces that she will accept the winner of a race soon to be held. Newell, fearful lest he lose the prize, disables Van Arsdale's machine.

During the race, Van Arsdale's machine, slightly in the lead, suddenly drops to the ground and he is buried under the wreckage.

Newell's treachery is unearthed in a clever manner by Van Arsdale's friend, Harry Wilson. Later Betty and her father visit Van Arsdale in the hospital and Betty naively informs him that he has won her heart, if not the race.

The Last Blockhouse

Kalem. Two Reels.

A vivid portrayal of Western Frontier days, based upon historical incidents.

A party of Western pioneers, while constructing a block house, are guarded by a troop under Captain Steele. Crow, a renegade half-breed, tries to become friendly. He annoys Dot, the wife of Jim, a young settler, and is quickly repulsed.

Crow, infuriated at her scorn, incites the Indians to attack the settlers. The block house is destroyed. Crow captures Dot before the attack and rides off toward the camp.

Jack, the sole survivor, manages to reach the young husband, who is away in the woods, while Jim and Captain Steele recapture Dot from the Indians and in a hand to hand struggle with Crow, Jim avenges the fate of the pioneers.

The Millionaire Cowboy

Selig. Two Reels.

A brilliant comedy which smacks of the clean humor of the Western Plains.

During a wonderful exhibition of horsemanship and cowboy skill "Bud," the foreman of the Diamond S Ranch, is handed a telegram summoning him to Chicago to claim a fortune left him by an uncle.

There he falls in love and marries the stenographer in the office of his attorneys.

After a year he tires of the monotony of the life he leads and wires for the entire outfit to come on to Chicago and wake the town up. They carry out instructions elaborately, much to the embarrassment of Mrs. "Bud." After they leave, "Bud" embraces his wife and to her great relief whispers "Never again."

Facts and Comments

JUST why a uniformed "special officer," more popularly known as a "bouncer," is necessary to the conduct of a successful motion picture theater is not easy to understand. There may be places where the "special officer" is necessary, but in any modern scheme of management this person is sadly out of place. The presence of a burly, officious individual, with a visible excess of brawn over brains is not appreciated by patrons of refinement. When such a "bouncer" walks threateningly up and down the aisles because some of the patrons have dared to resent by derisive applause the vocal parturitions of an "illustrated singer," it is an evident sign that there is something wrong with the management. People would be either more or less than human if they could endure this sort of torture without at least a cry of pain or protest. The "bouncer" may save the "illustrated singer," but he is sure to drive away valuable patrons by his ostentatious zeal.

In a well-managed theater, disorders calling for police interference are practically unknown, and every other kind of disturbance can be disposed of without resort to physical force. Some exhibitors suspend the picture and run a mild warning on a slide; others approach the ringleaders of the disturbance and in quiet, courteous tones ask them to step to the box-office with an assurance that their money will be returned to them if they do not like to stay. The latter method the writer has found the most effective. Few men will accept the offer to leave and present themselves at the box-office to receive their money back. They prefer to be where they are, and quickly subside.

OUR sense of justice is shocked by the confiscatory laws passed in Western Canada, where, as in Saskatchewan, the legislature is attempting to raise the motion picture licenses from twenty dollars per annum to three hundred dollars per annum. It is also planned to limit the number of moving picture theaters to one house for five thousand population. All this legislation has been proposed and put on its way without any notice to the exhibitors. The first knowledge the moving picture men had of this unjust and arbitrary measure came from the office of the Attorney-General, who, according to the newspapers, informed the leading exhibitor in Saskatoon that he had better prepare himself for the raise.

We cannot understand this attitude of the legislature toward the motion picture. Every person of average intelligence now realizes the educational value of the kinematograph. To tax education is about the most foolish and reactionary piece of statesmanship imaginable. It is like taxing books and other things used in acquiring education. The motion picture is not like other amusements: there is an educational value in quite a large percentage of subjects. A remote part of the country like Saskatchewan, with probably limited opportunities for general education, ought to be the last state to impose heavy taxes on anything that helps along the cause of education. The exhibition of such an illiberal spirit will not tend to draw American immigrants across the border line.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD to express his fears of the day when the large theater will choke off the small exhibitor. Says our friend and reader: "If theaters are built having a seating capacity of 1800 to 2500 in towns of 30,000 to 60,000 population, and when such theaters run three to four reels of pictures and from two to four acts of vaudeville for the sum of five cents, we can see that all the smaller houses will go out of business." We think our friend is somewhat pessimistic, and worries needlessly. No house can offer such a program at such a price for any great length of time and make any money. Our own experience and observation has been that the small house conducting a nice clean entertainment will always be in demand, the advantages of location, safety and ventilation being equal.

ONE of our New York dailies devotes a good part of a page to the usefulness of the motion picture as an aid to motion study. The paper says that where a system of motion study has been devised and carried out by means of the motion picture film, remarkably beneficial results have been obtained. The time of a half-hour job has, according to the same authority, been reduced from fifteen to twenty minutes. The object of the system is not to drive the worker, but to make his operations as simple as possible. We are informed that the motion pictures are taken of a mechanic at work on the various processes of construction and assembling a braiding machine. A large clock, subdivided to a sixteenth of a second, is shown in the picture along with the workman. As the pictures proceed each minute motion of the workman is shown along with the passing of the time consumed in making that motion. The pictures are recorded one below another on a film eighteen pictures to the foot. When the pictures are thrown on the screen they are studied very minutely. Pictures showing useless motions are cut out of the film and later out of the workman's operations. The pictures may then be used to instruct an unskilled workman, the paper goes on to say. The new man learns almost at a glance what it has taken the skilled workman years to acquire.

It has been observed that progress in all arts and industries in which inexpensive measuring devices could be used has been a notable fact. This new system of measuring with the motion picture may do for the scientific workshop what the telescope has done for astronomy or what the microscope has done for biology. This, it is claimed by the paper, is the first time that motion has been put under the microscope and recorded with permanent and scientific accuracy. This last claim, it seems to us, is not quite well founded, for the measuring of motion under the microscope has been a common achievement of manufacturers who gave special attention to scientific subjects. It is easy to see the tremendous industrial value of micromotion. We cannot think of a more powerful agent for the conservation of energy.

History on the Screen

By W. Stephen Bush

AN ardent and intelligent friend of the motion picture, living in a Southern city, some time ago saw in the lobby of a local motion picture theater an announcement to the effect that films showing the Battle of New Orleans would be shown in the near future. He is the father of two boys, both of them going to school. He believes in the educational possibilities of the motion picture. He at once told his boys of the fine historic picture that was coming. In order to prepare them for the treat, he read to them a short description of the famous battle, assuring them and himself that the pictures would make the history of the battle much clearer than the printed page. On the day of exhibition he took his boys to see the picture, and came away thoroughly disgusted and full of sympathy with his boys. According to a letter he has addressed to The Moving Picture World, the film shown could by no stretch of the imagination be called a reproduction of the famous fight at the mouth of the Mississippi. He points out that the British General, Pakenham, who in the films was persistently called Packingham, seemed a gay and lively person after the battle, although historians tell us that he had been mortally wounded during the struggle.

When will producers learn that the making of historic pictures requires as a fundamental beginning substantial historic accuracy? The Moving Picture World has on numerous occasions pointed out the necessity of substantial historical correctness in all pictures dealing with historical subjects. With perhaps half a dozen exceptions, there is no historic film before the public today which could successfully stand an analysis by a high-school pupil of average intelligence and attainments. In some of these pictures, treating subjects which are familiar to Americans almost from the cradle, gross historical errors and shocking anachronisms occur. In building up a historical picture, more is necessary than a hasty interview with the encyclopedia or a cheap book of reference. The aid of a historian familiar with the subject about to be filmed is indispensable. If the films are to teach history they must be censored by one who is competent to teach history. A working knowledge of history cannot be acquired in an hour or in a day or in a week.

It is a great pity that we have not more genuine historical pictures. The reason for this lack is not easy to understand. Surely history, especially English and American history, is full of stirring and tragic incident. What opportunities are there not, for instance, in the tragic fate of the unhappy House of Stuart beginning with the Queen of Scots. The house of Laios was not pursued by a more dreadful fate. The struggle between Cromwell and Charles I is rich in tragic episodes, and ends with the most dramatic and terrible climax. The hostile fate pursues even the last of the Stuarts, but not before wonders of loyalty and bravery have been performed in defense of the rights of the Pretenders. There would seem to be the material for a true feature of good length, and as no English or French producer has ever shown any film on the subject which would be worth a second thought, it might be well for an American manufacturer to undertake the task. This, of course, is but one instance; the number of examples for filming American historic subjects is uncommonly large. I sincerely believe that in the present state of affairs, when, according to common opinion, value on the screen is constantly diminishing, a fine historic picture would be worth while. It is safe to say that seven out of ten persons are specially interested in historical subjects. The good historian has never lacked for readers. Go to any library and convince yourself of the popularity of the history shelves. Statistics show that history runs a close second to fiction in point of popularity. How few after all have the chance to go to the library and read history. I believe there are thousands deeply interested in historic subjects, but lacking the time, the previous training and the patience and mental freshness to patronize the library. Show history to these thousands on the screen and they will thank you for it. That is one of the great missions of the motion picture, to substitute the picture for the book, in order that all may profit where before only a few were benefited.

The clearer this wonderful and unique advantage of the motion picture can be shown, the better for the future of the industry. It is this phase of the film which has attracted the notice and won the good opinion of the best elements in our civilization. Nothing has added more to the just appreciation of the motion picture and its increase of prestige among the thinking classes than this almost magic quality of diffusing knowledge. The filming of the great masterpieces of literature, such as Dante's Inferno and Homer's Odyssey and Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered and, last but not least of all, the great biblical subjects, has raised the motion picture far above lower standards of a former day. An ounce of practical demonstration is worth a ton of speculation and theorizing. It is still true that "seeing is believing."

In all the world's history there is no period more interesting and more suitable for filming than the origin and development of those settlements along the Atlantic Coast which formed the nucleus of our Republic. No systematic attempt has been made to undertake this task. We can see no reason why a feature showing such a subject should not have a welcome in every theater and in every school in this country, and indeed in every part of the world. We have had pictures dealing with American history, notably those of the Edison Company. As far as we know, they have been popular with exhibitors, and profitable. Do these facts not augur an even greater success for a more ambitious and systematic enterprise carried on with a faithful regard for historic fidelity? In such a work the producers no doubt can count upon the co-operation of the best historians and scholars in the country.

The Houston Street Accident

ON Sunday evening, February 2, two persons were killed and nineteen injured as the result of a panic in a picture show on East Houston street, New York, caused by the raising of the cry of "fire." As a matter of fact there was no fire, but the alarm, raised among a peculiarly excitable people, had the effect of causing a stampede toward the main but inadequate exit, and the casualties mentioned occurred.

It is alleged that all the legal requirements for picture theaters had been complied with, which would prove that the present picture theater regulations in New York are inadequate. If this is true, further reason for the adoption of an ordinance which will guarantee safety is furnished a reluctant board of aldermen.

Mayor Gaynor, commenting upon the accident, has urged the Aldermen to pass the Folks ordinance which provides the remedy, but that body, or those members of it who have persisted upon obstructing every effort looking toward a betterment of picture theaters, has refused to act.

Resolutions urging the passage of the Folks ordinance have been adopted by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York and efforts have been made by that body and other civic organizations to secure the enactment of the proposed ordinance, thus far without avail.

How many lives must be sacrificed before suitable regulations of picture theaters may be obtained?

Talking Pictures and Silent Drama

By Epes Winthrop Sargent, (Chicot).

EVER since the announcement that the Edison Talking Pictures had become a commercial possibility, there has been coming into the office of The Moving Picture World a storm of letters from the exhibitors of photoplays, most of whom seem to argue that the appearance of the talking play means the end of the silent drama. The expressions of opinion run all the way from a slight note of dread to a revelation of abject fear for the future of the photoplay of today.

Without in the least seeking to detract from the undoubted value of the Talking Pictures as an important contribution to amusement devices, this writer, after a careful survey of the photoplay, vaudeville and dramatic situations, is not inclined to believe that the talking pictures will in any way interfere with the prosperity of the silent drama. He has discussed their value with leading photoplay men, with important vaudeville factors and men of moment in dramatic affairs, and the consensus of opinion seems to agree with his own belief that the talking picture will find a niche of its own and will not to any marked degree interfere seriously with the filmed drama without words.

Those most concerned over the appearance of the talking picture are the vaudeville men. They have suffered long from the superior attraction of the photoplay. They have sought to counteract the effect of the cheaper and more popular form of amusement, and they have hailed with delight the supposed appearance of a stronger attraction; and while one powerful body of vaudeville managers have made a long time contract with the Edison company, others have trafficked with John Cort for his device and with the promoters of a foreign scheme, but practically none of the leading photoplay managers have sought the rights to the talking pictures, for they, if not the lesser managers, realize that the place of the talking picture is and probably always will be, in the vaudeville theaters; not so much those houses that mingle pictures with cheap vaudeville, but the better class of places where the single reel shown ends the performance and even those who would gladly sit through three or four reels in a picture theater, troop out when the picture is announced.

The talking picture belongs to the talking stage, just as the silent drama thrives best in its own house. Vaudeville booking agents resent the appearance of the device because they know that it will cut down their commissions, but they seem to be about the only men in the amusement world who have a reasonable excuse for hostility against the talking picture.

To take a concrete example; the other day the Edison company filmed and phonographed Miss Cecelia Loftus, one of the highest priced single entertainers in vaudeville. Miss Loftus was paid handsomely for the service, a sum that would represent several weeks of professional engagements in the vaudeville houses, but now the smallest vaudeville theater may announce Miss Loftus where before her single salary would represent a sum in excess of the cost of the entire bill. And the pictures of Miss Loftus will replace a "headline" feature for which some agent would have received a commission.

But the appearance of Miss Loftus in a city does not appreciably hurt the business at the photoplay houses, and it is difficult to perceive that the appearance of the talking pictures of Miss Loftus in the smaller towns will to any great extent lessen the takings of the photoplay theaters. The vaudeville manager may be able to advertise Miss Loftus instead of some three hundred dollar act or a thousand dollar act, but will he hurt the photoplay theater to any great degree? Personally we think not. We know the Palace Theater, London, and the Orpheum theater, San Francisco, and unless we are greatly mistaken we think that the talking pictures, once the keen edge of novelty is worn off, will not draw ten dollars from the photoplay theaters.

It is true that photoplay has drawn many patrons from the vaudeville theaters, but not as many as is popularly supposed, and they are not real vaudeville lovers but photoplay patrons who merely waited for the arrival of a better appreciated form of entertainment. The photoplay audiences have been drawn largely from the galleries and balconies of the dramatic houses with not a few of the orchestra patrons as well.

They find in photoplay the vaudeville of the drama. Instead of the twenty minute sketch, unfolding but a single point, there is the eighteen minute drama complete in itself or an act of a two, three or four part play. Vaudeville's greatest charm always has been the diversity of the performance that the brevity of the individual acts made possible. Photoplay has done the same thing for the drama. It has done more than this. It has made possible the actual showing of scenes that in the dramatic play must be alluded to, because of the impossibility of making numerous sets. It has given to the smaller towns and the smaller houses of the large cities a grade of acting that five or ten times the price of admission could not command.

It has done more than this. It has presented the old play favorites in a new and delightfully compact form. "The Prisoner of Zenda," for example, offers a more complete story in less than one half the time required by the dramatic version and does this in a wealth of stage settings that would be an absolute theatrical impossibility. The production is made but once and is not moved from the studio. Instead of the long explanations of events occurring off the stage these events are shown in addition in appropriate settings. The action is retained. The tiresomeness of the dialogue is eliminated. Given the talking pictures, the dialogue would be replaced. It would be interesting if we could get Mr. Hackett's fine voice as well as his spirited action, but not at the cost of an additional two hours of time.

To regard it from another angle, the silent drama makes possible much that must be avoided in stage versions. As one competent commentator put it the other day, "I like to watch the western plays, but I'd hate to have my wife hear the dialogue that would go with some of that stuff." Talking pictures can never supplant the silent drama if for no other reason than the impossibility of supplying the fifty to one hundred plays required each week. There are not a sufficient number of dramatists in the world to supply this demand adequately. Plays of a sort could be written, but not plays with the proper sort of dialogue, for it is the absence of dialogue and the lack of necessity for technical skill in handling dialogue that makes possible the success of the photoplay. Each season scores of dramas are withdrawn from the stage for no other reason than that the dialogue is not commensurate with the plot.

From whatever angle the situation is viewed, the intelligent observer arrives at but one conclusion. The talking pictures are an entertainment idea admirably suited to vaudeville. They may, in a sense, aid the silent drama, just as the publication of the phonograph records of the operatic stars has increased interest in really good music, but the grand opera record has not seriously damaged the popularity of records of the popular songs, nor will the combination of film and phonograph ever overset the popularity of pictures without dialogue.

The photoplay is a distinct and, we think, a lasting form of amusement, not to be deposed by the newer device nor even threatened by the combination of voice and view.

For a third time Mr. Edison has contributed importantly to the entertainment of the amusement lover, but he has not supplanted his earlier devices by the third. He has merely augmented the sources of amusement.

$1,000 for Fire Sufferers

Thanhouser employees who suffered large losses in the fire that destroyed the New Rochelle factory were tendered a benefit by their colleagues in the Thanhouser Company, at the Germania Hall, New Rochelle, Tuesday, the fourth. John Bunny was the feature number of a strong bill secured by Bert Adler. Pearl White, of the Crystal, told stories, and Gertrude Robinson, of the Reliance, sang some "raggy" airs, with Elsie Balfour and Walter Robinson. The Thanhouser Kid appeared with the Thanhouser Kidlet in a "sister act" that has no rival as an oddity, and in which the Thanhouser Poodle was made to assist; and other Thanhouser contributors were Harry Benham, in musical comedy selections, with Mignon Anderson at the piano; Demetrio Mitsoratz, in operatic numbers, and David Thompson, in a monologue. Almost a thousand dollars is said to have been realized for the fire sufferers.

A Novel and Timely Subject.

Detective William J. Burns in Exposure of "The Land Swindlers"—a Three-Reel Kalem Production.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS production is taken from no time-worn mould, but shines in the unwonted gloss of novelty. Its theme is timely. It could have no better moral, showing, as it does, both the prevalence and the folly of corruption in public life. To make the telling of the story effective and attractive there was but one method of treatment. The extraordinary resources of the moving picture must be used in an intelligent but withal lavish manner. The spectator must be taken into the halls of legislation; he must see the mysterious workings of official fraud in the sessions of committees, in secret meeting-places and in the homes of the conspirators. He must be made to see how the cunning of righteousness is matched against the craft of corruption.

It was necessary to show what harm political frauds work on the plain citizen, and how his wrongs are avenged and the law vindicated by one of those spirited and incorruptible public servants which have never been wanting in the history of American politics.

In these three reels all these things have been done. A crime-finder of national repute and his instrument of detection, now very well known as the dictagraph, are introduced on the screen with telling and sensational effect. The first reel of this production may well serve as a model of clever dramatic construction. The head of a typical American family in moderate circumstances is tempted by an alluring advertisement telling of the fortunes that can be made in the South by the purchase of rich but untilled land. The family give up their savings to purchase this land and are taken to their new home, which turns out to be a wretched white-washed cottage in the South, surrounded by worthless land. The spectator learns how a Senator of the United States had secured possession of the land for probably nothing at all, and how his unscrupulous agent deals with the victims after they reach the land.

A young congressman learns of the fraud, little realizing that he is engaged to be married to the daughter of the arch-conspirator, Senator Archer. His attempt to right the wrong by an appeal to Congress fails utterly because the committee to which the matter is referred consists of friends and confederates of the senator. The congressman now appeals to the detective whom he had heard in an address on the necessity of fighting public corruption. The detective at once starts upon a painstaking investigation.

The second and third reel, judged by the ordinary standard, suffer from some defects in dramatic construction, and episodes are introduced which seem irrevelant to the main theme and somewhat interfere with the orderly development of the action. The cause of this probably is a desire to bring the famous detective into the foreground as much as possible. As these minor and detached incidents are full of thrills the average moving picture audience will probably forgive the violations of dramatic unity and directness.

The installation of the dictagraph and its practical workings are shown very plainly in all their details and are full of interest. The senator and his confederates discover how they have been trapped and the senator seeks refuge in flight. He takes passage on board an ocean liner, but even here his Nemesis pursues him in the shape of the wireless telegraph. Rather than suffer disgrace the senator destroys himself by taking poison, while the young congressman is delivering an impassioned speech upon the floor of the House against the land frauds. The senator's daughter is at first stunned by the news of her father's shameful and violent death, but later reconciles herself to the situation and marries the young congressman who was the man of her choice.

Nothing in these reels is left to the imagination of the spectator. He sees the very land which had been palmed off on the unsuspecting citizen and he is taken to the capitol of the nation where the great fraud had been hatched. The pictures give wonderfully true glimpses of official Washington. The scenic selections are perfect to the last degree. We are made to see the very squirrels at play on the capitol grounds. The scenes on the steamer on which the fugitive senator has embarked are dramatic and realistic in the extreme. The need of the exhibitor to-day is the true feature. This Kalem production is a real feature. It means more than a passing profit. It will hold the best ptronage and increase our faith in the future of the motion picture.

THE EVER IMPORTANT PICTURE.

It was the morning of the formal opening of the new Police Headquarters building in New Rochelle. Lloyd F Lonergran, of Thanhouser, who has managed to ensnare every local event of interest in recent years in his company's films, had Chief of Police Timmons on the wire. The chief was holding up the parade of the police to permit Lonergan time to get there with his trusty cameraman.

"Kindly"—Lonergan was saying to the chief, "KINDLY don't start your parade for another five minutes. My photographer hasn't shown up."

The chief "fell" for Lonergan's way of saying it, and the waiting bluecoats stamped about in the cold.

"Ah—" phoned Lonergan to the chief when the five minutes was up. "AH, he is here. He is loading up his camera. But I want him to take more film. Just give me another five minutes—"

He got it.

Sure enough he was on the ground with his photographer at the expiration of that time.

"Glory be!" said the chief, "I never thought you'd get here. And you've delayed the ceremonies ten minutes."

"I know," said the moving picture man. "It's sad. But look—LOOK, the sun has gone down! It will be up again in five minutes. Let's wait."

And they did.

"The Coward's Atonement"

Two-Reel 101 Bison Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HERE is a picture of battle, laid in Civil War times, presenting tremendous forces of destruction at work, an object lesson like others of its kind that fascinate audiences at the little theaters without any apparent reason. That is because the reason lies deep in human nature, and because stories of the Revolution and the Rebellion offer greater dramatic opportunity than campaigns for mere conquest for the acquirement of territory in Europe. Nearly all wars in the old country have been for the acquisition of the land and the wealth of the conquered, but both of the great American wars were waged to establish liberty for the people as against class privilege.

Higher sympathetic interest is aroused in the bitter conflicts between men when one or another great principle is involved, hence pictures of troublous times when we established freedom and when we maintained it hold their own in public interest as long as they are ably presented. Another reason lies deeper in the nature of our people. They are naturally combative. Look around you and see how few are not engaged in one fight or another, notice how quick men are to resent an injury. It is through combativeness and determination that society is often organized and still more often maintained.

Men all around and among us are still doing battle for freedom of action, that they may follow out their own aspirations and judge for themselves whether or not their conduct is right and just, and in this struggle lies the essence of the drama. That essence is the clash of active forces.

The active forces in this particular case are large ones, and the military movements are so constant and busy that the interwoven story serves only as a framework for brisk engagements and heavy operations of an exciting character. There is a great deal doing before the leading characters are well into the fray, bridges blown up, columns of infantry in strategic skirmishing, bodies of cavalry sweeping over the field under artillery fire, and more than one desperate charge being made before the first half of the photodrama is over.

The story itself is decidedly reminiscent, being that of two young Confederates, one of dashing bravery and the other of a less ardent kind that finds itself after an exhibition of cowardice, both in love with a Southern Rose. It has been done before, but it serves as well as another in such a case as this, where it is entirely subordinate to what is of much higher importance. These military actions could be made more effective if they illustrated some historical event rather than a petty intrigue of no especial value in the long run.

The dashing young officer in gray, a favorite from the opening scenes, wins out in the end so far as the Southern Rose is concerned—his course along the path of love has been pictured a thousand and one times in moving pictures. The heroine who manages to fit a full-sized man's uniform to her slender and petit figure in a few seconds that she may ride a horse and carry the despatches is also a familiar figure. The coward is a later and more natural conception. He comes so near to being human that his part is the only one enlisting sympathy.

That the play is interesting in spite of the stale characters and hackneyed theme is due to the director's masterly handling of battle scenes. He has closely followed Griffith and Ince in giving swift military action in the foreground with equally intense action in far reaching landscapes of great beauty and has held up to view some stirring conflicts in both large and small scope. Instead of tame encounters of straggling squads, that inexpensive, slap-you-on-the-wrist strife that is so common and so farcical in most moving pictures of this kind, we are enabled to look down from great heights upon what has all the appearance of actual military engagements.

The movements of bodies of cavalry are so remarkable and so in accord with truthful presentation that I took pains to make especial inquiry about the men on horse and learned that the troops were mostly made up of men who had served in the regular United States cavalry. Their halts as well as their charges were in accord with battle tactics. Some of the infantry movements were equally impressive, and the ensemble was so good that I would like to see the same director put on a war picture of historical stimulus and consequent higher suspense. No one cares at this stage of the game whether the hero marries the heroine or runs away with the cook. The main thing is the struggle.

I do not mean by "stale characters" that the performers were not up to their work. Ray Myers, William Clifford and Ethel Grandon utilized all the opportunity given them, both men shining in those scenes where fighting is going on, and all the cast doing well at critical moments.

The drama virtually ends with the fiercest kind of a hand-to-hand conflict between the blue and the gray soldiers, the most stirring scene of all and one of the best of the kind ever shown on the screen. The coward there atones in a tragic end for the weakness and fear displayed, and the final view of the battlefield is a lesson in itself, a vivid picture of the horrors of war. Through an accident of conflicting engagements and the kindness of Mr. Brandt, I saw the picture under unusual circumstances, in a special presentation before the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, and it was very enthusiastically applauded.

"SHYLOCK"

An Eclipse Feature.

GEORGE KLEINE will release on March 3, 1913, an Eclipse special feature, in two reels, entitled "Shylock," which is an adaptation from Shakespeare's famous drama, "The Merchant of Venice." Few of us are not more or less familiar with the story of the unfortunate merchant, and will be greatly interested to see it reproduced upon the screen.

After introducing the leading characters in costume, utilizing some very clever dissolving effects, the film opens, showing us the scene on the Rialto in Venice, where Bassanio is relating to his friend Antonio, the merchant, of his love for Portia, a rich heiress dwelling in Belmont. The story then progresses much the same as the original text, with several of the minor details, which would only tend to confuse those not very conversant with the story, eliminated.

The principal scenes have been admirably handled. The gorgeous interior of Portia's home, where the suitors come to try their fortune at the test for the hand of the beautiful heiress, is a picture of great magnificence, and is carried out with all the necessary dramatic effects. As will be remembered, according to her father's will, Portia must be won in the following manner: Each suitor must make his choice of one of three caskets of gold, of silver, and of lead. He that selects the one containing her portrait is to be rewarded with her hand in marriage. It is interesting to note the proud bearing and extreme confidence of the two haughty suitors, the Prince of Morocco and the Prince of Aragon, and their utter consternation when they in turn select the gold and silver caskets and discover their complete failure, as is the pleasure expressed by Portia when Bassanio, her favorite suitor, wisely selects the leaden casket, which proves to be the one containing her portrait. She congratulates her future husband with these words:

> "This house, these servants and this same myself
> Are yours, my Lord."

The famous trial scene marks the climax of the play, and is always thrilling, as few more dramatic situations in a play have ever been developed. Shylock's passionate hatred of all Christians has made him deaf to all pleas; he cannot be swerved from his determination to wreak vengeance upon Antonio in this opportunity. The climax is reached when the learned young doctor, with these words:

> "Take then thy bond, take thou thy pound of flesh;
> But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
> One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
> Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate

turns the tide of the case, which ends in the utter mortification of the Jew.

The part of Shylock is ably taken by Mr. Harry Baur, of the Athenee Theater of Paris. His interpretation of the role is somewhat different from those we have seen in America, inasmuch as he portrays a less dignified Jew, yet it is done with a remarkable skill, and shows what a finished actor he is. Mr. Joube takes the part of the unfortunate merchant. Miss Pepa Bonafe makes a beautiful and bewitching Portia. Mr. Harve, of the Odeon, portrays a gallant Bassanio.

GENERAL FILM PUBLICITY AND SALES COMPANY REORGANIZED.

The General Film Publicity and Sales Company has reorganized and the former Secretary and Director Henry W. Ebann is no longer connected with that firm. He has been succeeded by M. B. Barth as vice-president and treasurer. Mr. Edward Elsner was elected secretary and general director, H. A. Spanuth retaining the presidency. Mr. Elsner will have entire charge of the producing end of the business.

Dinner to King Baggot

Members of Screen Club Give a Testimonial to Their President at the Astor—Chest of Silver for Newlyweds.

THE members of the Screen Club on Tuesday evening, February 11, tendered a complimentary dinner to their president, King Baggot. Sharing honors with the founder of the Screen Club was his bride of a few weeks. The occasion was one to be remembered by those who were so fortunate as to be present. It was on a scale commensurate with the growing importance and dignity of the motion picture. A feature of the evening was the presentation to Mr. Baggot and his bride of a few weeks of a superb mahogany chest containing seven dozen pieces of sterling silver. It was the concrete expression of the regard, the affection, in which Mr. Baggot is held by his associates; it gave force and tangibility to the words of the speakers, all of whom praised the Screeners' president.

An announcement of deep interest to all in the picture industry, and perhaps of even greater concern to the millions who follow the silent drama, was made in the course of the evening. "I am leaving the Vitagraph for a vaudeville tour," said little Miss Florence Turner, in the course of her remarks. Picturegoers may take heart, however, for the screen is not permanently to lose the woman who has so steadily maintained her position as one of its greatest favorites throughout the last ten years. She desires a change of work.

KING BAGGOT
At His "Ain Fireside."

Present at the dinner were most of the film stars now in New York. Third Vice-President Arthur Johnson came over from Philadelphia, and was much in evidence during the evening. He disavowed the possession of any talent as an after-dinner speaker; he found pleasure in and created fun by suggesting to the toastmaster names of those of his friends whom he believed to be as inexpert as himself. Francis X. Bushman, a recent arrival in New York, received much attention. He was accompanied by Miss Turner. Seated with them were "Larry" Trimble and Courtenay Foote. "Little Mary," as charming as ever, garbed in simple costume, dropped in at the close of "The Good Little Devil," escorted by Owen Moore. Sam Speedon was on hand with his Vitagraph smile. From the Flatbush studio were also, among others, Earle Williams, Harry Morey, William Shea, Tefft Johnson, and Miss Baird. Herbert Prior, Mabelle Trunnelle, and William Wadsworth were among the representatives of the Edison studio. At the left of Carl Laemmle sat Jane Gale, the talented new leading woman of the guest of the evening. Herbert Brenon and William Robert Daly were in the party.

Others seen were Miss Florence Hackett, Al McGovern, Edgene Delespine, Irving Cummings, Oscar C. Apfel, "Billy" Quirk, Lee Beggs, Darwin Karr, Dave Thompson, Jay Hunt, Lawrence McGill, T. Hays Hunter, C. Jay Williams, and Albert W. Hale.

The general trade was represented among others by A. C. ("Doc") Willat, Pierce Kingsley, Calder Johnstone, Harry R. Raver, Hopp Hadley, George Terwilliger, Frank J. Carroll, Agnes Egan Cobb, Joseph Farnham, Charles Abrams, Arthur Blinkhorn, Ad Kessell, Joseph Miles, John B. Clymer, A. Warner, F. E. Holliday, Jacob Gerhardt, Joe Brandt, W. P. Milligan, T. H. Lewis, Ed Barry, Jules Bernstein and K. W. Linn.

John Bunny was toastmaster. It was a natural selection—not only by reason of his position as first vice-president, but also on account of his proven tact and executive capacity. It was 9 o'clock when Mr. Bunny called the Screeners gathered in the Belvidere on the roof of the Hotel Astor to be seated. In the party were 220, pretty evenly divided between the sexes. The menu was a novelty—a thirty-inch strip of raw film, artistically printed, and tied with ribbon.

At the close of the dinner there was a short cabaret entertainment. Then the toastmaster called on the "three Johnsons"—Arthur, Tefft and Calder. The first started to speak. The latter handed to him a great chest. The leading man from Lubinville, as he turned the key of the box, said to Mr. Baggot: "I don't know what it is," but as his gaze rested on the array of silver he turned to the gathering and added: "But it is fine."

Mr. Baggot, as the silver was placed in front of him, hesitated. "It is beautiful," he said. "Let me go for a little while," he added, when he found his voice. "Just let me look at this. Let my wife, too, look at it, so we may realize and know what friendship is."

Frank Bushman, a life Screener, made a spirited address and was closely followed. Speaking of the guest of the evening, he said: "I know I am expressing the feeling in every breast here to-night when I say that I hope his married life will be a peaceful, a successful, and a supremely happy one. He is a prince of a good fellow and a master of his craft. I can't say any more than that."

It was with deep feeling that Mr. Bunny introduced the next speaker. "I want to introduce to you a little woman who has earned the love, the respect, and the admiration not only of her fellow-players, not only of the audiences of America, but of the audiences of the world. Hard work has never deterred her. Applause, letters of thanks and congratulation and love and admiration, magazine articles, popularity, never turned her head. She is to-day what she was at the start—a dear, sweet little woman. It is with a feeling of affection that I present to you Miss Florence Turner."

That Mr. Bunny had touched a responsive chord in the hearts of his hearers was amply proved by the prolonged applause. The "Vitagraph Girl" was compelled to mount a chair so she could be seen. "I am quite overwhelmed," she said, "by Mr. Bunny's magnificent speech. I am not sure whether I am standing here or not. I want to thank him personally for his splendid remarks. I can only just hope I am worthy of them." Then followed the announcement of Miss Turner's vaudeville tour.

Mr. Baggot was the next speaker. He confided to his hearers that when he came in he had all prepared a speech in which he had been rehearsed by his wife all week, "but this bomb of friendship landed and took it away from me." He thanked his friends for their gift, and predicted for the Screen Club a success that will make it the greatest theatrical club in the world.

Carl Laemmle said that as between the guest and himself the relations of employed and employer did not obtain. "He is my friend," said the Universal's president; "I think the world of him, whether he is with me or not."

Joe Farnham was introduced by Mr. Bunny as "my hated rival." Matt Snyder in a half-humorous, half-serious speech made a hit with the diners. Other speakers were Tefft Johnson, "Billy" Quirk, Herbert Brenon, Herbert Prior, George Blaisdell, Ad Kessell, Arthur Blinkhorn, Calder Johnstone, "Doc" Willat, Worthy Butts, and William Robert Daly. The latter, with "Billy" Quirk, led the gathering in singing the Screen Club anthem.

MR. ABRAMS PUSHING SCREENERS' BALL.

Charles Abrams, chairman of the program committee for the Screen Club ball, which is to be held at Terrace Garden in April, has begun active work on the advertising end of his coming feature, and film men may expect a call from his representative.

Mr. Abrams is going to devote four or five pages to portraits of members. He requests those Screeners who have not already sent in their photos to attend to the matter at once. Mr. Abrams also is anxious to secure pictures of all the women photoplayers for publication in the program. He may be addressed at the Screen Club, 163 West Forty-fifth Street.

MR. LAYMAN BUYS STATE RIGHTS.

George Layman, a prominent exhibitor of Hartley, Iowa, and a member of the Iowa League, has just returned home from a visit in New York. While here he obtained the Iowa and Nebraska rights of "Lost Memory" and "Den of Lions," Great Northern features.

"Identical Identities" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

T. W. WHARTON, one of Essanay's Eastern producers, is to be congratulated for clever work in the comedy reel, "Identical Identities," which will be released Feb. 21. In this amusing and puzzling double impersonation by E. H. Calvert, who appears as the twin brothers, Andrew and Bill Brown, double exposure has been followed throughout without a hitch, and so accurately that one is unable to discover the trick by any telltale evidence in the film. We see Andrew and Bill playing their different roles and coming into close contact most of the time and, although our eyes convince us that Mr. Calvert is before us in both characters, we fail, mentally, to account for the strange phenomenon, unless acquainted with the imposture practiced by the camera.

It must be remembered that Mr. Calvert first appears in the part of Bill without interruption, while the entire negative is being taken, and that his action is confined to the right half section of the film by means of a mask on the camera lens; also that when he takes the part of Andrews afterwards, it is also played without interruption throughout the entire negative, the action being confined to the left half section of the film by means of a mask on the camera.

Scene from "Identical Identities" (Essanay).

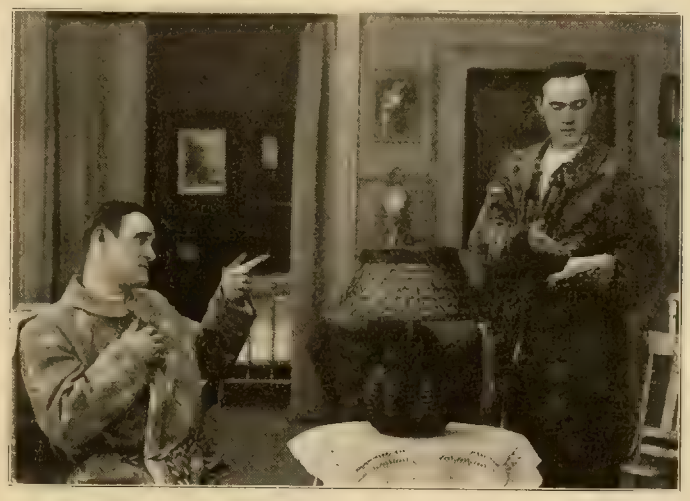
The action of Andrew is made to fit in with the action of Bill by a system of numbers employed by the producer and camera man which allows exactly for the intervals during which Bill is out of the scene or in it. In fact, while playing the part of Bill and addressing himself to Andrew, Mr. Calvert is not alone on the stage. Another actor, who is placed out of the camera's field by means of the mask, is assuming the part of Andrew. This enables Mr. Calvert to look in the proper direction and make his gestures correctly.

Mr. Calvert is happy in the twin roles. Bill is a sport, who knows more about ragtime than he does about hymn music. Andrew is a pious goody-goody, with a face long enough to take him to heaven. Mr. Calvert's versatility in presenting faithfully these widely different characters commands appreciation. The other characters, seven in number, have been well cast.

Bill and Andrew Brown, twin brothers, who are as much alike as two peas, live in the same apartments. Bill is first seen when enjoying himself in a club with several boon companions. He leans against a door and bedaubs his clothes with paint. The suit is called for at the brothers' apartments by a cleaner. Andrew, who is suffering from headache, requests Bill to telephone the Smythe family, who have asked him to call on church matters, that he is too ill to go. Andrew then retires.

Bill, ever ready to spring a joke, dresses in Andrew's clothes and calls upon the Smythes. He knows that Andrew is sweet on pretty Prudence Smythe and he wishes to know that young lady himself. Shortly after his arrival he is treated to water and sweet cake, and almost collapses from shock when he tastes the water. But this is not all. He is asked by Mr. Smythe to read a few chapters from the Bible, and when that task is over he is requested to play hymn tunes. The good people are horrified to hear their piano desecrated by ragtime, and he is sternly commanded to desist by papa Smythe. He pleads illness and bids a hurried good-bye.

Andrew, in the meantime, grows suspicious over Bill's absence. On investigation, he discovers that his clothes are gone. The cleaner, at this juncture, brings back Bill's suit. It is of sporty cut and pattern; but Andrew, in desperation, puts in on and sets out for the Smythes. On the way, he is met by some of Bill's care-free companions, who believe him to be Bill himself. They will not take his nay, and force him into the club, where he is obliged to drain several glasses of liquor. The result is a terrific headache which prevents him from calling on Prudence Smythe.



Scene from "Identical Identities" (Essanay).

The closing scenes show the brothers in their apartments. Bill is jubilant when he finds that the abstemious Andrew has fallen among the Philistines, and the final view shows both brothers asleep in separate beds. Over each bed we see a dissolving scene, giving the subject of each brother's dream, which, in the taking, required four exposures by the camera.

Exhibitors will recall "The Corsican Brothers" (Edison) and "The Three Valises" (Selig), films that also required trick photography similar to that used in the film just reviewed.

Beginning with January 28th, the picture men of San Francisco will make the price of admission 10 cents throughout the city. It is expected that the movement will extend to the other towns and cities of the State. An attempt will also be made to raise the price of admission in those houses showing vaudeville to 15 cents.

An Illinois newspaper, in an interview with Miss Mary Pickford, quotes "Little Mary" as saying that "this winter, while we are playing in New York, Mr. Belasco has promised me that I may work in the pictures sometimes, too. I love them—and I really don't think I want to get away from them entirely, ever." This is good news, if true.

For the second time in the history of moving pictures, the halls of legislation were invaded by a screen and a projector. Last August the annual encampment of the Michigan State Guard was filmed. Last week the resulting pictures were shown in the State House of Representatives to the legislators.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

IT is high time that film manufacturers should pay heed to the numerous protests throughout the country, from educators and others, against certain types of moving pictures. I cannot remember having ever before read so many adverse articles in newspapers along this line, and while many of these were unworthy of serious consideration because of their apparent vicious discrimination against the moving picture, yet that certain pictures invite criticism because of their unfitness for children to view is a charge that must be seriously considered and remedied.

Is it not a fact that too little heed is paid by some manufacturers to the uplift of the moving picture? Wild Western and other sensational films play too large a part in the present output. If the commercial side only is kept in view by a manufacturer, he has lost sight of the high mission of the moving picture—its great educational value. Indeed, I am convinced that the only successful way to combat the prevailing proneness in certain circles to belittle the picture is to make it more largely educational.

Exhibitors are primarily to blame because of the present scarcity of educational films. They are positively at the bottom of the trouble. There are too many unintelligent exhibitors. They could easily guide their patrons, in the matter of educational films, by selecting a good educational subject once in a while. They can build up a clientele from the most intelligent circles in this way, and the man or woman of average intelligence will learn to look forward with interest to the presentation of such subjects. The children also will be greatly benefited.

When a man of the standing of Prof. Allan Hoben, of the University of Chicago, denounces nickel shows as an influence for evil on the minds of children, one cannot pass his criticism as being unworthy of comment. On the contrary, it must receive earnest thought. At Handel Hall, before the Chicago branch of the National Story Tellers' League, Prof. Hoben recently said:

"A picture that looks ridiculous or amusing to an adult makes a powerful impression on the child. The adult sees the consequences of the acts transpiring on the screen, but the child sees the act itself. The child is entranced by the glory of the revolver, the prancing pony, and the buckskin leggins of the cowboy. The adult understands how much and how little such a career means.

"The nickel show teaches the child just what educators and fathers and mothers do not want the child to know. It teaches irreverence of all sorts and sets up false standards of success. The yellow newspaper and the cheap theater are guilty of the same faults as the nickel show in presenting false, unnatural situations and in making apparent virtues out of smartness, irreverence, and cunning."

Demoralized Booking in Cleveland Picture Theaters.

I learn through Mr. Von Harleman, business manager of the World's Chicago office, who stopped off at Cleveland on his way from New York to this city, that as many as 11 reels, and even 13 reels, are being offered in that city at an admission of 10 cents, on Sundays. These crimes against moving pictures are being committed at the Duchess Theater, a large dramatic house, which seats 1,400 people, and at another Sunday house.

Licensed service is being used in the Duchess, which runs pictures on Sundays only. Following is the list of subjects run at this house on one Sunday recently:

"Dark Town Duel" and "Timid Mary," split reel (Vitagraph).

"Copper Mines at Bingham" and "Suffragetter in Spite of Himself," split reel (Edison).

"Sand Hoppers" and "Between Two Girls," split reel (C. G. P. C.).

"Lake Geneva Camp of Y. M. C. A." and "The Office Boy's Birthday" (Edison).

"A Line of Peril" (Vitagraph).

"The Water Right War" (Kalem).

"Naughty Marietta" (Pathe).

"Days of '49" (Kalem).

"An Irish Girl's Love" (Selig).

"The Dynamiters" (Selig).

Here we have 14 subjects on a program, lasting about two hours and 45 minutes, of pictures only. It can be easily seen that this Sunday theater is a deadly menace to all the small, downtown picture theaters in Cleveland, as they depend largely on Sunday business for their profits. Furthermore, they run pictures every day in the week and the film exchange is dependent on them for its support and existence. Who can defend such exchange management, either on the ground of policy or business judgment?

Mr. Von Harleman was also advised that the Lake Shore Film Company, of Cleveland, furnishing independent service, supplies another house which runs pictures on Sundays only, as many as 13 reels for the program. This out Herods Herod. And yet, the booking of films is supposed to be conducted intelligently!

Final Disposition of Home Theater Collapse.

The council committee on buildings and city hall recently voted to eliminate all censure directed against Building Commissioner Henry Ericsson for "extreme negligence" in the report on the Home Theater collapse. The committee also voted to have the report read that "the responsibility primarily rests on David Saul Klafter, the supervising architect, and Raphael Goldstein, the owner."

In reply to a question from the chairman of the committee, Commissioner Ericsson stated that his first trouble with Klafter had been when the architect refused to put fireproof doors in a small theater, and had loudly declared in the building department offices that he "would get some one in the department who would let him put in wooden doors."

Before calling the vote on the exoneration of Mr. Ericsson, the chairman said:

"The Building Commissioners' office undoubtedly is one of the hardest worked in the city hall. Mr. Ericsson's first judgment was good, but he kept reversing himself. Letting the Home Theater remain open, after receiving two reports as to its danger, seems to me to be negligence in the extreme. If the roof had collapsed in the evening instead of the morning, Mr. Ericsson would have found himself in the very uncomfortable position of being in the Criminal Court charged with manslaughter. I am glad he is not."

The records of the State board of examiners of architects show that Klafter had been voted before it on three occasions for violations, and once fined $35 in a municipal court.

Dangerous Loft Theaters Closed.

An end has been put to the dangerous loft theater in Chicago. While sympathizing with the owners, it must be conceded, in all fairness, that they were a menace to the exhibiting of pictures in Chicago while they remained open.

Four of the houses closed were devoted to pictures and one, the La Salle, owned by the Chas. P. Taft estate, to the drama. The Schindler Theater, 1005 W. Huron; the Humboldt Theater, 851 W. Ohio; the Sittner, 235 W. North Ave., and the Iola, 1238 Milwaukee Ave., are the picture houses closed by the police on Wednesday, February 5.

Judge Lockwood Honore, of the Circuit Court, entered the formal order dissolving the injunction under which the Sittner, Iola and Humboldt have been operating since the passage of the ordinance last year. Commissioner Ericsson refused to stand responsible for further violations of that law, and no one else in the city administration would shoulder the responsibility for allowing any of the theaters to remain open.

The most serious effort to bring about a qualification of the order was made by the management of the La Salle. There "The Girl at the Gate" was playing its last week, and an informal understanding had existed whereby it was to be continued until Saturday night, February 8. The house then was to be closed for the repairs required and the show was to be put on the road.

Chicago Film Brevities.

A. MacArthur, Jr., who has conducted the business department of the Chicago office of the World for the last five months, left for New York on Monday, February 10, where he will resume his duties in the New York office. Mr. MacArthur became very popular with the large following of the World supporters in Chicago during his stay, and was given a hearty send-off. He has the best wishes of the Chicago staff.

G. P. Von Harleman, who has managed the Chicago business office of the World for several years, and who has had charge of the advertising department in the New York office for the past five months, returned to this city Saturday, February 8. He has taken up his former duties and is renewing his wide acquaintance in the city.

The Men's League of the Sunday Evening Club, this city, was entertained at a meeting Wednesday night, February 5, at the City Club by a travelogue, "Through Foreign Lands With a Kinetoscope." The exhibition was furnished through the courtesy of the Edison Company.

Charles E. Bell, owner of the Gaiety Theater, St. Paul, Minn., was a visitor at the World office last week. Mr. Bell reported a healthy condition of business in St. Paul.

C. Lang Cobb, of the Directors' Film Corporation, New York City, representing Ramo films, arrived in the city Friday, February 7. It was Mr. Cobb's intention to leave Chicago Monday evening, February 10, to take in St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver and Salt Lake City on his way to California, but he was attacked by la grippe and when seen Monday noon, the time of writing this letter, he thought it necessary to return to New York. Mr. Cobb is not in a serious condition, but does not feel up to resuming his journey West.

D. T. Hammond, of Chicago, is associated with Mr. Hannah and John Campbell, of this city, in constructing a circuit of six houses, all in Chicago. The project is backed by ample capital. It is the intention to use pictures exclusively in the new theaters.

Charles Rick, this city, is building a new house in Alabama City, Ala. It will be called the People's Family Theater, and will seat 350 people. The house will be ready for opening about March 1st.

* * *

A. Wilkus, owner of the Universal Theater, 1913 Van Buren Street, is building a new house at Ogden Avenue and Van Buren Street, and expects to complete it in May. Mr. Wilkus reports good business at the Universal.

Miss Sarah Colson, daughter of J. Colson, owner of the Arrow Theater, 1438 Fullerton Avenue, is the only licensed woman operator's apprentice in the city. She intends taking the examination for operator in a few months. Miss Colson is only 21 years old and has complete charge of the management of the Arrow. The Arrow seats about 300 people and uses licensed service. Illustrated and spot light singers are employed. Miss Colson was appointed financial secretary of Illinois branch, No. 2, M. P. E. L. of America, on Monday, January 3.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowery and Mrs. Sigmund Lubin of the Lubin Manufacturing Company passed through Chicago on Saturday, February 1st, on their way from French Lick to Philadelphia. The party spent two weeks at the springs.

AN EXHIBITOR'S CAMERA.

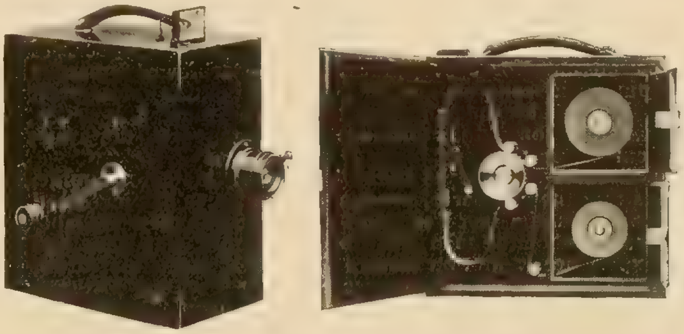
A Mechanically Perfect Instrument on a Small Scale Which Should Help Exhibitors to Fill Their Houses.

THERE has just arrived from Europe a little motion picture camera of considerable interest, a demonstration of which was made this week in New York. It is a motion picture camera that is thoroughly practical, but not so large or intricate as the type of camera regularly used by motion picture manufacturing concerns. This article is not a toy; it is an instrument that is the result of high skill in camera making, but simple in every way. This camera was perfected by the Williamson people of London, along lines suggested by Mr. Arthur G. Whyte, of the Whyte-Whitman Company, New York City.

For a number of years Mr. Whyte has been selling motion picture cameras for both professional and amateur use. There was need for some sort of a camera that could be rated somewhere between the professional and the amateur instrument; amateur in point of size, but professional in efficiency. No such camera had ever been known on the market nor seemed likely to be forthcoming until it behooved Mr. Whyte to take a steamer for Europe and enter into negotiations with the Williamson Company. The result was that they built this camera according to Mr. Whyte's suggestions, and the new article looks very good indeed. In every way it is capable of taking a picture equal to the regulation studio machine, but on account of its reduced size it will not hold quite as much film.

In appearance it is workmanlike and quite evidently the output of a real camera factory. The camera box is well made, bound in brass and finished in mahogany; the trimmings and gears are of the highest type of machine work. In general description it resembles in every way the regular large sized motion picture camera made by the Williamson Company. The principal difference between the two, besides the matter of size, is that the small camera has no dial to show the number of feet exposed and unexposed, and the focusing arrangement is not so elaborate as that of the larger machine. The magazines are smaller, having a capacity for one hundred feet of raw stock as against the two hundred and fifty foot capacity of the larger machine. The interior mechanism is simplified, there being only one sprocket, a large one which handles the film both ways; that is, it serves the purpose of an upper and lower sprocket. The intermittent movement is a claw or finger feed that acts separately from the sprocket. The camera has also a take-up and a professional range finder. The tripod is heavy enough for the general weight of the instrument and is provided with a tilting table for pointing the camera up or down, and also a panoramic device for following passing objects. The outfit besides being compact is extremely light in weight; about fifteen pounds. Already a number of them are in use by professional cameramen who have outside work to do where a light weight camera is advantageous. The outfit comes packed in two neat leather cases with plush lining. The tripod case is about the size of a golf bag and the camera case is similar to a reel box.



A negative produced with the "Compact Marvel," as this camera is termed, is exactly the same as that produced by the professional camera. The instrument is provided with a Bausch & Lomb Zeiss-Tessar lens with iris diaphram and a highly perfected time regulator. These lenses are first class in every particular. There are four magazines for raw stock which gives the camera a capacity of three hundred feet, using the odd box for take-up purposes.

This instrument properly used should be the means of providing many drawing cards for the theater that could not be otherwise obtained. There would be much drawing power, for instance, in local scenes such as employees leaving a factory, an Elks' parade, the laying of a corner stone, a baby show, a fire, or comedy pictures using local characters. There is no end to the amount of local interest that can be worked up with a camera of this kind and if the results are properly advertised they can be used to increase receipts immensely. In many cases the camera can be used profitably for advertising purposes by making pictures of some local industry and displaying them later at the theater for a price which would more than cover the cost of making the film. In addition to this there is also the possibility of occasionally filming a local event which would be of national importance. Such negatives could be sold to the larger film manufacturing concerns for general distribution at a very good price. It is estimated that a negative and one positive can be turned out by this camera at a cost of approximately nine cents per foot, including printing and developing.

WARNER'S FEATURES NOTES.

Announcement is made that very shortly Warner's Features will publish every two weeks a house organ, which will be sent to exhibitors.

Morris Spiegel, formerly in charge of the Buffalo office, has resigned.

Still prints have been received at Mr. Warner's office of the third feature of the Gene Gauntier Players. It is a story of a lumber camp.

The first feature of the Satax Company, of Austin, Texas, arrived in New York on the 14th.

Doings at Los Angeles

Extra People in Great Demand at Los Angeles—Pleasant Words for Gebhardt—News Briefs.

A SHORTAGE of available "extra people" to play soldiers, mobs, society groups, villagers and crowds generally, and of more experienced actors and actresses to enact minor roles in pictures is seriously embarrassing the many producing companies in this vicinity at the present time.

So serious has this shortage become—if it really is a shortage—that the producers have been compelled more or less to make their plans to suit each other. For example, it is no longer possible for a producer to decide arbitrarily that he will put on a scene calling for 400 or 500 extras on a given day. Before he can make preparations he must first ascertain whether some other producer has engaged all the available extras for that day.

Two causes seem to be at the bottom of this actor famine. One is that the number of producing companies has increased so rapidly in the last year that among them they are able to keep most of the men and women at work who have had any experience in motion pictures. Another is the increasing tendency on the part of the directors to produce big pictures. Two years ago a motion picture with 500 people in the cast was considered a great accomplishment. Nowadays it happens on an average once a week in Southern California. On a recent occasion four companies in one day used more than 1,500 extra people in scenes.

Of leading men and women, and actors and actresses for more important roles, there is no such shortage. There are few out of employment, it is true, but the rosters of all the companies are full and when, occasionally, some producer organizes a new company, the members are engaged and brought on from the East.

When Wilfred Lucas, a new Universal director, arrived here from New York last week he brought the major part of a company with him. In the party were Bess Meredith, leading woman; Harry Fisher, Jr., juvenile, and Lucille Ward and Chance Ward, characters. Lucas has finished his first picture, which is a drama called "Happy Go Lucky Pete."

Of all the motion picture "foci" in Los Angeles that of the Universal group is the busiest, probably because it is the largest. David Wall, one of the more recent directors, has been making an unusual success of comedies. He has been putting on a string of darkey stories and is developing a valuable vein of real humor.

Phillips Smalley and his wife, Lois Weber, have been devoting their attention to romantic drama of the quiet idyllic type. Their latest, called "Troubled Waters," seems to have made a deep impression upon those who witnessed the studio run. It will be a Rex release.

After weeks of earnest argument and prayerful conference with General Manager Kennedy, Richard Willis and James Dayton, the two Universal photoplay editors, induced him to build them a smart looking new cottage at Oak Crest, to be used as an office. Now they wish they had remained in their old "shack." No sooner had the carpenters left than the directors arrived. They sized it up from different angles, looked wise and departed. The next day Al Christie showed up with a company and staged a scene in front of it. The same afternoon another director turned up. Day after day they have been taking turns and meanwhile Willis and Dayton have been prisoners for, of course, they are not permitted to walk out of the front door into the middle of a scene. At this writing they are planning to move their effects down to one of the big stages which, they say, the directors never seem to use since the sanctum was completed.

Kennedy ordered a new stage at the Hollywood studio this week and by putting on an extra force of men had it finished in three days. It is 75 by 135 feet in dimensions and the largest at the studio. The really big stages are at Oak Crest. It will hereafter be possible for seven separate companies to work simultaneously on interiors at the studio. Further accommodations are being provided in the way of dressing rooms and a larger property room.

H. Matthews, one of the Powers directors, is working on a line of children's stories—stories about children as well as for children. There seems to be a tendency on the part of the directors, where there are so many of them, to fall into lines that catch their fancy, and it seems not at all a bad idea, for a man always produces the best results when he is doing what he enjoys most.

David Horsley, treasurer and member of the board of directors of the Universal company, is still in Los Angeles. He has been here two weeks, but he has not become accustomed to the immensity of the plant. When he was last here the Universal possessed only one small office and a couple of stages in Hollywood.

"Brother Against Brother" will probably be the title of a two-reel feature which will soon be released under the Bison brand. The fact that Frank Ford is making it would indicate that it is a Civil War picture if the name were not enough.

The Most Perfect Indian Type.

The most perfect Indian type in the world is not an Indian at all, but an American, according to Anson Dudley Whittier, a California sculptor who has been in Los Angeles recently. George Gebhardt, Jr., who for more than a year has played all the Indian leads in the Pathe releases made at the West Coast studio in this city, is the ideal Indian type in the opinion of Mr. Whittier, who was so impressed with him that he has carved a bust of him.

Gebhardt's characteristic Indian features are familiar to motion picture patrons all over the world. Before he joined the Pathe company he was identified with the Kalem, Edison, Biograph, Bison and Lux. He has been a director as well as an author and has played in many photoplays of his own creation.

Incidentally a local company is now being formed to manufacture and distribute miniature copies of the Whittier bust. The plan is to offer them to exhibitors throughout the world to be given as prizes to patrons of the theater.

Sensational Incident Filmed.

The Ocean-to-Ocean Motion Picture Company, of this city, has been making a drama out of the sensational act of Carl Warr, an irresponsible crank who recently created a few moments of intense excitement by walking into the Central police station in this city carrying a box loaded with several pounds of highest power dynamite and an automatic firing device planned to operate if he removed his hand from the box. For two hours he sat there waiting for the police to carry out his demand that the president of the Southern Pacific railroad be brought into his presence. Two detectives finally slipped behind him, slugged him into unconsciousness and tearing the box out of his clutches threw it into the street, where it was kicked to pieces before the burning fuse could reach the charge.

Warr was tried in the Superior Court and last week was convicted and sentenced to twenty years' confinement. Immediately after the sentence was passed the motion picture company arranged with Warr, the other actors in the strange melodrama and the authorities, and the whole scene was re-enacted except that the box contained no dynamite the second time. There may be some people who think pictures of this kind do credit to the motion picture industry.

News Briefs.

Mary Charleson, one of the particular stars of the Western Vitagraph company, is on leave of absence this week visiting friends in San Francisco. In her absence Jean Hathaway, formerly of the Bison company, has been working in one of Director Sturgeon's pictures. Sturgeon is getting ready for another special effort which will feature Anne Schaefer and Laura Oakley in another "out of the ordinary" story.

Frank Richardson, known to the theatrical and motion picture world as "Daddy" Richardson, has just died of old age at Murrieta Springs, a health resort near Los Angeles. He had been an actor and manager practically all his life and had friends all over the world. In late years he followed the universal impulse and worked in pictures. For the last six years he had been identified with the Selig Company. Among other things he was known as the most expert stage coach driver in the business. The funeral was conducted by the T. M. A. and the Eagles. P. M. POWELL.

WE LEAD.

Official statistics are given out showing that America is the greatest producer of moving picture films in the world. No less a number than eleven thousand miles of films were exported from this country last year. When one considers the stupendous work connected with this production, adding the home consumption, one must begin to realize the tremendous nature, industrial and commercial, of the moving picture business. The new and great openings now made in all literary, art and science circles, commanding the activities of people in all classes of life, give evidence of one of the most extensive undertakings in the world, in which America takes the first place. May it also prove that this country, besides being the leader, may also be the example in all that is good and best.

The Picture in the Pulpit.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

THE Y. M. C. A. at Williamsport, Pa., has installed a projecting machine and for several Sunday afternoons has been using the picture as a regular part of its Sunday afternoon services. The plan has been under discussion for some time and a regular program has been mapped out alternating one Sunday of five reels on one subject with one Sunday of different pictures on religious topics. The pictures are interspersed with stereopticon views of related subjects and short talks and the singing of hymns and religious songs. We have not yet learned whether or not the hymns and songs are illustrated but if they are not we would suggest that a judicious use of such illustrations alternating with the verses of the hymns has been tried already with success in several places. Another innovation in the services which have hitherto been restricted to men has been the admission of women to the gallery whenever the pictures are run.

Picture Preaching in Australia.

We have just received a copy of The Photoplay, a weekly periodical, published in Sydney, Australia, by the Photo-play Publishing Company, which contains an article by Frank Lloyd on the religious use of the pictures in Australia and their value as a universal teaching tool, which will be interesting and helpful to every one engaged in this kind of work and we are therefore quoting below the important paragraphs.

> On Sunday evening last, the Rev. F. B. Cowling, of the Woollahra Congregational Church, introduced the biograph into the service. On behalf of the great moving picture industry, we extend our heartiest congratulations to the reverend gentleman for his enterprise and broadness of mind, and trust that his excellent example may be followed by other denominations.
> The motion picture has so rapidly developed in its importance that it has become a potent factor in the moral welfare of the people. There are unlimited ways by which the cinematograph, working in co-operation with the church, may become a universal benefactor in bringing the masses to a true knowledge of the great lessons contained in the Scriptures, and by which it may become a real and lasting power for good in depicting episodes recorded in Biblical history in an impressive and lasting manner. However hardened a man may be in vice, however wilfully he may have given way, there always remains in his mind a moral gleam which is capable of developing into a better conception of duty towards God and towards those who should be dear to him, and it is impossible to over-rate the great power that the cinematograph wields in presenting the great moral teachings of our Saviour.
> In other parts of the world a wide disposition is rapidly becoming manifested to lay the cinematograph under contribution for religious teaching, and Rev. F. B. Cowling deserves great praise as the pioneer in this respect in Australia. It is just such men that we need in the development of the motion picture to its highest destiny. The great Biblical masterpieces are capable of creating as much religious enthusiasm, and true enthusiasm at that, as the majority of sermons. In the many magnificent Scriptural reproductions, the various scenes of the life of the Saviour are so vividly depicted that one easily figures to oneself the actual occurrences as described in the Bible. The most eloquent of clergymen could hardly hope to bring these scenes so vividly to the mind, and this fact has been acknowledged by many of the most noted workers in the holy cause.
> The universality of the picture is another strong power in its favor. All preachers are not equally capable, effective or successful; the picture obtains the same results everywhere in a thousand places at the same time, so that its results are equivalent with its scope. Thus it stands beyond a doubt that there are occasions—and they are many—in which the picture excels as a preacher. To judge by results is at present premature, but if a knowledge of past efforts in successful teaching and convincing people is any gauge, there can be no doubt that the moving picture cannot fail to be a most powerful agency for good.

The Church and the Child in Denver.

The Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception (Roman Catholic) in Denver, Col., has installed a projection machine in their old chapel on Logan Avenue, which is being remodeled into a miniature theater that is to be up to date in every respect as regards its furniture and apparatus. The intention is to give regular exhibitions of moving pictures for children and plays for adults. In telling the reporter of the Stirling (Col.) "Advocate" about the project, the Reverend Hugh McMenamin, who has charge of the work, said: "Our intention in having the theater is to keep our school children here if possible, instead of having them running down on Curtis Street. In a number of the downtown theaters there are many questionable pictures shown, which, while they are all right for inspection by adults, are by no manner of means the proper kind of thing to be shown to children. We have no intention of in any way trying to compete with the picture or legitimate theaters in the city, but we believe that children should be allowed and have the opportunity of seeing educating and uplifting pictures and we intend to provide a place where parents can be certain that their children will be enabled to see that kind and nothing else. As to the dramatic use of the theater, it is our intention to give operettas and plays for the entertainment of the members of the church. An orchestra of twelve pieces has been organized from among the members of the parochial high school and we have already given one successful operetta."

Two Good Pulpit Features.

In "Parsifal," a three-reel feature lately released by the Ambrosio Company, every religious worker can find the material for half a dozen good sermons. The story is clearly and cleanly told, the antiquarian and ecclesiastical details are accurately and artistically handled, while the legend of the Sang Grail is represented in such a way that it is not only easily understandable by, but also very attractive to the young. We know of nothing better for a sermon on St. James's definition of pure and unspotted religion as keeping oneself unspotted from the world, or for giving boys especially, a high, noble and Christian ideal of living. We would also like to call attention to the great reverence with which the company has handled perhaps the most sacred of all themes in the Christian religion, namely, the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. The picture should be a convincing proof to every one that the moving picture can be just as helpful and reverent a teacher of the holiest things of religion as any of the works of the great masters of art.

Another most excellent picture for religious work is Tolstoi's "Resurrection," by the Masko Film Company, which is in some respects an almost perfect picture. The subject is not as great as that of other feature films perhaps, but unlike these last which have almost always been spoiled by an undue prominence given to the star and a striving after effect, the "Resurrection" has been treated simply as a story depending for its effect on the application of certain Biblical texts to the lives of the principal characters. The peculiar views of Tolstoi have been entirely eliminated from the scenario and the scriptural passages have been used in their universally received interpretations. As a photoplay the picture is the most technically correct production we have yet seen and as a feature for religious work we know of none to equal it.

November Photoplay Index.

We have been very much encouraged by the many cordial letters of thanks and inquiry that have been coming into us since we began publishing the classified lists of religious photoplays in this department. Several of the suggestions made in regard to the lists are excellent and in this present catalogue we have adopted two of them, namely, the giving of the date of release and the page of the World that contains the synopsis. At the request of a number of regular exhibitors and religious and social workers we are including the so-called educationals as well as the religious photoplays.

A Sane Criticism.

"The American Catholic," the authoritative church paper of the so-called "high church" school of theology in the Protestant Episcopal Church, has among its editorials in its issue for December last the following two paragraphs, which not only contain a valuable and very interesting news item, but also voices the opinion of the most scholarly and experienced religious teachers in the country. The "account of what has already been done in the way of producing moving pictures of events in the Life of our Lord," which the paper refers to as being found on another page of the same issue, is a detailed criticism of Kalem's "From the Manger to the Cross," which is copied from the London "Church Times," the authoritative organ and ecclesiastical paper of the Church of England and of Oxford university theology. The conclusions of the criticism are practically the same as those of the paragraphs given below and altho it is too long for repetition here, it is the finest tribute of real appreciation of the value of religious moving pictures and, in particular, of the Kalem work, that has yet appeared anywhere.

> The news that the Ober-Ammergau performers have consented to act their sacred play in the Holy Land for cinematographic purposes will come with something of a shock to a good many people but after all it is probably the best thing that could happen. On another page will be found an account of what has already been done in the way of producing moving pictures of events in the Life of our Lord. In all probability these exhibitions will be extremely popular, and it is possible, even though one's mind revolts against the whole thing, that it may lead to a revival of religion. Anyhow the thing is done, and under these circumstances it is thought by many religious people that it will be much better to have films in use that are really devotional, in place of the many so-called religious films which are already being exhibited in Europe. The best of these is the one criticised on another page; but we may hope that the result of the Ober-Ammergau performance will be to produce a set of pictures which at least will be free from all objectionable details.
> It must not be thought that these films will appeal only to Protestants. Eight years ago we spent Easter at Rome. It was in the early days of the moving picture show, but already the Passion of our Lord had been depicted, and this cinematographic representation was so popular with the poor people that the exhibition was not only held continuously through Holy Week, but was continued even on Easter Day and afterwards.

It should be noted that in the above paragraphs the word "protestants" in not intended to include either the Church of England or the Protestant Episcopal Church in this country, as the theological stand of the paper is that these like the Greek and Roman churches are catholic, not protestant.

OBSERVATIONS
BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

A STATEMENT was made by a keen observer in the motion picture field the other day that there is a concerted movement on the part of the higher priced vaudeville trust to try and cripple the motion picture industry by "kidnapping" the stars and favorite performers. The statement is given for what it is worth. Some people ridicule it but recent developments indicate that it is some distance away from an improbability. The informant says the vaudeville managers figure that the popularity attained by motion pictures has been won by the personality of certain players and that if the trust can absorb this element of the picture business it will soon be on the decline.

There are some ridiculous features about the affair. The statement of the informant may, or may not, be so, but if it has a foundation and the vaudeville managers really think that by drawing the players from the studios they can cripple the motion picture manufacturers they are laboring under a most absurd delusion. It is true that the personality of some players has been an important factor in the attainment of the popularity and success achieved by the photoplays but, after all, "what's in a name?" Time and again manufacturers have lost favorite players, but they are still in business—in fact doing more business than before—because the pictures themselves have constantly increased in drawing power, irrespective of the popularity of individuals taking part in them.

And, after all, perhaps the vaudeville managers are not working as hard to get hold of the "movey stars" as the latter are desirous of being "kidnapped." Actors and actresses have always been and always will be of a roaming disposition. A desire to achieve new triumphs in new fields has made them so. One very popular photoplayer recently stated that, in spite of the great pleasure afforded by becoming a favorite with the masses, the congeniality that enters into life in the picture studios, the warm, home-like friendships that are made there, and in spite of the fact that the work is lighter and more congenial than stage work, particularly on the road, there is a time when the best of the players feel that they are gradually becoming automatons and are allowing golden opportunities to gain fame and fortunes in new fields to slip by. At some time or other the call comes to all of them and if they fail to respond frequently find themselves becoming restless, discontented, and sometimes indifferent.

Within the next few months we may expect to see many new faces in nearly all the motion picture studios where favorites have reigned. Several have already heeded the call and are on the move. Some are going on the higher priced vaudeville circuits and others have flattering offers from the larger photoplay houses and this exodus from the studios is not entirely, if at all, due to a policy of destruction on the part of the vaudeville trust, nor is it due to anything of an unpleasant nature that has arisen between the players and their employers. It is purely a business proposition. The players feel that the new step is to advancement in the world of theatricals and of course, more money. All of us who remain identified with the photoplay field will regret to see them go on account of the associations that have been made, and none of us will withhold an earnest wish for their welfare. At the same time there is no occasion for any of us to become apprehensive of the effect of their departure upon the motion picture business. There is a vast quantity of untried talent knocking at every studio door in the country and, while the achievements of the old favorites will keep them affectionately in our memories, there is abundant material at hand to keep the good work agoing with the same gratifying success that has been acquired in the past.

A gentleman prominently identified with one of the best known studios, when asked if he had heard of any conspiracy to take favorites away from the companies making photoplays, said, all that had come to his hearing were mere conjectures. "Considerable talk has been created lately by rumors of so many photoplayers going into the regular field. The unusual number turning in that direction has drawn more attention to the movement than has been given to similar steps in the past and exaggerated conclusions have been drawn by some people. I have not heard of any manager making overtures to bring about a breach of contract between players and the picture people. If I had perhaps I would be disposed to believe that there was something in the conspiracy talk."

According to reports from outlying districts the reserve list of vaudeville performers for motion picture theaters is not as encouraging as the list of people for studio work. I met the other day the manager of a picture house in a town located about fifty miles from this city. Upon being asked the object of his visit to the city the manager stated that he was on his way to find out what some booking agents looked like. "We run vaudeville on certain nights," he said "and made arrangements with an agent in this city for the talent. The kind of stuff we have been getting makes me believe that either the bookers are a first class grade of green goods men, or there is an awful scarcity of performers that are worthy of the name. The motion picture vaudeville deserves more censorship by a large margin, in my opinion, than the pictures do. On our last vaudeville night a woman who looked like an escaped inmate from some old people's home appeared at the hall with her outfit packed in a bag little larger than a good-sized card case. She announced that she was the vaudeville attraction assigned to us for the night, but she did not fill the assignment. The size of her outfit aroused our suspicions, but what followed decided the fate of the booking. Pete Sweeney was in the wing ready to announce the vaudeville act as soon as the screen would be hoisted. The "star" of the night approached him and, in a nervous, impetuous way made known to Sweeney that she was very thirsty. 'I positively cannot go on,' said she, 'until I have a drink of water—or something.' Sweeney was on the job and led the woman to a hydrant at the rear of the stage. As he handed her a glass of water she hestitated in taking it at the same time saying 'where us vodevil people appear the managers, or somebody else, generally offer us some wine.' 'Well,' said Sweeney in a matter-of-fact tone, 'they don't generally get none here.' When I heard of the incident I closed the act and continued the pictures for the night. How an agent can have the nerve to send out highbinders of that character and expect to continue doing business is beyond my conception. It is a good way to kill the picture business. I have never known of a performer of that character having an act of merit."

A booking agent to whose attention this case was called said: "Such incidents must not be associated with the regular vaudeville supplied motion picture houses, which in many respects equal some of the best acts offered on the higher priced circuits. A cheap-skate manager must expect attractions of a similar character. If his business falls off he has only his own policy to blame. He offers from $8 to $10 for an act for one night, railroad and hotel included, and he never fails to remind you that he does not care whether it is a single or a double act so long as it is good. Say the return railroad fare is but two or three dollars and the hotel only one dollar, what has the performer got left after paying the agent's commission? The only display of stupendous nerve in such matters is on the part of the manager of shrunken principles who aspires to figure in any part of the amusement field. They are responsible for the keeping of such people as they complain of on the lists and if their policy is the same with the pictures it would be far better that they get out altogether."

All must concede that rank vaudeville will kill any house, but good pictures will draw good money if they have a good manager behind them. The same fate must be expected of exhibition houses conducted on penurious policies as would be looked for with respect to producing houses operated on a similar basis.

ESSANAY PICTURES MANAGER DAVIS.

A banquet was given in honor of Mr. Will J. Davis, manager of the Illinois Theater, by Chicago theatrical managers last Thursday evening. Previous to the most notable affair the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., made motion pictures of Mr. Davis and a few of his esteemed friends. At the banquet the pictures were thrown on the screen and were indeed a great pleasure and surprise to the attending guests. Mr. George K. Spoor and Theodore Wharton attended. The affair was one of utter enjoyment.

C. W. Midgley, Exhibitor of Today.

Visits New York to Get the Best Equipment for His New $150,000 Picture Theater in Salt Lake City.

By George Blaisdell.

THERE dropped in at the World office one day last week a man from out West—to be precise, Salt Lake City. Surely that's far enough from Broadway to be called West. Our visitor is of the new type of picture exhibitor, the man not alone of advanced ideas, but of advancing as well. He surely made a hit with those of the crew who were at the time on deck.

C. W. Midgley is the general manager of the Liberty Theater Company. He has had wide experience in the field of amusements. Consequently he understands the art of giving the people—the thoughtful people—what they want in the way of entertainment. Mr. Midgley has radical opinions about conducting a house for the exhibition of motion pictures. It is not difficult to gather from his conversation that he feels the West has studied the problems of management to better advantage than has the East. Take, for instance, the matter of projection. In the plans for the hundred-and-fifty-thousand-dollar house which Mr. Midgley's company is erecting in Salt Lake City the initial nut to be cracked was the projection booth. "We located that first," said the Liberty's general manager; "then we planned the house around it." At first sight this may seem like the tail wagging the dog, but not so in Mr. Midgley's eyes. "What is more important," he pertinently asks, "than proper projection?"

C. W. Midgley.

Unfolding a roll of blue-prints, the man from Utah showed how he could drive a horizontal ray from his lens to the center of his big curtain, 85 feet away. The booth is at the foot of the balcony slope. The screen is in a deep shadow box. By the way, "screen" or "curtain" as just used is a misnomer. The pictures are to be thrown on the wall, sufficiently concaved to prevent detortion of the figures to those on side seats. The orchestra leader faces the pictures. The orchestra is faced away from them and toward the house. Its members will work inside a shell-shaped structure; thus no lights will be thrown toward the shadow box. Mr. Midgley is an enthusiast on the subject of orchestral music as an accompaniment to pictures. In his present Salt Lake house he has ten of the best musicians of the city. The leader, he says, is the best of the local talent.

Mr. Midgley has visited the prominent film men during his visit to New York and is in thorough touch with general conditions. As he is a user of licensed service, naturally he has given most attention to matters concerned with that section of the industry. Mr. Midgley has no hesitation in saying he believes there is room for improvement in the quality of output. He says that while some manufacturers have gone ahead, have progressed, others have not. "In my city," he said, "you know we cater to all classes. We have the very rich for regular patrons as well as those possessing less of the world's goods. We have to depend in a city of a hundred thousand population on our own; there are few transients to draw from. This means we must have the best program we can get. I am a believer in consecutive runs of two or more days for features, as this gives opportunity for individual advertising—for surely the commendation by patrons to their friends is the most effective agent of publicity." Mr. Midgley's present program is unique—three changes weekly; five reels, all first-runs.

The Liberty Theater, Salt Lake City.

"The Liberty Theater Company, of Salt Lake City, is now erecting what will possibly be the largest—certainly one of the greatest—amusement houses devoted exclusively to motion pictures in America, if not in the world," said Mr. Midgley in the course of a chat. "It will have a seating capacity of 3,000. It will have every known appliance for insuring the safety, comfort and convenience of its patrons. A large pipe organ has been purchased. There will be an orchestra of sixteen pieces, which will play the pictures in detail. It is the intention to put on a motion picture entertainment that has never been equaled in the business.

"While Salt Lake City is a small place compared with the big cities, the Libery Company, with its present theaters, which are in themselves the equal of any in the country, has built up a clientele composed of the very best people. The audiences will size up with those patronizing the best two-dollar shows, and the general impression is in Salt Lake City that the motion picture business is fast becoming the popular form of amusement for all classes.

"Our new house will be thrown open to the public about the first of May. I am now in New York contracting for different equipment. We will put in one of the latest motor generators, with a capacity of 100 amperes. As this will be a very large house, it will require a screen much larger than ordinary—21 by 24 feet—and necessarily much stronger light. The dimensions of the theater will be 100 feet wide by 165 feet in length. It will contain 2,000 seats on the main floor, and a shallow balcony will carry 1,000 seats. The building will be devoted entirely to the showing of pictures, there being no other rooms or any stores.

"I think that our company, in the erection of this new house, is showing its faith in the future of motion pictures. I think also our action shows our belief that the day of vaudeville in pictures is gone. There will be no stage. We expect to charge an admission—providing we can get the right kind of pictures, providing the manufacturers will produce stuff of merit—of from 10 to 25 cents. We believe that the ultimate success of the motion picture business as an industry depends entirely on whether the manufacturers can see that quality is the mainstay of the proposition. We believe that the public can be educated to pay an admission that will justify the exhibitor in paying the manufacturers through their exchanges a greatly advanced price for film, which should enable the manufacturers to produce better pictures."

Daniel Frohman Visits World Staff.

Distinguished Theatrical Man Recalls Early Newspaper Experiences—Talks Interestingly of the Silent Drama.

THE staff of the Moving Picture World received a most pleasant call recently from Daniel Frohman, managing director of the Famous Players. Mr. Frohman's first remark indicated that in a newspaper office he was on familiar ground. He said it carried him back to his early days in Newspaper Row. He spoke in reminiscent vein of his experiences with the unappreciative copy reader—the tyrant of the blue pencil. Among his duties in those youthful days was the copying of Horace Greeley's manuscript—the illegibility of which is to-day, more than forty years after the death of the great editor, well known of all men having to do with the making of newspapers.

The veteran theatrical manager talked most interestingly of the filming of "The Prisoner of Zenda," in which James K. Hackett is starred, and, by the way, the first picture in the making of which Mr. Frohman has taken an active part. The initial appearance of the stage players before the camera was not without some evidenee of nervousness, Mr. Frohman said; this, however, was very soon overcome. The greatest fear of the players was in the possibility of the development of "static" and the liability of a "retake." Referring to this ever-present menace to the producer, Mr. Frohman spoke of one scene in which Mr. Hackett had done particularly strong work. "I have never seen him do anything quite like it," said the managing director; "we were all under its spell. The particular scene was where the king recovers from the effects of the drug administered to him on the day before his intended departure for the coronation. Mr. Hackett was portraying the rage and despair of the monarch when, a prisoner in the dungeon of Zenda, he realized he could not be in Strelsau on the great day. At the conclusion of the scene, Mr. Porter requested Mr. Hacket to wait just a few minutes until he examined the film. When he returned from the dark room with word that the scene would have to be made over the despair of the actor was genuine."

Mr. Frohman told of the visits to the Famous Players studio of well-known persons and of the fascination of the screen and of screen work upon all who came under the lure of the silent drama. Prominent among these have been Kate Douglass Wiggin and Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Mr. Frohman contrasted the method of writing plays for the stage and for the screen. He spoke of the marked difference between the two forms of dramatization—how the playwright could more nearly follow the path of the novelist, of the advantage of the former by reason of the opportunities for verbal explanation of minor factors in a story. On the other hand, if as a general rule it be essential in a photodrama to outline the points of a plot in sequence, in chronological order, there is the absence of the physical limitations of the stage and, also, there are the almost boundless possibilities of portraying to the eye real life in real surroundings—of to-day or of another day.

MOVING PICTURES INSPIRE A SCULPTOR.

Carlo Romanelli, a talented young sculptor who has made Chicago his home, paid a high tribute to moving pictures the other day. There was an exhibit of painting and statuary in the Art Institute recently, under the auspices of the Municipal Art League of Chicago, 263 paintings and 69 pieces of statuary being on exhibition. Medals and prizes were awarded, and among those honored was Signor Romanelli, whose early studies were made in Florence and Paris and whose studio at present is in the stockyards district of Chicago.

Romanelli's realism, as revealed in his work, has gained for him the sobriquet, "The Inspired," and he traces his inspiration to the American moving picture show. The pictures have given him his "touch," he says. The bronze group which won a medal for Romanelli shows a cowboy in the act of bulldogging a steer, from the back of a galloping horse, and the film in which he saw the picture shows scenes on the Diamond S Ranch, as produced by the Selig Polyscope Co.

"The picture show gave me all the idea I ever had for that group," says Romanelli. "I was never on an American ranch in my life; I have never seen a cowboy; I have never seen a steer, except in the stockyards of Chicago. Your picture show then is the great school for the artist, the sculptor. It serves a higher purpose than to amuse and entertain. It instructs; it inspires!

"I am not of that class of artists who rail and rave against institutions of the rank and file, who cannot be artists. I can breathe the air breathed by the latter and breathe the inspiration and knowledge. For days and weeks I have gone and watched pictures of Western life.

"I wanted to 'do' Western life, and could not go west, so I used my wits. I would sit for hours, seeing one reel of Western drama pictures run over and over again; I would study each infinitesimal detail, until I could fully absorb the atmosphere of the ranch.

"I feel that I have become thoroughly immersed in the spirit and traditions of the glorious American West. I feel a comradeship with its people. To quote Kipling, I fancy that I have 'eaten their bread and their salt; I have drunk their water and wine.'

"Inspiration is not the gift of the gods that some think. It consists mainly of work and application."

BIG FILM SERVICE CONTRACT.

The firms of Moss & Brill and Cunningham & Fluegelman have secured from the Kinemacolor Company of America the exclusive right to present natural-color motion pictures for one year in the Boroughs of Manhattan, the Bronx, and Brooklyn, with the exception of the territory in Manhattan bounded on the North by Fifty-ninth street and on the South by Fourteenth street. The consideration involved is $250,000, and the contract calls for a three-reel service changed twice a week. The territory between Fourteenth and Fifty-ninth streets, Manhattan, has Kinemacolor at William Morris' Wonderland and at the Carnegie Lyceum, the first mentioned showing the regular Kinemacolor service of comedies, dramas, educational, etc., and the Carnegie Lyceum showing "The Making of the Panama Canal" and "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War." A special stipulation in the contract permits the Kinemacolor Company of America to continue service to the Children's Theater, on top of the Century Theater at Sixty-second street and Central Park West.

Until very recently the Kinemacolor Company of America made no efforts to extend its film service, feeling it best to wait until it was fully prepared. The Kinemacolor organization has been rapidly increased. Speaking of the steps taken to handle the rush of new business, Henry J. Brock, president of the Kinemacolor Company of America, said:

"Already we have opened branch offices at Cincinnati and Boston and will follow these with offices at Chicago and St. Louis, and so on until the entire country is covered. Each branch office will carry a complete duplicate stock of all Kinemacolor reels, including dramas, comedies, travel and educational; in fact, a duplicate of everything made by the Kinemacolor Company of America and a duplicate of everything made by the Natural Color Kinematograph Company, Ltd., of England, which will appeal to American audiences. We now have five companies in California producing plays, and the Kinemacolor fashion films, taken in New York and showing the latest Parisian styles months in advance, has proved unusually strong with exhibitors. Of our educational and travel reels I need hardly speak. I cannot help, however, a reference to the business done at the Carngie Lyceum, where our films of 'The Making of the Panama Canal' and 'Actual Scenes of the Balkan War' for the past six weeks have been playing daily at prices of from 25 cents to $1.50, and, doing a good business at the start, have increased that business each week until it has got to the point where many dollars are turned away from the box office each week because we haven't sufficient seating capacity."

STATISTICS FROM MINNEAPOLIS.

The Minneapolis Tribune has made a study of motion pictures in its city and has gathered statistics that are as interesting as they are unusual. Of 10,000 families reported on, it is learned that 6,653 send members to the shows. One-third of the persons who go attend as often as once a week. Each family spends on an average $7.50 yearly. In one section of the city all but 28 of 345 families are patrons of the shows. There are 7,000 persons who go oftener than twice a week. More than three-fifths of those who attend from families are adults. When it is considered that the attendants not included in families are bound to be adults it is easy to see that the proportion of children is very much reduced.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

The Vitagraph Booklet.

If you are a licensed exhibitor probably you've seen one of the booklets "How and Where Motion Pictures Are Made by the Vitagraph Company of America," which is a sufficiently long title to serve an encyclopedia. If you have not, you should get one and consider the usefulness of the booklet for a souvenir. The cost is rather high for a twenty-four page book, ten cents each when purchased in lots of 25 at a time, but by using the coupon system for dull days it can be accomplished and is right in line with the attraction. It is lavishly illustrated and describes clearly, if not in extenso, the various processes through which the film must pass. With unusual good taste there is a notable absence of brag; indeed modesty seems to be carried to the other extreme, but it is a useful booklet that will be held and prized and a more attractive offering than spoons or similar offerings.

A Wall Calendar.

S. E. Wall sends in a calendar souvenir that he gave out last month at his West Jefferson, Ohio, house. Calendars seem to have been a favorite souvenir around holiday time and some of them were atrocious, but Mr. Wall gave a three-color half-tone in imitation of lithography that has the softness of a pastel original. If it is a matter of a half cent or cent between a good or poor calendar or other piece of advertising, put in the extra money. That fraction of a penny may make the difference between something thrown away and something cherished. Mr. Wall's calendar is good enough to go on any desk or in any home. The calendar will last where some of the gaudy "Now I'm Grandma" affairs will go into the waste basket before the Christmas greens come down.

Exhibitors are prone to consider costs rather than the ratio between cost and return. If you cannot afford to get something good, do not try to do anything. That will be better than putting out something that is hurtful and you waste both effect and money where a thing is not well done. Do things well or not at all. One piece of advertising costing three cents that will be valued is better than three each costing a cent and a half and lasting just long enough to be thrown away.

The Difference.

The other day the Metropolis, Jacksonville, published its second annual amusement edition, in which the photoplay theaters were more than well represented. It is something that is out of the ordinary in daily newspaper work and a splendid chance to get before the amusement loving public. Practically all of the leading houses are represented in the advertising columns, but only one advertisement says anything that would interest us in the house.

The Phoenix, for example, advertises that pictures are changed daily, "showing all of the leading brands of associated films in the world, made from far and near." It adds that the ladies and children are given the personal attention of the manager, J. J. Fahey. "Give us a trial and have a dime good time for a nickel," is the nearest that the advertiser comes to putting up an argument. He takes a half page to advance these facts and explain that he has five years' experience with five-cent shows, which proves him right.

If we lived in Jacksonville and were not particularly interested in the pictures we should not care much about this advertisement. It would not fill us with any curiosity to see the pictures or to visit the Phoenix. That the pictures are changed daily would not excite our interest. The advertisement would not be more than a half page advertisement to us. But suppose that it started, "Did you ever figure how much fun you could have for a nickel?" We would be willing, perhaps, to invest a five-cent piece in the experiment. If the advertisement went on to tell how some of the clever actors of the dramatic stage had gone into pictures, how the average program represented an outlay greater than the average cost of a $2 stage attraction, we think that the Phoenix would get our money, but the blank statement that pictures are changed daily is familiar to the patrons who do not have to be advertised for, and it does not interest those who are not fans.

The Pastime.

The slogan of the Pastime is "Everything new but the price." This follows 24-point display lines announcing that the house has been newly renovated and has new machines, new music, new decorations, new pictures and new songs.

It is not explained that the renovations bring new comfort to the patrons in the shape of new seats, greater space or such things. That the new machines will throw a brighter and steadier picture is left to the imagination of the informed. It is simply stated that these and other things are new, and the reader is left to realize all by himself what it means. Some nineteen words are given to a patent curtain, which is described as the most modern and expensive curtain in Jacksonville, but nothing is said about the quality added to the picture by this supposedly ideal surface. There is no argument, no appeal, merely the cold statement of fact. This is not enough. You must tell how and why the features make your house the one to which preference should be given, or else you are throwing away your money.

But the Savoy!

But the worst advertisement of the lot is the Savoy. If we are not mistaken, the Savoy is a Montgomery proposition, though not classed as a Montgomery house. It is a five-cent theater, with Mutual service, and does a good business, but the business was not built on any such advertising as this:

Three absolutely new first run pictures.
A new program every day.
Good music.

The name of the house, the name of the resident manager and the price of admission are given, but no address is shown, and for that matter we think that few who read the advertisement will be interested in the address. Suppose that the advertisement had commenced:

> "Do you know what "first run" means?
> If you are not a dyed-in-the-wool photoplay fan it is probable that you do not.
> "First run" means that a photoplay is being run for the first time. It means more than that. It means that it comes first to the Savoy and is shown in its photographic perfection before the careless operator in some other house has had a chance to mar the quality with scratches, dirt or breaks. It means, taken in connection with the perfect projection at the Savoy—
> The Best to Be Had.
> And we show three first runs every day for five cents. It's not the price that makes the show good. It's what you get for your money. You cannot get better than first run. It cannot be done.

That's a bit long, but it is a good argument, and it is not too long for a special edition. An advertisement like that means something to the man who may never have seen the term "first run" before.

The Grand.

Even Mr. Montgomery falls into the error of not explaining what first run is, but he gives an argument, he makes interesting talk, and when you put the paper down you feel an interest in him. He starts off with "If you can't be a bell cow, fall in behind." This is played up in large, black type alongside his own familiar picture. He goes on to explain that this old saying made a deep impression upon him when he was a child, and that he then made up his mind to be a bell cow. He leaves it to the public to decide if he is in such phraseology that suggests he has a pretty good idea of what the answer should be. He goes on to announce a complete change of program daily, "First run moving pictures of the makes the public demands."

He winds up with the statement that all local houses are good, but that some are better than others, and he leaves it to the public to make its own choice, but conveys the hint that this house of his has a shade the best of it.

It is by no means up to the high average of the Montgomery advertising, but it gives you an argument; it creates the impression in the mind of the reader that he is talking because he has a message. It is the only advertisement of the four that really says anything at all.

Say Something.

If you have no message, do not pay for advertising space, but you have a message to the public, whether you know it or not. Think up what it is you want to say and say it interestingly, explicitly and with a punch. You have no use for the photoplay subject that lacks the punch. You talk of this or that company putting out stuff that lacks the punch. Before you throw your stones through the windows of your glass house, look to your own shortcomings.

You advertise to get business and to hold what you already have. No man ever did have more business than he wanted, so it stands to reason that you want business. If you want it, get after the chap you haven't got. Talk to him right from the heart. You never bought life insurance of the man who contented himself with saying that his company was the biggest and best or safest and cheapest. He talked you half blind and wholly thirsty telling you why you should take out a policy in his company. He kept after you until he got you—until he made you take out a policy. No book agent ever worked his way into your office to tell you that his history of the world in thirty-seven bound volumes was the best ever. He may have told you that among other things, but he was not satisfied to tell you just that. He told you why it was, according to his lights, and in the telling he may have recited a selling monologue that some publishing house paid for with a check in three figures.

How can you expect that your statement that you have a good show is going to pack your house?

Tell the man who knows nothing of pictures why he should come to see them, and at your house. Tell the man who does know pictures why your pictures are the best. Don't write an advertisement in three and a half minutes and then complain that advertising doesn't pay. It doesn't when it is done like that, but it does when you do it right.

Too Much.

The other day we mentioned appreciatively the booklet of the Shawmut Theater, Boston, but we are less enthusiastic about the bill just received. It is far too large and tries to tell too much all at once. The sheet is 12 by 18½ inches, rather closely printed, and suggests the heralds used by repertoire shows. These are all right in their place, but we gather that the Shawmut is catering to a class of people who will not be attracted by a mass of type.

The vaudeville feature is a quintet of old soldiers and a large half-tone is used for that act. In addition two shifts of vaudeville and two special picture features for the current week and the features and one shift of vaudeville for the succeeding week are announced. That is entirely too much to get on one bill where paper and printing are cheap. It would have been better had the special films for a week been advertised. We think that in most mixed houses the audiences largely go in spite of the vaudeville and that these acts are not sufficiently well known to matter much, but even if they were all local headliners, it is asking too much of one bill to carry four changes of program. In this case we believe that the class of patrons the house is reaching for is apt to resent the large bill. There is an almost painful discrepancy between the booklet and the bill and did we live in the territory covered by this house the effect of the bill would be to nullify the good the booklet did. The booklet was almost too good. The bill, while well printed, is too full. It is easier to drive in one nail than twenty carpet tacks. It is best to hammer at one thing at a time.

Rubber.

Offsetting the fact that he signs his name with a rubber stamp, Sam W. B. Cohn, of the New Spokane Theater, Washington, puts two two-cent stamps on a letter when this is necessary. It takes two stamps to pay the freight on some matter he sends us, responding to our request for more when he notes his luridly effective treatment of "The Invaders." There is no red ink and exclamation points on his advertising for "The Star of Bethlehem." He gauges his advertising to fit the subject and the matter for the religious subject is carefully worded and kept from excessive display. One of the cards is an invitation to a special viewing on the day of the opening. Some of the effect is lost through the use of imitation engraving with old English type, but he balances his lines well and gives proper value to the big points. The name of the theater and title of the film stand out so that they immediately catch the eye, and this is the test of all good advertising. Apart from the type face chosen, it is a capital bit of printing and on good card, the sort of thing that will make you respect the theater because the management respects itself.

A holiday greeting comes in the form of a four-page folder that encloses a single sheet announcing the current program. This serves the double purpose of permitting a careful run of the four-page while the program may be a last moment affair. We like one line he uses: "The Playhouse of the Public." It suggests popularity.

Going Strong.

The Cameraphone Bulletins, Pittsburgh, are going it like a regular paper when it announces the succession of Frank L. Dyer to the management of the General Film Company and prints his portrait. We wish they would run an editorial page and give us more original stuff to "lift." Now and then they run editorial comment, such, for instance, as the monthly discussion of the records for their mechanical musical device. The new numbers are explained and the audience invited to ask for favorites. Here is a part of a recent announcement. If you have a high class phonograph and new records regularly, you might work something along these lines, even if you have to have a special slip printed.

> We have gone over very thoroughly all of the popular music in this month's list of the Victor Talking Machine Company, and have selected a number of records we are sure will please you.
> "Beautiful Doll, Good Bye," by the American Quartet; "My Marguerite," Walter Van Brunt—two new and popular songs by favorite singers that are unusually entertaining.
> "Don't Turn My Picture to the Wall" is the principal song hit in "The Girl from Montmartre," soon to be at the Nixon Theater.
> "When It's Apple Blossom Time in Normandy," a Weber-Fields' hit that you must surely have played for you. We know you'll enjoy it.

Another Idea.

And here is another idea that is worth copying. We've had a lot to say about the value of an accurate mailing list, but too much cannot be said. Here's one feature of such a list:

> The mailing list of the Cameraphone theaters is a large one. The patrons of our theaters responded with great enthusiasm when the management offered to mail out to patrons copies of each week's bulletin. The list thus established, with the large number that have since come in, is revised every second month, a blank form being sent out to the patron with the bulletin for a statement of his further desires as regards the bulletin, a space being provided for suggestions and criticisms of the Cameraphone theaters and the pictures shown therein. We have been more than pleased to note the many very complimentary remarks of our patrons who returned the revision slips with requests that the bulletin be continued. We quote a few examples:

There follows about a column of warm but not gushy praise; the sort of stuff that might come to the house, but not the sort of thing the house might write. It gives ammunition to the man who likes to brag about his favorite house and cite the poinions of others to back up his own judgment.

Free Advice.

Two more evidences of hustle are found in the Bellevue edition of the Bulletin (there is one for each of the numerous houses). The first is the announcement that on a certain day the gross profits will go to the local branch of the Y. M. C. A. The second explains itself. It runs:

> ANNOUNCEMENT:
> For the benefit of the business people of Bellevue, Avalon, Emsworth, and surrounding territory, the Cameraphone theaters will have a representative of the Cameraphone Advertising Department at the Bellevue Theater, the evening of Tuesday, January 28th. The gentleman will be pleased to talk to any business man interested in the Bellevue Boosting Campaign and may be able to make some valuable suggestions as to ways and means.

It's just another way of showing public spirit and getting identified with the progress and prosperity of the town. It makes the house a local institution.

Says He's Alive.

Here is a chatty letter from D. L. Cornelius, resident manager of the Dreamland Theater, Shreveport, La. He writes:

> As I notice you continually call for more of the exhibitors' ideas in advertising, and having derived a "great deal of good" from your department, I am sending in a sample of my weekly advance program that I started the first of the year and from which I have derived a great deal of good.
> I am not altogether original in all my ideas, but try to be so as much as possible unless I happen to find something that looks real good, when I grab it up and use it to the best possible advantage. I continually scan the pages of the WORLD and must say that everything I have adopted therefrom has proven a big success. Of course I put a lot of push behind it and the consequences are that we are giving competition an awful run for their money.
> I do a great deal of newspaper and banner advertising, but find that it always pays if I put in enough work on the composition, of ads, etc. I try to be as chatty as possible and put as much personality into it as possible and still not get too familiar; but my greatest hobby is catchline advertising.
> I came out a few weeks ago with an article like this: "Watch that Dreamland in 1913 It's Alive." This was during the holiday season, and I carried ads in the newspapers and banners on the streets. The result was that it became a popular slogan here and caused a great deal of talk, and I think done me a whole lot of good.

Likes the Turtle.

Mr. Cornelius has adopted a uniform weekly program, a heavy pasteboard card about 4 by 6 inches. On one side appears the program for the week and on the other some advertising talk. Each program carries the number of the week and an announcement states that

> TEN OF THESE WEEKLY PROGRAMS NUMBERED CONSECUTIVELY RETURNED AT ANY TIME WILL BE REDEEMED BY ONE WEEK'S FREE ADMISSION TO THE THEATER. THE HOLDER MUST BE OVER TWELVE YEARS OF AGE.

Mr. Cornelius likes the "turtle" copy appearing a few weeks ago and he has to offer in return

Watch that
DREAMLAND
IT'S ALIVE
The house that put the "move" in moving pictures.

If he will take the card on which this line appears and compare it with the others he'll notice that the matter that follows, being set in all capitals, does not make the impression that upper and lower case does, because it is not as easy to follow.

We think that a full week's admission for ten programs is rather too generous, but it certainly makes talk.

Uses Cuts.

R. B. Cable, of the Cable Theater, Knoxville, Tenn., uses reproductions of Mutt and Jeff to advertise "Funny Day" at the Cable. "Funny Day" is distinctly good. Comedy is always welcome, and a day devoted to comedy should be a draw. Try it some day if you can arrange with your exchange to get a full program of some of the really funny pictures run before, but good for a return. Most of these will be more or less in the commercial classification and therefore cheap. Boom up the coming of the reels and we think you'll find that it will pay.

The use of cuts in an avertisement, particularly well known cartoon figures, attracts attention to the advertisement, but the advertisement itself must be framed to make the impression on the attention thus gained. We think that we would have used a larger type for the titles of the pictures and have trusted less to the announcement of the day. In a three-column advertisement six and a half inches deep, the four titles should at least have gone in an 18 point bold of some sort instead of 12 point. Half as large again is twice as large once you pass the 12 point mark, and here there was plenty of room. Too much of the space is wasted, not because white space does not help to throw out an advertisement but because in this case the white space was all through the upper part of the advertisement and not massed where it would attract.

Fictional Facts.

We won't vouch for these statistics, but here's a capital card from the Marple Theater, Wichita, Kansas. It is well phrased and attractively printed in red and black on the ordinary postal card. William Barie, Jr., is to be complimented upon an unusually attractive advertisement. Here it is:

> During the year 1912, 3,297,546 people paid admission to THE MARPLE. If this audience stood in a row, they would reach the distance of 3,500 miles. The total number of laughs by these people was 89,924,356. If all were combined into one mammoth laugh, it could be heard from Wichita to London, England, and would last continuously for 2 hours and 27 minutes. If the applause were to be combined, the concussion would be so great that it would move the Mexican border one mile South.
> Fifth Consecutive Year in Wichita—World's Standard of Motion Pictures.
> THE MARPLE OF COURSE.

These burlesque facts do something more than gain a laugh. They hammer home the fact that The Marple is well attended and carries the inference that it must be because The Marple runs a good show.

A fact fixed with a laugh lasts.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

That Dinner.

If you have not already spoken for a seat at the photoplaywright dinner at the Taverne Louis, March 1st, send along your name. Several out-of-town writers are coming to see what the New York contingent looks like. And listen! No evening dress. Come from work or play, but do not court pneumonia with a V-front vest and a U-back coat. Purely informal.

Fashion Note.

William Lord Wright announces that he has a new hairless hat to replace the funny fuzzy thing he used to get photographed in.

Smith Has Wented.

Russell E. Smith, who had charge of the photoplay writers' department of the Magazine Maker, has severed his connection with the concern.

Gone and Got Married.

Edmund S. Hirsch, who has done some capital photoplay work, sends a photograph of a handsome house where he is spending his honeymoon. Outside of the fact that he neglects to mention where the place is (which leaves it open to grave suspicion that it is in Brooklyn), he seems to be in line for congratulations. We hope he brings the new Mrs. Hirsch to the photoplaywrights' dinner.

If You Want To.

We do not advocate the submission of scripts to companies not having a fixed release date, but if you want to take a chance, note that Carleton Whiting, formerly Melies photoplay editor, and earlier of the Vitagraph photoplay department, wants "small cast photoplays of distinctive originality of theme and treatment." He states that he will pay "according to merit," without explaining about how much, and adds that the author's name will be used on the film. Scripts should be addressed to the International Photoplay Company, Santa Paula, Cal.

Hen Club in Boston.

A couple of weeks ago "Millie and Betty" wrote that they wanted to start a photoplaywriter section in Boston. We opined that they were kidding us, but Miss Cora Drew indignantly asked why it had to be a man to start a club, and we took to the tall timber. Now Miss Elizabeth Brown declares that she would not jest on so serious a subject and says to give all and sundry her address. We have the address and will be glad to send it to all who mean business. The Chicago club has done real good among its small membership. Let Bluestocking Boston be next. Send your name and we'll pass it along to Betty and Millie. Meantime Betty and Millie are invited to come over to town for the New York dinner.

Not So Certain.

We used to think that it was safe to follow the usual practice of working over a newspaper paragraph, so long as the paragraph only gave impetus to a train of thought, but we're not so certain now.

Last October we wrote "Fooling Their Wives" and sold it to the Lubin company. It was developed from a newspaper paragraph in the Morning World of October 4th, which told of eight women going camping. They left their husbands behind. With this for a starter, we developed a plot in which the wives' husbands were rejoiced at the promised liberty of action, but grew tired and sought to enforce a return of their spouses by a fake attack on the camp.

We were doing two services a week then, in an effort to get away on a vacation, and did not have time to read the "Stories of the Films" a week or so later, which carried the Thanhouser story, "Petticoat Camp," and our first knowledge of a pretty close duplication of incident came when the Telegraph called attention to the similarity.

Investigation seems to prove that some newspaper correspondent fancied the theme of "Petticoat Camp," which he learned from some Thanhouser actor, and sent in to his paper an item founded on the main idea. In twisting this around we almost duplicated the original story by Lloyd Lonergan, except that in his story the men and women were camping as a party, and the women went on strike against overwork, establishing a special camp, which the men raided.

If you take inspiration from a newspaper item, be certain it does not hail from a town where there is a picture company. Newspaper correspondents, dependent on their "space," are none too careful as to what they send out. We're not so certain now that any paragraph is safe.

Another One.

Miss Cora Drew is another writer who was beaten to her idea. She writes:

> Fully eight weeks ago I started a photoplay which, for good reasons, I left unfinished. A week or so ago I saw Mrs. Breuil's "The Wood Violet," which was so like my idea that had I finished it and sent it to the Vitagraph, as I had intended, it would have looked like a "coincidence" had I been of a suspicious nature. But she could not possibly have borrowed an idea which she never had seen, and which was not even developed. I'm rather glad it happened, for Mrs. Breuil's treatment of the theme has taught me the shortcomings of my own idea as I had planned to put it on paper and the schooling is worth more than the play would have brought had I sold it.

And only the other day a lady accused the Lubin company of theft of an idea, when as a matter of fact the play they produced had been written and paid for before hers ever came into the studio.

Not Twins.

The Keystone company advertises that highest prices will be paid for split reel comedies, but written on the back of one of their rejection slips Mr. Coolidge has written, "Producing split reel farce comedies only, for which we pay $15."

Fifteen dollars is about the average price, but it is not the highest. The two statements do not seem to be twins.

Get Them Right.

Sometimes you'll find that a story won't work out right, no matter how hard you try. We had a cute little idea about a theatrical manager a couple of days ago, but he would not get down on paper. Just about the time he began to regret that he was not a real man that we might thrash him for his stubbornness, we found out that he wasn't a theatrical man at all. He was a life insurance agent. Then we wrote the story.

If your people do not seem to hang together, look them over and see if they are not really other people. That story about the banker might go all right if you cut out the "n" and made him a baker, and the street car conductor who simply will not mix with the other people you have in mind may turn out to be a fireman or a night watchman.

When you have an incipient strike of your characters on your hands, arbitrate and see if you can't fix it up. We've even found out that our heroine really was a hero—which is a most embarrassing mistake.

If You Live In Charleston.

If you live in Charleston, S. C., there is a playwright down there who seeks to foregather with his fellows. Send in your name.

Listen to This.

Here's an extract from a letter that was sent to us by the recipient. The writer says:

> At the present time I am thinking of opening a school for novices and beginners in the "art" of photoplay writing—I feel that I am much better qualified to correct stories than to originate them.

In literature the best editor is seldom the best writer, but the same does not hold good in photoplay, where knowledge of the business is the fundamental requirement—a requirement that practically none of the "school" men have. They cannot write, so they make money teaching others to write. The only difference between this man and the others is that he is frank, but we know of two actual schools whose editors privately confess that they cannot write salable stories, and another the head of which never even tried to write.

Can you beat them?

Use No Hooks.

It has been some little time since this caption was used, but it seems to belong to this letter from M. D. Stilson, of the Schuyler Opera House, Cobleskill, N. Y. He writes:

> I am looking for some information through your column in The Moving Picture World or from some of my fellow scenario writers.
> I thought that I had been up against everything that a writer of photoplays has to choke down and call it good, but here is a new one to me. What would you or any of your readers take it to signify?
> Some little time ago I mailed a script to a film company. Today she came back, no marked slip or letter enclosed, and you should have seen it. Did you ever (sure you have) see the proof sheet in a printing office after the reader has it marked up for correction? That is the way my script looked. What would you or a brother writer think that they intended to show me? I am stuck. Never had this one handed me before, and thought I had been through it all. I have passed the point where I get mad and waste two cents on an editor that will spoil my script, but I would like to know if they do this with other people or no.

Either a production has been made from the script or it was figured for production. It is the more probable that the marks were made during production. Some director has put the picture on. It has not worked out the way it was figured and it has been turned back to the writer to weep over.

Now and then it happens that a director is not quite certain of a story. He tries it out, and it does not look well on the screen. The money lost on the film, the players and other expense is set down to profit and loss, but the script is turned back to the writer without payment.

A director has no more right to mark up or otherwise mutilate an unpurchased script than he has to slash holes in a strange man's coat. It is the same destruction of the personal property of another, and no better than theft.

We do not believe in writing to the editors about every little thing, but we think that if Mr. Stilson will write to the business office of the company they will be glad to learn of the condition and make things interesting for some bone-headed director.

Perhaps Yes.

A California writer propounds this proposition:

> Now to another subject, not so interesting, perhaps, but of vital importance to me. It is the question of writing and marketing scripts. I have written about eighteen or twenty in the past six or eight months, but so far have been unable to get any further than a nice letter from several editors, saying the work was good, well written, technically good, originality unquestioned, and ask> ing to see more of my work, two of them going so far as to ask first reading of my work and urging me to come again. I have your "Technique of the Photoplay" and read the M. P. W. regularly, study the markets and read reviews of the releases, yet—but—if—I have not "arrived." Tell me why, if you please. Is it lack of continual practice, the scarcity of plots, the poor handling of meaty subjects with greater possibilities, or is it because I do newspaper reporting and have gotten into the rut of the chronicling common events?

We think that perhaps the writer has answered his own question—a question that scores of other writers have put to themselves. You'll note he does not say that he is a "journalist," so he must be an old timer. Newspaper workers, especially in small towns, have to do a lot of hustling to cover the ground, and they are apt to get into a more or less mechanical style. Ten years ago one of the most able manuscript readers in New York turned back one of our fiction submissions with the note that it was a splendid theme, but sounded as though it had been written by "a tired newspaper man," which hit the mark exactly.

We have seen a lot of scripts done by newspaper men that had the same fault that probably marks this inquirer's stuff. It is all good in idea, it is all reasonably new and fresh, but there is no "bounce" to the story, and mostly they are writing of their own experiences instead of idealizing. It is too commonplace and matter of fact in development even when the theme is new and strong.

The photoplay script is no place for "fine writing. It is more essential that the script be brief than elegant, but there should be a certain twist that marks the difference between the labor of love and the labor of duty. It is a hard thing to define, but there is a certain frame of mind that must be arrived at before the script is undertaken.

If a reporter goes out on a fire or a murder case he comes back with his facts, sits down at the machine and grinds the story out.

Photoplays cannot be ground out of the mill in the same fashion. They must be written with all your heart and soul and a black record ribbon. Probably these stories were not written with the heart and soul, but with the idea that a practiced writer should be able to write a photoplay the same as a news story. The result is apt to be more or less unimaginative, lacking in the little touches of development that mark good work. Some writers approach their work almost with a good-natured contempt for the simplicity of it. It is far from simple work, and unless genius burns it is useless to expect a sale.

The best way for the newspaper man to work is to find out when he works best—whether in the early morning or late at night—and then do the work at the proper hour, and only when the story fairly cries to be written. Then he should take a workman's pride in doing the best job of it he knows how. He should seek for little twists of situation or movement, novelty of idea and the unusual that sounds as though it might be the usual.

Perhaps, too, this inquirer's address is against him. He lives on Lemon Avenue. We would rather move over to Peach Street, if they are naming the streets after fruits.

A New Point on Film Credit.

Russell E. Smith, who is in charge of the photoplay department of the Magazine Writer, presents this interesting problem, relative to the recent announcement of film credit:

> Apropos of the recent agreement among some film companies that the author of a scenario should have his name on the screen, how about the author of a magazine story whose yarn is made into a photoplay? Is he not entitled to have the credit also?
> Recently a magazine who buys a great deal of my output refused to give me the moving picture rights to one of them. That presupposes that the story has value as a possible film. Now, I am a scenario writer, too—as well as a magazine writer—and when that story is bought—if it ever is—by some film company and turned into a photoplay by some one else, should I not get as much credit as the author of the photoplay on the screen?
> The photoplay field is such a lucrative one now that I am reserving all possible rights to my stories in magazines in future, and if the film companies want them, I want to do the scenario work on them myself!

Mr. Smith raises two well-taken points. He argues that he should be credited with work taken from magazines to which he has contributed. He states that he is now reserving to himself all photoplay rights. The former is eminently just. If he has written the idea, the idea should be credited to him.

The latter plank in his platform offers difficulties. Certain magazines—one in particular—buys the photoplay rights specifically, and the reservation of these rights is apt to spoil the market there. But surely the photoplay writer who is also a fiction writer can make a better photoplay script of his story than any one else, and should be given the chance.

We should like to hear from other author-playwrights on the matter, it being always understood that the author who makes the play is competent to write a play. Mr. Smith conducts a bureau of criticism for the Magazine Maker, in conjunction with Herbert Hoagland, of Pathe Freres, and he knows—very naturally he knows. We think it would pay other authors to know.

Not Half Bad, But Good.

"I sent to ——— a couple of scripts that were not half bad—for me," is the way a writer starts a recent letter, and that was the answer. The scripts were not half bad, but they were not good, and the editor sent them back, with a suggestion that he would like to see something better.

Don't send out anything but your best—your very best. If a story strikes you as being not half bad, keep it on hand and work over it until it impresses you as being better than usual. Then send it out. The mail of the studios is filled with stuff that ranges from not half bad to about ten per cent. good.

Unless you have a patient, long-suffering editorial friend, do not send out anything but the very extra good. It will pay in the long run—not alone in postage, but in prestige.

You cannot afford to become identified with the "nearly good" writers. Be one of the best.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

F. H. R.—A list will be sent you as soon as some are printed. Holding back for data. Send for a copy of "Technique of the Photoplay" for script form.

B. T. F.—We would suggest that you wait with patience. In the second case you mention you can sue, but the cost of the suit would far exceed the judgment you would receive. We think that if you submit the statement of your copyist the company will pay. As to the other, we cannot say, but their promise to pay should be put in the hands of a lawyer for collection.

FLOSSIE C. P.—Welcome! Can't say if Edwin August will be at the Photoplay ball or not. The chances are that he will. Glad you've seen Kerrigan and have switched from Crane Wilbur. Miss Golden is a new one on us. We'll look her up. Don't know the full Vitagraph western roster, but Miss Annie Schaefer and Robert Thornby are the leads. Miss Mary Charleson, Charles Bennett and Robert Burns are others. Now that you have found your way in, come regularly. If you do not send a better photo soon we'll print the one we have and send a marked copy to Crane. Now will you hustle?

A. L. J.—You incorrectly name those Eclairs. Miss Francelia Billington was the Chief's Daughter in "The Pride of Angry Bear."

E. H. B.—We do not criticize scripts in the Photoplay Department, as a glance at that department will show you. It is against the law to steal copyrighted stories.

ORIENT—See A. L. J. above. Thanhouser's "The Guilty Baby" was released February 27th, 1912. "The Call of a Woman" was a special release with no exact date. It was published about a year ago.

J. P. P.—Your question was answered too recently to be repeated.

K. L. D.—In "The Invaders," the Colonel was Francis Ford, his daughter, Miss Ethel Grandin; Lieut. White, Ray Myers, and the Indian girl, Miss Anna Little.

C. H. N.—Henry Walthall was the Informer. Lionel Barrymore and Mr. Walthall were the brothers in "The Burglar's Dilemma." Jack Dillon was the detective you indicate. Robyn Adair was Sinclair in "Power of Silence." American did "The Agitator." It was released April 4, 1912. Ned Billings, in "Three Friends," was Henry Walthall.

J. A. M.—The way to establish a reputation as a photoplay writer is to send out only your best stories and send these to one or two companies. This gets them used to looking for good stuff from you. When you have landed them, go after others the same way, if you want to enlarge your string. It is not always merit that guides the return of the story. It may not suit that particular studio at that particular time.

B. V. H.—Your idea is of too limited appeal to find general favor. Do not waste time on it.

H. C. C.—A script sent Kay-Bee or Broncho will reach the other if more suitable for that brand.

L. E. S.—In "A Temporary Truce," Texas Gorman was the young prospector, Charles Mailes Mexican Jim, and Miss Clair McDowell his wife.

J. B.—Miss Mae Marsh was the cripple in "The Tender Hearted Boy," and the grand-daughter in "An Adventure in the Autumn Woods."

H. F. T.—Get a copy of "Technique of the Photoplay." We cannot give five or six columns to the reply to a single question.

R. V. S.—If you want your photoplays read, they must be typed, no matter how plain your handwriting may be.

ATLANTA—Two sections of the Thanhouser company are working in Los Angeles and one in New York, pending the rebuilding of the studio in New Rochelle. Miss Lois Weber and Phillips Smalley are both back with Rex and working in Los Angeles. The paper is all right. Use No. 10 and No. 11 envelopes. The No. 9 is too small.

M. G. W.—We cannot place the player you seek.

H. R. M.—Miss Margarita Fischer was the leading woman in "Romance and Reality."

V. R. H.—You can state your price or submit "at usual rates." The latter is the course generally followed. There is no average price for scripts. Most are paid for around $25. Some bring $100, but they are very few.

TYRONE—Indoor pictures in photoplay are made at the rate of 16 to the second (which is not in 1/16th of a second, but less than 1/32nd), and so must be made under the concentrated light of many arc lamps or Cooper-Hewitt tubes. It would be inexpedient to carry around enough of these to light up "department stores, halls, etc.," and the customers, guests, "etc." might object. The moment a crowd knows it is being taken, everyone faces the camera and spoils the effect.

K. L. L.—If you want answers, state correct titles. The Kay-Bee Identifier assumes you mean "The Sergeant's Boy," in which Ray Myers, and not William Clifford, played the boy. In "The Great Sacrifice," Ray Myers was the brother in blue and Richard Stanton the Confederate. The Kay-Bee Identifier is a most obliging person, but give him the right titles.

ALICE—Sorry we cannot locate the player.

KENTUCKY—We do not place the first two people. Ed Coxen is not with American. Eclair has a studio in Paris. Max Linder heads a company of his own.

J. H. F.—You have not asked too many questions, but we lack the Gem and Victor casts. In the "Informer," Mr. Walthall's brother was Walter C. Miller; Mrs. Kate Bruce Miss Pickford's mother, and Miss Gertrude Norman the colored mammy. Susie's mother is not cast. We will try and find out for you. Look next week.

Alcohol Blow Torch.

FOR a long time I have been on the lookout for a compact, thoroughly reliable and efficient blow torch which would be adaptable to the use of operators. The operator needs a small blow torch in order to solder wires. It is a most important tool, but the regular torch is expensive, cumbersome and a lot of trouble. It is not of such shape and size as may readily be carried around in a tool kit. Walking along Church Street, in lower New York, last week, I was attracted by a window demonstration of a soldering outfit. The man was using a small nickel-plated torch which instantly caught my eye. I investigated and found it to be a good tool. It does not have to be pumped up, is guaranteed by its makers for one year, and is only about six inches long by one and a half by maybe two inches. All you do is unscrew a cap, touch a match to it and in a few seconds it begins to blow, supplying a blaze about two inches long and plenty large and hot enough for wire soldering or other small jobs. I heated the end of a steel spindle ⅜ inch in diameter a dull red in about four minutes. Its makers did not think it would pay to advertise it for operators, as the profit, they say, is small when sold alone, it being made as a part of their soldering outfit. I, however, arranged to get as many of them as I want for 75 cents each, and all you who want one may get it, if ordered at once, by sending me $1—the extra quarter to pay postage and parcel post insurance. And there you are. I shall not repeat this offer, so if you want one it is your only chance; therefore get busy.

Sixteen Tooth Sprocket.

New Orleans, La., asks:

> Can a 16-tooth sprocket be used in place of a 20-tooth one? If not, where would the difference come in? Would it cause the picture to jump out of frame? Do they make 20-tooth sprockets?

Presuming you to mean the intermittent sprocket, your first question must be answered no. A 20-tooth sprocket requires a 5-point star, and you cannot use a 16-tooth sprocket with a 5-point star. The reason is simple. The circumference of the intermittent sprocket must move exactly ¾ of an inch (one picture) each time the star acts. Now with a 5-point star it requires five movements to complete one revolution of the star, hence of the intermittent sprocket. It therefore follows that five pictures must be shown in that time and this means that the sprocket must measure precisely ¾ x 5 = 3¾ inches around. Now with a 4-point star the sprocket is revolved in four movements of the star, or the length of 3 pictures, or ¾ x 4 = 3 inches. Now if you put a 16-tooth sprocket on with a 5-point star it would only be revolved once in five movements of the star. Its circumference is 3 inches, hence we would have only ⅗ of an inch circumferential movement, instead of the necessary ¾, which would mean that each time the picture would fail of complete exposure by the difference between ¾ and ⅗ of an inch. Do you understand now? Remember there are four sprocket holes to each picture, hence there must be four teeth on the sprocket to each ¾ of an inch of its circumference. I don't believe you could get a 20-tooth sprocket in this country. Whether you could elsewhere or not, I could not say.

Side Throw?

Mr. Wm. J. H. Engelke, general manager, The Great South American Shows, is using one-half of a 40 x 80-foot room. Purposes to use its full width, 40 feet, but there is a row of pillars down its center, hence he will have a side throw. Wants to know if special lens is necessary.

No. But if you are now projecting a very wide picture I would change to about a 5¼ e. f. objective, which will give you about a 12-foot picture (throw is 68 feet). With a large picture the tendency to out-of-focus and keystone effect, due to side throw, is greater. Your side throw will be only 10 feet in 68, as your machine is now in the center of the half room you are using. If there is tendency to out-of-focus effect on the side throw, stop down the diameter of your objective to between ¾ and ⅝ of an inch, by means of a paper ring set against the front lens of the objective. If this does not effect a cure, then see last paragraph on page 332 of handbook.

Lens Cleaning Compound.

Mr. A. J. Lukachie, Lakewood, Ohio, contributes the following:

> Heretofore a sort of film of dried dust and oil would form on my lenses which I could not get off. Result was a dull picture. Recently I have discovered a compound which cleans lenses perfectly. It is as follows: Water, 3 oz.; alcohol, 1 oz.; nitric acid, 3 drops. Rub lens with tuft of clean cotton, then dip in above solution, and polish with a perfectly clean cotton cloth. Are the results good? Well, I guess yes! Here, also, is a recipe for flat paint to keep inside of machine and inside of lens barrel painted to prevent light reflection: Alcohol, 8 oz.; lampblack, ½ oz.; liquid shellac, 1 oz. Mix well by adding the alcohol slowly to the lampblack while stirring. Put in just a little alcohol at a time until the lampblack is all "broken up" and smooth. Then add all the alcohol and shellac. Always shake well before using, as the lampblack settles. Apply with small brush.

Many thanks, Brother Lukachie. A perfectly clean lens is of the utmost importance to good projection. I have always used alcohol for cleaning purposes, but perhaps the brother's recipe will be found to be an improvement. A similar one was published some time ago.

Too Much Current.

Hammond, Ind., orders a handbook and writes thusly:

> Am using a Model B Kinedrome projector, throwing a 20-foot picture at 92 feet, 60 amperes of 60-cycle, 110-volt current through a Bell & Howell compensarc. My spotlight, however, gives trouble. Use 50 amperes, through same compensarc, and it hums so loudly I cannot hear my cue; also there is very often a double spot, and the arc flickers and flares. Use ⅝ cored carbons. Have set them every imaginable way.

You are using too much amperage for a spotlight. Cut it down to 35 amperes or less. Clean your carbon holders thoroughly (inside, I mean). Be certain all connections are tight and clean and that the wires are in good condition, and not heating. Set your carbons as directed on page 384, handbook.

Be More Definite.

Bemidji, Minn., writes:

> Regarding article in January 18 issue, have seen the picture referred to way up here in the woods and can vouch for the article. This surely ought to convince you that there is such a picture.

Now what in Sam Hill are you talking about, Bemidji? Why not refer to the page and article heading. I've looked hastily through the issue, and you may search me. Writers must remember that we here are somewhat in the center of things and events and articles pass through our minds in a sort of panorama. Many things become fixed in memory, while we comment on many other minor things which leave with us, who examine so many different propositions every day, but a fleeting impression on the mind. Recall the particulars and it all comes back, but a mere reference to it generally is not sufficient to arouse memory, nor have we time, unless it be a matter of importance, to search it out. I say all this to impress upon correspondents the absolute necessity for being more explicit when referring to matters published in our columns. Whenever possible give the article, heading and page.

Chicago Gets Another Crack.

A gentleman in a certain Western city writes:

> I am not connected with the picture game, but am, nevertheless, a real picture "fan" and buy the World every week. Have seen Mr. Bug, referred to in the Projection Dept. It is the real thing.

He then comments caustically, at some length, on poor work following the union slide. He claims to have visited a great many theaters and says in many of them the union slide will be run and then the picture will jiggle and flicker and jump something awful. In fact, he claims this is the rule. Now I do not believe this is the "rule" where the union slide is run any more than where it is not run, but I have given space to this comment by an outsider to again point out the fact that a union slide followed by poor projection is far from being a recommendation of the organization to the public. I must, however, tell the correspondent that in many cases the flicker and jiggling of the picture is due to causes entirely outside the operator's control, such as antiquated projectors, demand for excessively slow speed by the manager and old, worn or poorly perforated films. But this I want to say, and say as forcibly as I can: It is far better to omit the union slide altogether than to run it and then follow with poor projection, whether the fault be with the operator himself or elsewhere. I am most emphatically not prepared to believe that the union man puts up a poorer grade of work than the non-union man, but its not being true is not enough. Union men should put up a better grade of work than non-union men. The union slide will then stand for something in the minds of the general public. It will be looked for and demanded. The union man who runs a union slide and then, through any fault of his own, fails to back it up with good work ought to be disciplined by the organization. If he repeats the offense he should be expelled. This may seem radical advice to some, but it is the course which will win out in the long run. See next article.

School Nights. Good!

Brother Bob Worthen, Salt Lake City, Utah, writes at some length of Mr. Bug, which he has seen many times. He then continues:

> Local Union No. 250, I. A. T. S. E., has inaugurated a new policy. We now have a membership of 25 and are progressing nicely. Every second and fourth Monday night in the month is set apart as "School Night." That is the new policy referred to. The better posted men take turns preparing subjects for a talk, illustrated on a blackboard, to be presented on these nights. In this way we have all been helped. Our war cry is "Perfect Projection."

> Our members all get the World and like the Projection Department very much, deriving great benefit therefrom. The company I am working for is erecting what will be the largest moving picture theater in the world, seating capacity 3,000. Operating room will be 14 x 18 feet.

Now, Brother Worthen, that will be some theater, all right, but there is one, in Havana, I think it is, seating 3,500. Now here is a local that has the right spirit. It wants better conditions and better pay, as all do. Its members, however, are fair about it. They realize that higher remuneration ought, of right, to be followed by increased efficiency, and they have taken steps, just as San Francisco Local 162, for instance, took steps, to improve the work of their members. Increased theater size, complicated projection equipment, motor generators and high class films are rapidly increasing the operator's work and responsibility. The public is becoming daily more critical and better work must be produced. This would call for increased skill and increased pay, to some extent at least, even were there no organization. But the organization demands more than the exhibitor is willing to concede, and usually very properly demands it, too. The exhibitor is seldom willing to concede what is justly due. In many cases the union is able to enforce its edicts without regard to the quality of the work of its members, but the work of the organization will be made much easier when all unions adopt, as they sooner or later will, Salt Lake City's plan. I want to see operators paid $35 to $40 per week. I expect to see it, too; but one cannot lift one's self by one's boot straps, nor can salaries be doubled with efficiency remaining at a dead level. Also, as I have said, make the union stand for excellence in projection, in addition to what it now represents, and then the union's work will be comparatively easy. Make the union operator in every way a better man than his non-union competitor. As long as the work of both are on the same level the manager either cares not at all which he employs, or prefers the non-union article. That is but natural. Make the work of the union man superior and the opposing manager then has an incentive, and often a double incentive to reverse his position and employ members of the union.

Likes the Brush Outfit.

Mr. Crockett Brown, Nashwauk, Minn., orders a handbook and writes that he has been out of focus during the past year and has had one of his lower sprockets removed, meaning his left knee joint. Is O. K. now and again has his hat in the exhibition ring. He has journeyed to Detroit to personally inspect the various light plants and has purchased a Brush 60 volt outfit. He promises report on same as soon as it is installed and thoroughly tested. Says it only showed 3 volts change from no load to full load. Is a 2-kw. generator. He traveled 1,000 miles to be "shown" and says the Brush people showed him. Is now using 220 volt current at 10 cents per kw. Wastes enough power every year to pay for a plant. We will be glad to have a report, Brother Brown, and are much pleased to learn of your complete recovery. Too bad to lose that sprocket, though.

Careless Work.

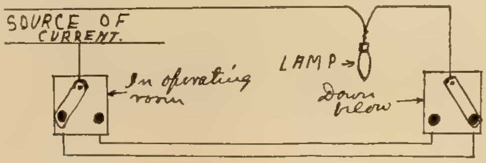
Mr. Wm. A. Lorence, New York City, sends in samples of film fault and sketch of switch arrangement for turning off and lighting the operating room incandescent lamps, either in the operating room or from below. His idea is to install a single pole, double throw switch in the operating room, and another one below, somewhat as shown in sketch, except that regular single pole, double throw knife switch would be used. His scheme would work all right, but would be in violation of underwriters' rules, which do not allow the use of single pole switches to control light circuits.



As to the samples of film, the fault consists of either a light or dark picture at the end of a subject, just before it changes to another scene. It is a common fault, and is due, I think, purely to carelessness. I will take the matter up personally with the firm you say is the worst offender. Brother Lawrence also says: "Two main points in running 2,000-foot reels are: keep your hand on the takeup tension and don't try to run the machine by hand, as machine must run at a steady clip."

Light Outfit.

Harwarden, Iowa, asks us to recommend a lighting outfit. This we cannot do. Examine the advertising pages of the World. He also asks date of the paper containing instructions on Power's Five. Nothing doing. It was Power's Six we gave instructions on. All those instructions, revised and amplified, are in the new handbook.

Address Wanted.

If Mr. Demerest, formerly operator at Comedy Theater, Broadway, near Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, will send his present address to Box 311, New Hyde Park, Long Island, information concerning a friend will be sent.

Bugs Again.

Mr. J. S. Perry, New York City, invites the editor to view a specimen of Mr. Bug, who he says has a walking part in the Rex two-reel release, "Paul and Virginia." Mr., Mrs. or Miss Bug appears in the thirteenth scene of the first reel and promenades over a letter which has to do with death. It sets the audience in a roar of laughter instead of giving the impression the letter calls for. Brother Perry says he strenuously objects to having his drama and natural (bug) history mixed. I cannot spare the time to go and look at the reels named. I'll take your word for it. But I guess it is up to the manufacturers to cage their bugs and keep them for their own private entertainment. Plainly they are not popular with operators and exhibitors.

Salt Brine Successful.

Mr. H. F. Hawley, Vincennes, Ind., writes:

> Have tried the salt brine stunt and it worked fine. Soaked the carbons 20 days, dried them 14 days. There are five picture houses, one vaudeville theater and the opera house here. Have two Power's machines. Use a gold fibre screen; throw 56 feet; current 60 cycle, 110 volt. Admission five cents for three reels and a song. We are trying to form a local of the I. A. T. S. E. and would like to hear from the brothers in regard to examination questions. If you ever get over this way we would all be very glad to meet you personally.

Address Brother Hawley at the Star Theater. Yes, gentlemen, I would like to meet all of you, but it is something of a fight for me to get away from New York City for one whole, great big week once a year. I did that last year by strenuous effort and will again this coming summer or I'll bite someone and give 'em hydrosomethingorother. But I'm afraid Indiana is too far away. You come over here, huh?

Announcement Slide Scheme.

Mr. Will Walker, Stanwood, Washington, writes:

> Am operating at the "Folly" theater and must say we have one of the best equipped little houses in the country. Seating capacity is 300; opera chairs, of course. Our pictures are the envy of fellow craftsmen who see them. We project a ten foot picture 80 feet with a Power's Six. Have our own electric plant, consisting of a 16 h.p. gasoline engine and a 3½ kw. generator. Screen is home made; of canvas, covered with gold powder over tacky varnish (Bronze powder, I presume you mean.—Ed.). Can make fast changes all right, but am a crank on good, clear pictures. My energies are mostly directed to that end. And now here is something I discovered all by my lonesome. To make a very satisfactory announcement slide, get a cake of the scouring coap known as "Bon Ami." Dip a small brush in water and smear it over the cake until a thin white liquid results. With this coat a slide cover-glass, so that the coating is evenly distributed. Lay on top of lamphouse a moment or two, until dry, and then, using an ordinary leadpencil, write whatever you wish. If to be used more than one night add a cover glass and bind up to protect. Am sending sample.

The sample is all right and the plan is certainly simple enough for any one to try out. Bon Ami may be had of any grocery store, I believe. Glad you direct every energy toward the securing of "good, clear pictures." That is a goodly portion of good projection, brother.

Rollable Curtain.

Ft. Worth, Tex., orders a handbook and asks for formula for coating a cloth curtain which may be rolled. Says he has tried Alabastine, but it is not quite satisfactory. Suppose you try the paint formula on page 338 of the handbook. I think very likely it will fill the bill.

Probably Poor Carbon Contact.

Mr. W. H. Lake, manager Palm Theater, Geneva, Neb., says:

> We are interested in two theaters here. Have a Power's Six in one and a Motiograph in the other. With the former the carbons needle back about 1½ inches, while with the Motiograph lamp they burn perfectly. Both use same current. Have tried switching the resistance of one to the other, without result. Wiring is same in both houses.

The probability is, Friend Lake, that, for some reason, the carbons are not making good contact with the metal of the Power's carbon arms. Take the arms off and clean them thoroughly with a file. Note if they are roughened inside and, if so, file down to a smooth surface. Both are excellent lamps and there is no reason, so far as concerns the lamps, why carbons should needle in one more than the other. I suppose you are using the same size and same brand of carbons in both houses.

Baltimore Boys Hold Dance.

Local Union 181, I. A. T. S. E., Baltimore, Md., operators will hold their third annual ball Monday, January 27th, at Germania Maennerchor Hall. The boys again very kindly invited the editor to be present, but, while retaining a most pleasant memory of the hospitality of local 181 when we attended their last ball (and dug up the salt brine stunt), it was impossible to be with you this year. Sorry, boys, but it was out of the question. Baltimore reports things coming their way. Says projection has improved during the past year and promised to show me some of the real article, should I come.

Tempering Lenses?

Mr. Alfred Fowler, Rec. Sec. L. U. 189, I. A. T. S. E., Alliance, O., says he tempered his condenser lenses, stopping breakage, by shoving the arc up as close to them as possible, drawing it out until it flamed, and then allowing the lenses to cool off slowly, repeating several times He will favor us with photo of his operating room soon. Wants to know how soon handbook will be out. (It's out since Xmas. Send along your order and it will be mailed at once.) Says he noted letter from Brother Carr, regarding carbon sharpening knife, but has found a cabinet maker's rasp to be best for the purpose. Wants to know what condensing lenses to use when projecting a 12-ft. picture at 96 ft. Says he has a 7½-in. lens next the light and it "makes a white light around the lamp hood." Wants to know why.

You will have to describe the "white light around the hood" business more in detail before I can say what causes it. Use two 7½ lenses. Cannot recommend your tempering scheme. Ordinarily it would breeak the lens at once, I think. I agree with you as to cabinet rasp for sharpening carbons. Glad to have picture of your room. Send it along.

New Projector.

Mr. C. H. Owens, Pine Bluff, Ark., writes as follows:

> Will you kindly give me some information in regard to the new flickerless moving picture projection machine, which there has been some comment on? I am very desirous to know if such a machine is on the market, as I have read articles in several publications on the same. It is known as the Vanoscope. I desire to get your opinion of this new machine.

No such machine has been brought to the attention of this department up to date, therefore I cannot answer your query, I am sorry to say. As to the "flickerless" part of it, why, any machine manufacturer will inform you that his machine is as free from flicker as heaven is of sin. Just ask 'em and see if I'm not right. Bet you thirty-seven cents on it.

Film Cleaning.

Mr. Justin Rankoff, a traveling exhibitor, orders a handbook and asks how to clean films and how to prevent them getting too dry and brittle. Has Power's Five projector and says that if film is in bad condition has trouble losing lower loop. Asks for remedy. The first question about films is completely answered on page 361, January 25 issue. Be sure your take-up tension is not too tight and that your lower magazine is in line, sidewise, with the lower sprocket, so that the film does not pull sidewise. Set lower sprocket idlers away from the sprocket by about two times the thickness of a film. Be sure the stripper plate is square with sprocket so that lower loop goes down and comes up onto sprocket squarely, and not on a twist.

Wants to Learn.

Jamaica, L. I., writes:

> In your edition of The Moving Picture World for January 25 you advise "Winnipeg, Can." to purchase one of your Moving Picture Handbooks for managers and operators, and to serve an apprenticeship under a competent operator before applying for a license. Now, although I am neither an operator nor a manager, I am the possessor of one of your books, as well as a subscriber to The Moving Picture World, and try to keep myself posted in any other way possible about moving pictures. Perhaps you think I am a "fan," but I am not; am worse than that. Your book is certainly one that should be in the hands of any person interested in pictures, and should be thoroughly digested by them. I would not dispose of mine for twice its cost, if I knew that I could not obtain another. What I want to get at is this: I hope to be a manager, possibly soon, of my own house, and I think it is a good thing for a manager to know a thing or two about operating. I know an A1 operator who is willing to give me any instruction necessary, but is it possible to serve an apprenticeship under such an operator during the time I am preparing myself for taking the examination for a licensed operator? Is there any book or paper published stating how much a person must know to pass an examination?

There is no such book. Whether or not you could serve an apprenticeship while preparing yourself to take the examination or not would depend. Most likely you would not take time to serve an apprenticeship, which could not be completed in less than one year, and ought to consume two. However, it could certainly do you no damage to serve what time you can under a competent man. I would by all means advise it.

Is Traveling Now.

Mr. Geo. L. Wilson, who has the "Theatre Between Two Churches," described and illustrated in this department recently, Grafton, W. Va., writes at some length describing conditions in the section he is passing through. He writes from Ronceverte, W. Va., and in part says:

> Enclosed find M. O. for handbook. Have been touring this state and N. C., S. C. and Va. with the Sarah Bernhardt films. Have played to good business. I find few up-to-date operating rooms; only one house, The Virginia, Charleston, using two machines. Projection is good in the larger cities, and they use good service, too, both Ass'n and Ind., all under 60 days and much of it under 30. In the smaller towns the service is frequently over six months old, sometimes a year. There is need of fire laws to properly protect operating rooms and to compel the retention of the automatic fire shutters on projectors. In no place, except in cities like Charleston and Huntington, were things as they should be in this respect. Very few houses have proper exits, and many of them are in an unsafe condition. Salaries for operators are good, considering the large number of theaters. There is a stop for supper in most every house, also they do not work very late. Played Point Pleasant during the recent flood. People came to the show in boats and tied their craft to posts at the curbing. Chairs, pianos, etc., had to be removed immediately after the show.

That is some unique experience, all right. Alle samee Venice. If any such general condition of unsafeness as is described prevails in that section, managers had better wake up and remedy it before there is a bunch of trouble and they are made to do it, for then the authorities will doubtless go to extremes. If they will build and equip their operating rooms as shown in the new handbook, it will insure absolute safety. Glad to hear from you, Brother Wilson, and to know you are doing good business. Let the good work go on. Does you wife know you're carrying the Divine Sarah around with you?

Up To The Fairbanks-Morse Company.

Mr. De Witt C. Vail, New Milford, Pa., submits the following:

> Enclosed find $2.50 for handbook. A friend of mine has installed a Fairbanks-Morse 60 V. generating set. The company sent no resistance with it, other than a field rheostat. Every time he brings the carbons together to strike an arc the fuses blow. He has written the F.-M. Co. and has received no other information than to reduce voltage to 50. This has been tried, but results are the same. How much resistance should be put in series with the arc, to pass about 25 amperes, and where can it be obtained? In my picture I note a steady up and down motion, just enough to be objectionable. The intermittent is a trifle loose on the shaft. Would that cause it? How many amperes, d. c., ought to be used to project a 12-ft. picture 60 ft.? What should be the e. f. of objective for this throw and picture?

As to the generator matter, that is up to the F.-M. Co. They have, up to date, seen fit to supply this department no information whatever concerning the details of their outfit. I do not, therefore, know what kind of generator it is (how wound), hence could not say whether resistance is necessary or not. Possibly your fuses are too small. You can test out the resistance matter by proceeding as per last paragraph, page 118 of the handbook. Use about twenty-five feet of No. 8 iron wire first; then increase or decrease, according to results. If this works all right you can retain the iron wire resistance, or get climax wire from the Driver-Harris Company, Harrison, N. J. Tighten the sprocket on its shaft at once. If this does not effect a remedy and the movement occurs steadily, four times to each revolution of the machine crank, either the intermittent sprocket is not true or its shaft is sprung. A new sprocket or shaft is the remedy. Use about 25 amperes, if an ordinary screen; somewhat less if a semi-reflecting screen. If a brilliant picture is wanted, amperage may be increased at will, up to perhaps 40. See table VI, page 335, handbook, and read what goes with it. As to e. f., see pages 356 to 363.

Houma, La., sends the following puzzle northward:

> Am using Edison Exhibition machine. Have following trouble: The people in the pictures quiver. This quiver is more noticeable when they walk across the screen, also when in the act of sitting and rising, or raising or lowering their arms, etc. It shows more on the light parts of the costume than on the dark. Am using a three-wing shutter and have it set so that there is no travel ghost up or down. The rest of my equipment is as follows: d. c. 110-v. current; ⅝-cored carbon upper and ⅝-inch solid lower—have good steady light. (Tried ½-inch solid carbon below, but with poor results.) Throw is 43 feet; screen is painted with Alabastine; 14-foot picture; adjustable lens; 6½ and 7½ condensers. Will be obliged for any information you can give me as to the above.

Can't imagine what you mean by "quiver." A figure walking rapidly across the field will often appear jerky, due to the motion of the figure between intervals of photographing (one photo is taken every 1/16 of a second, you know) being so great as to be perceptible, but you say this occurs when figures sit down, arise or raise or lower their arms. Will some of the correspondents please wrestle with this one while I go chase my goat?

Most Excellent Scheme.

Mr. C. M. Watson, proprietor and manager Mystic Theater, Bonham, Tex., orders a handbook and sends sample of a blank report which is made out every day at the Mystic. The house keeps one copy and sends one to the exchange. The Mystic is on a circuit of three houses. There were many complaints that reels and posters were in bad shape, etc. These reports have stopped all that. The exchange can see at a glance exactly how the reels and posters came in and how they departed.

"A MOTORBOAT PARTY" (Lubin), Feb. 4.—Just some acceptable nonsense. It shows a party of about ten girls and men going out for a trip in a motor boat and, one after another, falling off and then, by trick photography, falling on again. It made general laughter. Very short.

"THE MISSING JEWELS" (Lubin), Feb. 4.—A melodrama produced by Arthur Hotaling for the laugh's sake and played by the company that has been putting over the Lubin farce comedies. Mae Hotely plays a young society matron who has told her husband (Robert Burns) that she has placed her jewels in his overcoat pocket and then has changed her mind, but has neglected to tell him that she has taken them out. He goes to his office and she to a bridge party. At the office there is a girl and two rival clerks. But by the time we get through with the office love story we have forgotten the real situation and have begun to feel that this part was made long, mostly to fill out the reel. The situation is taken up again in time and on account of the acting, not of the story, makes a few laughs. We cannot say that the authoress, Elsie Kiesler, has done anything very remarkable. The office force is played by Frances Mann with Walter Stull and Thomas Aiken.

"SWEENEY AND THE MILLION" (Selig), Feb. 4.—The farce in which an Irish hod-carrier falls heir to a million, spends it and then goes back to his bricks and mortar. Charles H. France, author and producer, has added one or two new incidents; but the picture's best asset is the leading woman's smile—Lillian Leighton's personality will go a long way toward saving any picture at all. She plays Mrs. Sweeney and seemed very popular in the part. John Lancaster plays Sweeney. The lawyer takes him to the bank where he gets and takes home a million dollars. It is well photographed.

"A STRENUOUS COURTSHIP" (Cines), Feb. 4.—A very farcical courtship picture with some quite convincing tumbles by people on roller skates and also some funny horseback riding. It is perfectly photographed for the most part, and some of its scenes were too pretty to break up in the rough business of the farce. However, it makes laughter and there is one joke in it that makes a roar of laughter.

"AN INVINCIBLE SLEUTH" (Cines), Feb. 4.—A very laughable trick film farce. Nearly all of these trick farces are most extraordinary and this is no exception. We had to laugh with the others, we don't know just why.

"THE PITCHER PLANT" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 4.—It brings us one of nature's curiosities from the other side of the world. Many have heard of the pitcher plant, few have seen it or know much of what it is, so the picture has a fresh interest. It makes a very interesting offering.

"THE SWEDISH SUBMARINE MANOUVERS" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 4.—On the same reel is this picture of an entirely different subject, but it will be just as welcome. A view of a torpedo on its way is included—it is seen only by the ripples of the surface that follow it. It goes very fast. Both parts are well photographed and together make an acceptable offering, both interesting and instructive.

"CLASSMATES' FROLIC" (Vitagraph), Feb. 4.—An artificial farce giving us some boarding school girl capers that are more or less comical, but never afford true comedy. As in nearly all of these school girl or college boy farces, there is plenty of "front and center" acting and little attempt to make the action in the scenes seem natural. There were a good many in the audience, though, that got a good deal of laughter from it and, looking around, we noticed that there were a number who didn't. It was produced by Ralph Ince from Eugene Mullen's script. Flora Finch is the principal and the girls are Rosemary Theby, Lucile Lee, Lillian Walker, Anna Stewart and Edith Story. William Shea and Charles Edward play the roles of organ grinder and janitor respectively.

"THE RANCHMAN'S BLUNDER" (Essanay), Feb. 4.—Poor photography, at least in the print we saw, is a great drawback in this picture's effectiveness. But even under the best conditions, its story would hardly rise much above commonplace. It develops the old situation in which the villain manages to get the hero suspected of killing the ranch owner and father of the girl both love. The accidentally wounded man comes to and shows up the villain. We couldn't see the acting—this company usually does very well.

"THE PHANTOM SHIP" (Edison), Feb. 4.—James Oppenheim, the author of this pretty effective picture is at his best only when he has a situation that demands imaginative treatment. Whenever he attempts to do conventional stuff, so it seems from his past work, he is in danger. Just at present, not form but content is his forte. This is well, for form can always be attained, though perfection in it is mighty hard for some, but ideas come from the soul and probably can't be learned. We can't help thinking that, if he had, in this picture, relied on the impression that his central idea was sure to make and left out much of the experience that was outside the ring of greatest interest, he would have put it over with more force. We didn't find much that was new or significant in many of the opening scenes nor in the "desert island" scene, which surely was thin. We did feel a stir of the imagination when he got to the heart of his story in which mental telepathy is employed to bore down into the human soul—in its effect it shows the strength and depth of love. H. W. Shaw, the producer, has done commendably and Mabel Trunnelle and Herbert Prior, as the woman and her castaway sailor husband who get "en rapport" with each other and so escape the fate of Enoch Arden's friends, are clear and steady in their portrayal. Walter Edwin, as the man who is about to marry the "widow," helps much. William Bechtel has a not very important part. The photography is very fair. The situation is not new; but it makes an effective picture.

"A LESSON FROM THE PAST" (Cines), Jan. 28.—There is not much in this melancholy drama to interest. It is a story of a woman who forty years before had been balked in marrying the man of her choice because of parental objection; she now finds that her niece cannot marry the man of her choice because of the objection of the young man's father. It happens that the father and the aunt's old-time lover are identical. The aunt gets busy and fixes things up for the young folks.

"THE VOICE OF GUISEPPE" (Essanay), Jan. 28.—We give the spelling used by the film; the error is not ours. The comedy is not strong. There are plenty of good people in it, and they do all they can to put it over as a comedy. Many of the scenes are marred by pronounced instances of "static."

"THE GUIDING LIGHT" (Lubin), Jan. 27.—This picture would have held interest better had it been shorter. There is insufficient material for two reels. There is a serious oversight in the selection of fishing schooners. In the first scene in which the vessel appears it is a two-master, with two jibs. As the boat sails out of the harbor it has three masts and four jibs and a topsail. The homecoming is on a two-masted boat. There may be three-masted fishing schooners down Maine way. The writer never saw one. However, there is no complaint to be lodged against the dramatic work. It is good.

"A DEAL IN STOCKS" (Cines), Feb. 8.—A drama that will interest. The scheme may not be exactly new, but the subject is well handled. The acting is naturally done; the photography is good; the backgrounds are artistic.

"THE GOVERNESS" (Edison), Feb. 8.—An excellent picture. Bannister Merwin writes the scenario, and Walter Edwin produces it. George Lessey, as a well-to-do widower, has the lead. Mabel Trunnelle plays the role of governess to the two children of the widower. William West is the dishonest promoter, the father of the governess. The work falls to these three. The climax is strong and splendidly done.

"THE JOKE WASN'T ON BEN BOLT" (Vitagraph), Feb. 8.—This is not a strong comedy, as Vitagraph productions in this department of picture making usually go. There is real fun at the finish, though, between Charles Eldridge and Robert McWade, Sr.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S LAST DEED" (Essanay), Feb. 8.—The picture will not hold close attention. Broncho Billy, informed by a doctor that he has but two days to live, takes advantage of the information to put a bullet into an undutiful son of a man who has nursed Billy, and who says he will offer a big reward for the capture of Broncho if the latter should make good his threat to shoot him. A reward of $5,000 is offered. Broncho goes to the man who had befriended him and induces him to take him to the sheriff and claim the reward.

"THE PEACE COUNCIL" (Pathe), Feb. 8.—Paul Panzer has the lead in a story that makes much—too much—of the actions of two children. There is a flash of a scene of a round-up which was used in a previous picture—"The Round-Up," if memory serves—and it is good. There is a bit of comedy at the finish which serves to brighten the general production.

"THE MISER" (Lubin), Feb. 8.—This story is hackneyed; there is practically not a new thing in it. A son marries against his father's wish and is disowned. Later, when there is a child, the son loses his job. The child is ill; the doctor says he must be taken away. The son enters his father's home at night. He sees the father go to the safe and take out a box. As he is about to attack his parent he discovers that in the box are a lot of toys. Relenting, he is overheard as he goes out. There is a reconciliation.

"LADY PEGGY'S ESCAPE" (Kalem), Feb. 8.—There are thrilling situations in this production of Sidney Olcott. The picture was made in Ireland. Gene Gauntier, who wrote the scenario, also plays the lead. She introduces a novelty. On two occasions she fights a sword duel with the leaders of the marauders (Jack Clark), showing much rehearsing for the scene. There is an unusual amount of real action crowded into this single reel. There is a stirring escape by the heroine over a rope down the side of a castle from a high window—apparently half a dozen stories from the ground. The film is one of adventure, and as such is unusual and will make a hit.

"THREE SUITORS AND A DOG" (Kalem), Feb. 7.—Comedy of the mirthless sort.

"THE MATRIMONIAL VENTURE OF THE BAR X HANDS" (Kalem), Feb. 7.—On the same reel is another comedy by the same persons.

"THE BROKEN HEART" (Essanay), Feb. 7.—Ruth Stonehouse should not have been made to play O'Saki San, a Japanese girl. No possible makeup would have been convincing. The story is inane when it is not stupid.

"THE LAST BLOCKHOUSE" (Kalem), Feb. 7.—This two-reel special was reviewed several weeks ago in The World. It is a good picture—of the Western, the soldier, the Indian stuff. The chief characters are Carlyle Blackwell, Marin Sais, William H. West, Paul Hurst, Knute Rahmn and C. Rhys Price. There are many features that will interest any audience.

"SALLY'S ROMANCE" (Edison), Feb. 7.—This is a pretty story. It is a tale of the simplicity of a country girl who believed that the friendly interest of an artist was real love. An unfortunate interpretation of a word unwisely used—engagement, referring to a sitting—was the last straw, and induced the girl to set out for the city to find her supposed lover. How the real lover followed her and brought her back home when the girl discovered her error is well told. George Lessey was the artist, and Bliss Milford the girl.

"THE PRICE OF JEALOUSY" (Lubin), Feb. 7.—It is unusual to see Howard Mitchell as the leading character—the hero. We are so accustomed to seeing him as the bold, bad fellow that it requires time to readjust our judgments. The story is one of the Mexican border. Apparently it was taken in Pennsylvania. Certainly there is nothing in the backgrounds to indicate Mexico. There is a real troop of cavalry, which goes far to make the pictures worth while. It is noticeable that when the soldiers ride out on duty they omit the usual moving picture "bunk" of carrying a flag large enough to do duty on a battleship. The troop climbing a steep hill forms a striking picture. Wilbert Melville directs the picture, and he deserves no special praise for making his "villain" strike a bound man across the face. The conclusion of the picture has the merit of being different.

"THE FRENCH ARMY MANEUVERS" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 7.—Very interesting scenes. There are big fields and large masses of troops at times. There is one unusually fine picture of building a bridge of pontoons.

"THE OPENING BUD" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 7.—A hand-colored educational on the same reel as the foregoing. It is good.

"THE WHISPERED WORD" (Vitagraph), Feb. 7.—In this Western picture the opening scene seemed a bit prolonged. Robert Thornby and Mary Charleson have the leads, and their work is up to its usual standard. The Vitagraph Western company seems to get the Western atmosphere—to make you feel it. There is in this film one of the harmless holdups which so many noise-makers rail about. However, the picture goes over well. There is an ending that will stir the women.

"THE ARTIST AND THE BRUTE" (Selig), Feb. 7.—The artist is portrayed by Kathlyn Williams; the Brute—would you believe it?—by Hobart Bosworth. This is a team that would make any picture, and these two make this one. The story is of the circus, and there are many animals—an elephant, lions and leopards. There is a realistic encounter between the artist and a leopard, which apparently is shot to save the life of the artist, but probably is not. There is a thrilling climax.

"HOW THEY OUTWITTED FATHER" (Edison), Feb. 5.—The author of this picture, Milton Goldsmith, has reworked old matter cleverly to give parts to Edison players. There is not enough new stuff in it to make it truly fresh, but it is entertaining as such pictures are when done briskly by these people. Gertrude McCoy plays the girl perfectly; Augustus Phillips, her father's secretary, and Herbert Prior, the father, but Mr. Prior is far from at his best in such a part—a farcically senile old man. William Wadsworth plays the fossil whom her father wants the girl to marry. Julian Reed plays the wigmaker. C. J. Williams is the producer.

"LOVE AND LA VALLIERES" (Essanay), Feb. 5.—A fairly interesting picture that is well played and clearly photographed. The story is of a little mix-up when a lover, who has just bought a la valliere for his sweetheart, gets into the apartment above, where a trinket just like it has been lost. If he had not been thought a burglar and arrested, no one would have known that he had one in his pocket. Perhaps it would have been more amusing if, when the sweetheart, thinking him a thief, denounces him, he had turned from her to the girl who had him arrested but took pity on him. She was on old maid, but so much the better. Augustus Carney, the man, is very amusing. Eleanor Blanchard, of the apartment above, is also good. Dolores Cassinelli is the sweetheart; Beverly Bayne, the spinster's niece; John Stepling, the desk sergeant, and Joseph Allen, the jeweler—all do commendable work.

"IN THE POWER OF BLACKLEGS" (Kalem), Feb. 5.—A very pretty melodrama. Its scenes are quite natural in both acting and sets, and the picture seemed to make a good impression. For the last two or three weeks the pictures by this particular Kalem company have been showing careful preparation and imagination. Alice Joyce has improved remarkably since she came from the West. She is perfectly natural and without self-consciousness, which, with her beauty, make her in this picture very pleasing indeed. Tom Moore plays the son of her employer, who steals some of his father's money and lets her be suspected without owning up. In the closing scene he breaks down very emotionally. Lillian Hines does work that is a little gem of art when she tells of seeing Tom take the money. Richard Purdon plays the boy's father and, with the rest of the cast, supports the situation well. It's a good picture.

"A WHITE ROSE" (Pathe), Feb. 5.—A story that is full of freshness, although the situation is not new at all. The Rex company used the same thing about two years ago, but this is a much better comedy; there's more in it and it is funnier. An invitation to meet an unknown admirer and wear a white rose is sent to a husband by his wife and her girl friend—to try him. The friend doesn't know the husband, who sends his unmarried friend. The result, as given in this perfectly photographed and delightfully acted picture, is as entertaining as though the situation had never been used before, and the audience seemed to enjoy it wholly. Paul Panzer and Charles Arling play the two men. The two girls were not named on the screen, but both deserved to be.

"THE SKULL" (Vitagraph), Feb. 5.—A clearly told and perfectly produced burglar story that didn't lose its grip on the audience from the beginning. The acting that such a story demands is conventional. Florence Turner plays one of the important parts. Like the acting, the photography, the sets and scenes, everything that goes to make the offering natural and convincing, are of good quality. George Cooper plays a criminal janitor who knows that the jewelry store clerk (Leo Delaney) has had to take home some valuable gems, and, with the help of a pal (E. R. Phillips), burglarizes the house. The skull is thrown into the room by some medical students on a spree, and delays the thugs till help comes. L. J. Williams deserves credit for a new story, which is skillfully written up. Producer W. V. Ranous has made an excellent picture of it.

"THE COWBOY MILLIONAIRE" (Selig), Feb. 3.—A big two-reel special picture that we have already reviewed at length. After seeing it here in New York, where the audiences are surely enthusiastic, we can only repeat our pre-release estimate and again advise our friends to book it at once; it is an exceptional offering. Its a comedy, and the first thing that a spectator will notice is its bigness. Comedies are usually small affairs, but the backgrounds of this picture are the Wild West and the city of Chicago, including Lake Michigan.

"THE THREE WISE MEN" (Selig), Feb. 5.—A curious and exceptional miracle picture with, among others, two wonderfully beautiful scenes after famous paintings. The first of these is "The First Christmas," and the other is from the even more widely known "Behold I Stand at the Door and Knock." In its inner meaning and in every detail it is true, sweet and reverent and we are certain that it will please every one whose opinion is worth while. It is a Christmas story beginning in Chicago, where a clubman dreams that he is a witness of the journey of the three wise men and of their adoration at the manger. Thomas Santschi is the clubman; Bessie Eyton, the Salvation Army lassie and also the Virgin. Fred W. Huntly plays in one scene a very faintly visioned Christ, and in another the one who stands at the door. W. Hutchinson, E. James and Frank Clark are the wise men. W. Seiter is Joseph. Frank Clark plays as the devil. The camera work is of high order.

"CURING A TEMPER" (Eclipse), Feb. 5.—There is an air of freshness, without any essential newness, in this picture. It deals with rather Bohemian people and shows how a husband with a sharp temper is given a lesson. There is a scene at a dressmakers in it that goes as far as the censor board would let it. The picture is crisp and clever and is made to seem true by the players, who, especially the artist, do remarkably well. The photography is perfect.

"HOW IT HAPPENED" (Selig), Feb. 6.—A well-thought-out story, with interesting Western atmosphere, written and produced by William Duncan. It shows how it happened that the heroine's drunken father was shot and how her lover came to be suspected of an attempted murder. There's a slow chase about a well pictured country, and the man, eluding his pursuers, proves himself innocent. It makes a fair story, which is kept clear and interested a large audience. W. Duncan, Myrtle Stedman and Lester Cunio are the chief characters.

"THE BEAR HUNTER" (Pathe), Feb. 6.—A story of love and adventure, with only Indians in the characters. A live bear, after which George Gebhardt climbs a tree, armed only with a knife, adds greatly to its interest. The backgrounds are good and are very fairly photographed. It makes a serviceable offering.

"DON'T LIE TO YOUR HUSBAND" (Essanay), Feb. 6.—That the situation and its development has been used before doesn't harm this picture, because it is so rich in fun that it is worth while doing again. Then, the different players add something on the personal equasion side, and this tells. Eleanor Blanchard plays the wife whose clever scheme to get a fur coat, despite her husband, falls down, because hubby loses the pawn ticket. When his clerk finds it on the street and gets the coat for the stenographer it causes more trouble. John Steppling plays the husband; "Billy" Mason, the clerk, and Dolores Cassinelli, the stenographer. The audience seemed delighted with it; there was much laughter.

"STENOGRAPHER TROUBLES" (Vitagraph), Feb. 6.—One of the funniest Bunny pictures that has come out. The very best Vitagraph players have good roles, and it made a houseful roar with laughter. Flora Finch, as the stenographer who is acceptable to the boss, John Bunny, because he thinks there will be no danger of her flirting instead of working, draws a most astonishingly farcical character. When Florence Turner, Bunny's rather fiery wife, got into a rage on account of her the house bellowed. It most surely is a picture not to be missed. It is full of good character and full of laughter from beginning to end. Such a picture will repay special advertising.

"KEEPING UP APPEARANCES" (Lubin), Feb. 6.—A pleasant picture, with a poor girl on one side and a poor man on the other; they fool each other and then find each other out. George Terwilliger is the author and has treated the old situation in a human way. The difficulties of keeping up appearances are skillfully worked up and amusing. This, with some pretty love-making and good photography, keeps it enjoyable all through. Joseph Smiley, the producer, also deserves credit. Kempton Green and Isabelle Lemon are very acceptable in the leads. The whole cast does well.

"THE GYPSY'S WARNING" (Melies), Feb. 6.—A picture that as an offering is only fair. As it approaches its climax an old gypsy hag takes a man's fiancee to the grave of a gypsy girl whom he had abandoned and persuades her not to marry him. It is perfectly clear and intelligently acted, but without fire. There are also some pretty scenes, but the photography, while good, hasn't reached the point of perfection.

"OIL AND WATER" (Biograph), Feb. 6.—A picture that in many ways is a big offering. There are two reels of it, and it has some popular features; especially so is a beautifully pictured classic dance which is made to symbolize life and its pursuit of happiness. This falls naturally into a modern story, whose author seems to have imagined life itself as a dance, with some of the dancers hearing the music as solemn and some as gay. There is trouble when an actress, whose ear is in tune to the gay music, marries a studious man; she is water and he is oil, and they can't mix. There is a child of the union, which is used to enforce the picture's conclusion. Beautiful photography adds much to the offering. Henry Walthall and Blanch Sweet have the leads, and the latter makes good use of a big chance; she is fine in this role. Many of the girls in the dance have flowing draperies, with bare legs, and their dancing is remarkably graceful.

"THE BUCKSKIN COAT" (Kalem), Feb. 10.—A fair commercial offering, telling a story with not much that is new and with little suspense. It keeps a little flicker of interest going till the end. The backgrounds are in quality equal to other recent Kalem Indian stories, and the characters are very fair. The photography is a bit below the best pictures of this make.

"PIERRE, OF THE NORTH" (Selig), Feb. 10.—A French-Canadian trapper, played by Hobart Bosworth, is the central figure of this story. Pierre's rough, Indian-like way of making love is the cause of his death. The narrative becomes dramatic toward the end, and from the time Pierre sets a bear trap to catch his friend it becomes tense. A live bear passes through the picture, and at its climax two jealous friends are each fast in a bear trap within reach of each other, but not near enough to help each other. The script is by Elmer N. Wells and was produced by Henry McRae. Dorothy Davenport plays the girl, and E. E. Garelo, the friend of Pierre. The photography is very fair.

"DOWN ON THE RIO GRANDE" (Lubin), Feb. 10.—E. C. Hall has written another melodrama in which Mexican soldiers clash with Uncle Sam's cavalry. The heroine, a ranch owner's daughter, is played by Edna Payne, who has a very pretty smile. Edmond Carewe plays Bob, the brave foreman and happy rival of a captain (W. Cullison), who, with his men, Edna brings to Bob's rescue when he is standing off a body of Mexicans. It is only fairly interesting, but never falls below its level. The photography is fair.

"THE PRESS GANG" (Biograph), Feb. 10.—There is a fine comedy idea in this picture, and many a full reel has had less behind it. The acting is good enough to get it over to the audience, and it made a good deal of laughter.

"OH, WHAT A BOOB" (Biograph), Feb. 10.—A good farce. Some of the audience shouted, "Oh, what a boob!" to the hero of it when they saw him show his character. Both the offerings on this split reel seemed to please much. The photography isn't so good as usual in Biograph pictures, but is fair.

"BARRY'S BREAKING IN" (Edison), Feb. 10.—"The Breaking In of Barry" would have been a clearer title for this delightful romance, which is easily the best picture among the regular releases today. It tells a freshly imagined love story of an idle young son of a millionaire who is "broken in" to be a good workman by his father's friend, and it makes its characters attractive. James Oppenheim, the author, deserves good credit, as does Producer A. Miller, who has made a very pleasing, pretty picture of it. We feel that it would have been even better without the fire scenes and the heroics. Marc MacDermott plays the father; Barry O'Neil, the son; Charles Ogle, the father's friend, an inventor, and Bessie Learn, his daughter and the heroine. Both the young people are particularly engaging in these roles, while the two men are played with characteristic ease and truth. The photography and all details are excellent.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY," Feb. 10.—The Mutt and Jeff cartoons made a distinct hit with the audience. From a news standpoint, the topical isn't quite up to the usual standard. There are some fine snow scenes taken in the Cascade range, in the state of Washington.

Independent

"THE LOST MEMORY" (Great Northern).—This special feature has all the elements of a real picture. An exhibitor can approach it with confidence that he won't go wrong. It is a society drama in so far that the characters are people of position. The settings, both interiors and exteriors, are of the finest; of the former, those of a rich man's home as to the latter, beautiful landscapes. The photography is of the best. The story is coherent and interests. At times the suspense is of the deepest. The thunderstorm is vividly portrayed. The lightning flash is unmistakable. The acting is even and finished.

"A MODERN ARCHITECT" (Lux), Feb. 14.—This is a story of how Arabella built or rather superintended the building of her own home. It was all right until she attempted to occupy it and invited her friends in. Then it fell.

"LEOPOLD AND THE LEOPARD" (Lux), Feb. 14.—This is a comedy, a leopard comedy, and it is a dandy. It is on the same reel as the foregoing.

"THE MONKEY ACCOMPLICE" (Solax), Feb. 7.—In this picture a monkey is used as an accomplice of a thieving organ grinder. A missing necklace is the cause of an accusation being leveled against an ex-convict. The story is not made any the stronger by reason of too many convenient coincidences.

"A DAUGHTER OF VIRGINIA" (Champion), February 10.—A light dramatic offering which gets a fairly good grip on the observer's attention. The hero and heroine are a pleasing young couple and the outdoor scenes on the Southern estate attractive. It was a mistake to have the hero strike his would-be rival from behind. A rather entertaining reel.

"FRESH AIR FILKINS" (Imp), February 10.—Violet Horner and Hayward Mack appear as a young married couple haunted by fear of burglars. The husband sleeps on a sleeping porch and when John and Lizzie come home at midnight they are mistaken for robbers. Mack gives chase in his pajamas and while the two men are gone a couple of dress suit burglars come and pose as detectives. Affairs wind up at the police station. The day and night scenes are considerably mixed here—not new in theme, but rather diverting.

"THE WIDOW AND THE WIDOWER" (Rex), February 13.—As a comedy this rather misses fire, although nicely photographed. The plot, such as it is, hinges upon the marriage of the matinee idol to the widow. Their four children object, but we do not feel that the flirtatious methods adopted to bring about the consent of the children carry conviction to the observer.

"ON THE FRONTIER" (Bison), February 11.—A two-reel offering, well photographed throughout, but with a plot of very indefinite character. We had the feeling that the story was being made up as the picture proceeded, and consequently there was nothing to look forward to. The opening scene, in which an arrow and a bullet lodge in the rabbit simultaneously, and bring about subsequent warfare, was well devised and new. But the scenes which follow are conventional and go over old ground. As simple entertainment this will pass, but it fails to rouse much feeling in the observer.

"AUNT BETTY'S REVENGE" (Nestor), February 10.—This half-reel awakened some expectations which were not quite realized, but its photography is excellent, and the story passably funny.

"IN TEMPERANCE TOWN" (Nestor), February 10.—This might have been called "A Joke On the Judge," for the tramp, being tried for drunkeness before him, found the liquor on the judge's farm. There is a laugh in this, which appears on same reel with the above.

"THE MAN HIGHER UP" (Powers), February 12.—If this picture is intended for a satire on the weaknesses of occasional members of the judiciary, that would perhaps be a legitimate excuse for it. But we are afraid as it stands the satire is lost, and the observer is only conscious of watching the judge and the other three characters go through a debauch which is really not funny and hardly worth while. We could not find much purpose in the picture.

"THE LITTLE PEACEMAKER" (Nestor), February 12.—The old theme of the eloping young couple whose offspring eventually brings the quarreling grandfathers together. The scenes are laid in the West, and while old, the story is nicely presented, the pictures are very good, the baby cute, and the young couple pleasing.

"THE IDEAL OF POWER" (Powers), February 14.—There is a lot of steam and well-directed energy behind this photoplay, and the combination, despite its familiar stock gambling scenes, places the production in first rank. Edwin August gives us a forceful presentation of the young broker, who saves the father of the girl he loves from ruin on the street. The parts of father and daughter are also well taken. The photography is good and there were some good blue tints of light tone. A very good offering.

"THE RANCH GIRL'S MEASUREMENTS" (Frontier), February 12.—A light, breezy Western comedy, well pictured and acted with spontaneity. The ranch girl promises to marry the first man who brings her the exact number of yards required to make a dress. They measure goats, horses and the chorewoman trying to get an estimate. Of course the bashful hero guesses right, but he has to send in the goods by his dog, as a rival lamed his horse. The close is particularly funny.

"THE MYSTERY CAVE" (Nestor), February 14.—Here is a good, live story, with some imagination in it. The smugglers occupy a cave near which the border bandit, Miguel, was buried 100 years before. Each full moon, so the legend runs, the widow lights candles to drive evil spirits away. But the young revenue officer succeeded, nevertheless, in rounding up the smugglers, and was happily married to the heroine in the cave. A good offering of the adventurous type.

"IN THE RED MAN'S COUNTRY" (Bison), February 15.—This two-reel offering gets away from the conventional Western style of film. The plot is located at a frontier army post and concerns a young officer accused of murdering his captain. The scenes leading up to the murder, which was really done by an Indian, were very good. The hero falls to the ground in his attempt to escape from the house, and there is a dramatic moment when he is brought before the dead captain. The heroine, after some melodramatic adventures, succeeds in bringing back the Indian murderer and saves her lover's life. A strong release.

"STRICTLY BUSINESS" (Crystal), February 16.—Pearl and Chester get up a Get-Rich-Quick scheme on the girl's father, who won't let them marry till Chester has made $5,000. They make the money off of dad, and the manner in which this is accomplished is very amusing.

"AN AWFUL SCARE" (Crystal), February 16.—This on same reel with above, will amuse many observers. It concerns a belief in omens, and Schmaltz and his friends are greatly alarmed when L. M. Stiff sends Schmaltz a handsome casket as a present. Quite a good comedy reel.

"WITHIN THE TEN COUNT" (Reliance), February 15.—A briskly-moving photoplay, centering about a young country lad who develops as a prize fighter and whips the great Battling O'Leary. He quits when he gets the money, however, and goes back to his own sweetheart, whom he had temporarily abandoned. A vision he saw when he almost took the count brought about this decision. The usual training quarter views and prize ring scenes are well shown. Very good of its type.

"THE WINNER LOSES" (Majestic), February 11.—This picture has a story to tell and after a few vague moments at the start, due to uniforming sub-titles, it develops very well. Dick breaks the hoodoo that has always hung over his gambling ventures, and gives up gambling for good. Bob, who has always won heretofore, loses the ten kisses and the girl. The pictures are well taken and the settings well staged.

"GIRL, ARTIST AND DOG" (Majestic), February 18.—A story with a dainty flavor of romance in the first part of it. The artist meets the girl in the woods and love grows up between them. These opening scenes are very attractive. Both mothers object to the union and the baby and the dog aid in the final reconciliation. A pretty love story rather than a strong one, but it entertains nicely.

"GOOD MORNING, JUDGE" (Thanhouser), February 9.—A good love comedy, with a farcical close and some laughs strung along through it. James Cruze appears in one of his best characterizations. He bets $5,000 he can marry the judge's daughter within three months. The fight in the taxi was well pictured. An amusing offering.

"SOME FOOLS THERE WERE" (Thanhouser), February 14.—Here is a beautifully pictured light comedy which gets over nicely. Flo La Badie arrives at the big California hotel with her aunt, and three men immediately lay plans to strike up an acquaintance. All succeed, but the bird finally flits away, and they discover she is a great writer looking for material. The disconsolate poses at the last of the film are very effective. A good offering.

"A MYSTERY OF WALL STREET" (Thanhouser), February 11.—A good story of high finance, with its chief feature showing the manner in which a noted financier was spirited away in a steel-enclosed cab until the market closed for the day. The love story is well handled and the plot follows consistently from beginning to end. Not an exciting plot, but a rather fascinating one.

"THE FINER THINGS" (American), February 17.—Jack Richardson in this reel gives an appealing presentation of a ruined Wall Street man who regains health and happiness on a California ranch. The photos are good and the manner of his regeneration natural and effective. The influence of a child brings him back to an appreciation of the finer things.

"PECOS PETE IN SEARCH OF A WIFE" (American), February 13.—This Western man has a hard job finding a wife to his liking; he objects to the widow's sheep, the Indian girl's dog stew, and the Senorita's drunken father. But in the end he becomes too popular and has too many women on his trail. Amusing and well pictured.

"THE ROMANCE" (American), February 15.—Warren Kerrigan and Jack Richardson appear here in "store" clothes, which they wear with good effect. The photos are splendid, the scenes exquisite and the girl appealing. This film makes much of simple, natural situations and has decided charm.

"THE HARVEST" (Nestor), February 19.—A rural love story of the West with some very dramatic moments. It would have made a more forceful impression if it had not been so crowded with incidents. After the wife, whom her husband thinks blind, is led by the doctor to the window and sees her worthless spouse in the arms of the "woman who didn't care," the interest is at its highest and in the rest of the picture there is a good deal of anti-climax. But to this point it holds strongly and when this is past there is not much left. Some good photography and some very good acting make it a worth while offering.

"BILLY'S STRATEGY" (Gem), February 18.—Billy Quirk has the faculty of making such situations as this pleasing. In this picture he plays a youth who regains for his sweetheart a package of her letters from the house of a man who has refused to give them up. Billy deals, in turn, with the man's butler, the man himself, and then with three cops. Its twists and turns have often much of the unexpected, which makes the story seem fresh. It is played very well.

"THE PURCHASE PRICE" (Nestor), February 21.—It is the purchase price of a mine that is referred to, and the picture tells a mighty interesting story. It doesn't need acting of high order, but is very pleasingly played by all except the heroine, who, except in art, is more than acceptable. There is some very good photography in this picture. It makes a first class offering.

"THE SONG OF THE TELEGRAPH" (101-Bison), February 18.—Fine photography helps this picture of days when the telegraph was being pushed out across the wild parts of the West. The corps of engineers is being guarded by a body of cavalry. Most of the first reel is taken up with showing a love affair of a lieutenant and an Indian girl who, when the red men go on the war path, runs to her sweetheart. The second reel shows how the fort is notified. The telegrapher is caught by the Indians just as he has finished his message, and is shot; he hangs dead from the strap around him at the top of the pole. The ending seems unnecessarily brutal, but is much better than the false sentimental ending of many such stories. Taken as a whole, it is a very fair offering.

"BILLY FOOLS DAD" (Gem), February 11.—A farcical love story, in which mamma prefers Billy, while dad prefers Percy, a rich youth. Billy Quirk, who has the leading role, is popular and will please again in this picture. The leading woman is also acceptable. The story has little freshness.

"MANITOWOC, WIS." (Gem), February 11.—These pictures of important cities of this country are valuable. None of us know too much about them. They will serve to open our eyes. Here we have a panorama of the town and then some special views. The photography is good.

"THE TRAIL OF THE SILVER FOX" (Eclair), February 11.—A picture of the Canadian north woods. It has a fresh love story, pictured clearly enough and set in acceptable scenes. Some of the backgrounds are woodland places, and there are some pretty snow pictures. There are dramatic moments when the suspense is felt markedly, and the whole story is acted in a way that will please. The photography is commendable.

"BEN, THE STOWAWAY" (Imp), February 15.—We enjoyed this story very much. It is just a simple tale of a boy who had a talent for drawing. We meet him first in an orphanage, where they don't want to let him draw in his spare time. He escapes and stows away on a ship (these scenes are tip-top; they seem to give just the right feeling). After a hard time he meets a friend in a ship designer, and we leave him in good company. Ben Hall plays the boy, and does it pretty naturally. The backgrounds will please. The picture is just long enough, and a good offering.

"BINKS DID IT" (Imp), February 15.—On the same reel is this farce. Some people above Binks dance on the floor till they come through. Binks runs from the lumber yard with a board and gets a crowd chasing him, after the fashion of French farces. Binks is an amusing clown. The photography is good and the offering will hold.

"BILLY'S DOUBLE CAPTURE" (Rex), February 16. — Billy is a detective, and in the opening scenes we find him on the trail of a society highwayman. The story is romantic and has a pleasing quality. It gives a chance to introduce some interesting people in backgrounds of fashionable life. We are shown some very pretty views of houses and lawns in Southern California. The climax comes at a reception, where the criminal makes an attempt to steal the Batwell jewels, but is captured by Billy, whom he thinks is a guest. Billy's other capture is the heart of Miss Batwell. The acting is simple and natural; the conduct of the story is smooth. It will make a good offering.

"THE TERRIBLE DAUGHTER" (Eclair, Paris), February 16.—A picture in farcical atmosphere that is rather suggestive, and at times quite vulgar.

"WHEN A MAN MARRIES" (Nestor), February 17.—There are fine comedy possibilities in the situation behind this picture—finer than the author used. He begins all right. Some men agree together that the first one married during the year will pay for the next dinner. Two of these are married on the same day and meet on their honeymoon. That is a tip-top situation, for who will admit first that he is married? The author uses the idea that the man who refuses to drink whiskey will prove himself married. This is a little vulgar; but later the men deny that they are married and are taken to the police station, with their wives, as immoral people. This is very vulgar. The conduct and acting of the picture's story are commendable and the photography is excellent.

"TOURNAMENT OF ROSES, PASADENA" (Nestor), February 17.—On the same reel is this motion photograph of an event that we see in pictures every year. It is acceptable.

Kinemacolor.

"WITH THE SERVIAN ARMY BEFORE ADRIANOPLE" (Kinemacolor).—An interesting picture of camp scenes. One of the best is the departure of a large body of troops to repulse a Turkish sortie.

"A ROMANCE OF THE CANADIAN WILDS" (Kinemacolor).—A good picture, showing the adventures of a New York artist in the woods, and how he won a girl of the wilds. The spectator may be under the impression that the woman who bids good-bye to the artist on his departure is his wife; consequently the impression may prevail that the artist is making love when he shouldn't. A title would establish the relationship and prevent any misapprehension until the end of the picture.

"LOWER LAKE GENEVA, SWITZERLAND" (Kinemacolor). — An unusual film, containing many beautiful scenes, among the best of which are views of the Savoyan Alps and a sunset on the lake.

"FIFTY MILES FROM TOMBSTONE" (Kinemacolor). — American drama. It is interesting and gives good opportunity for showing the colors in Western scenery.

TO PRODUCE "A MIDNIGHT BELL."

Charles H. France is about to produce, under the Selig auspices, the famous Hoyt comedy, "A Midnight Bell." It will be a three-reel production carefully picturized by Kenneth D. Langley. It will be presented with studied regard for every detail of the striking original situations and quaint characters that sprang so vividly from the Hoytian gift for types.

"As in a Looking Glass" (Monopole Film)

By H. C. Judson.

MARIAN LEONARD has shown her ability as an emotional actress many times; but she surely will considerably widen her fame by her playing in "As In a Looking Glass," the more because her work is so adequately supported by a large cast. The story is pictured in three reels and is taken from a novel very popular thirty years ago. This will be likely to add to its popularity, for though the book is not a classic and is not read now, it has all the qualities of the present day best sellers and those emotional, exciting things that keep one something more than awake. It used to keep people from their beds; the picture doesn't last so long: it is condensed and much more vivid. Those who have read the story and half forgotten it will get the added advantage in that it will recall pleasant times of a quarter of a century ago.

The object of the story and the picture is to illustrate, amid a tangle of strange yet human vicissitudes, the long recognized truth of sour grapes in the parents' mouths setting their children's teeth on edge. It's a picture of a daughter who plays her mother's fates almost "as in a looking glass." The girl didn't deserve the treatment that she got from her evil mother. Happily she was as first neglected, almost forgotten by the woman who is keeping a gaming house. When the picture opens we find her a simple, clean hearted girl, hardly knowing who she is, living at a seaside village. She has fallen in love with a fisherman. In these first scenes views of the ocean are contrasted with the gambling house of the mother. But soon the woman finds that she can use her daughter as an attraction in the house she is running. She brings the girl from the village; but with no intention of letting harm come to her.

As time passes a need of money induces her to procure a marriage of her daughter to a rich count, an habitue of her place. The greater part of the first reel is taken up with the tensely dramatic struggle between the girl whom the man repels and the man whose methods are revolting at moments, in the beginning even to the mother who at length, for a large sum of money, practically forces her to marry him. The struggle and its ending is the picture's first big climax and while it is still hanging before us one or two idyllic scenes, a beautiful garden, a lovely bank of roses, throws the blackness of it out in strong relief. Producer Stanner E. V. Taylor shows throughout all three reels marked ability in his use of background.

After her marriage the girl finds to her sorrow what kind of a man her husband is, and the second reel opens with another dramatic struggle. This has the same inner meaning as the first, but the circumstances that surround it are a normal development. The girl is required to take the second step downward. The good in her still attempts to maintain itself against the evil in the man; but she is sadly hampered and soon is all he desires her to be. She has crossed the line and turns her face in a new direction, becomes the embodiment of evil. It is to be her revenge that, from now on, she will contaminate and destroy all who come near to her. Her great beauty gives her the power of a vampire. Her husband dies and she goes into partnership with a gambler to attract infatuated men to his house. A source of great revenue to him, he helps her in her schemes. To love such a vampire is in itself a sin and all the men who turn to her sell themselves in some way. Nothing saves them from reaping what they sow and each comes to some tragic end. The jockey, the actor, the bank cashier, the student, even the man whom, at the end, her wiles have sincerely attracted to her, who hasn't sold himself, suffers for her though he isn't destroyed. The whole story is pictured in front of some of the loveliest backgrounds that the eye could well imagine. It was photographed in Southern California about some beautiful hotel or in some perfectly laid-out park. There are garden walks under shady trees and corners full of flowers, with statues looking out from among the shrubs. While behind many of the scenes are lifted hills. We have seen lovely views in foreign pictures, but if any of them ever equaled these we don't remember seeing them. It is like a calm blue sky over a whirlpool of trouble and the teaching of the picture's ending attempts to justify it. The mystic vision-scenes that are thrown in now and then help us at the end to see that the woman is in some manner redeemed from the worst by the true love she feels for the man who has disinterestedly helped her.

Miss Marian Leonard was never seen to better advantage than in this forcefully dramatic picture. The character she plays is so wide in its scope, so full of storm and sunshine, that it gives her an almost unexampled chance to use her great power of depicting emotion. The spectator sitting before the screen is held from first to last by the strong, affecting story so truthfully acted, by the terrible fate that peers through it and gives it a moral purpose and by the indescribable beauty of its backgrounds that have been photographed in lovely pictures.

There are things in it that might be justly criticised. The story in itself is not a wholly truthful picture of normal life; it doesn't take a human girl for its heroine in a normal situation, but in an abnormal one. Yet it seems a normal development of the situation in which the girl takes on her mother's character as in a looking glass. The shortcoming is one of exaggeration, not of purpose, and this is in part made right by its healthy moral teaching. The best pictures are of good triumphant; this is a picture of evil sinking to ruin. It is a picture that will attract attention and, we feel sure, will draw well. It seems a much more healthy picture than is drawn in the mind by many of our big, widely selling novels. In art it is much higher than most of these.

PRAISE FROM CAESAR.

Mr. Ready and His Theater.

There is a man down South who runs a ten-cent moving picture and vaudeville theater. His name is W. P. Ready, and his theater is the Princess, at Nashville, Tenn. In the face of the prevalent idea that success attends only those theaters that are given over to the indecencies of the stage, Mr. Ready has reversed the process, and in every dressing-room of his theater and on every wall behind the scenes he has posted this warning:

> TO PERFORMERS. NOTICE.
> Our patronage is largely women and children. They come here to be entertained and not to be insulted. We intend to protect them! Your act must be clean. Do not say in your act anything before this audience that you would not want any one else to say to your mother or sister on the street. You have no more right to insult ladies and children in the audience by some indecent joke, song or action than you have to insult them on the street. We will encourage all performers with clean performances. We will prosecute any one who breaks the above rule either by word or act.

The actual result is that this particular theater is one of the most successful vaudeville and picture houses in the country. The Journal is glad to give Mr. Ready and his theater this free advertisement, not only to record the fact itself, but also in the hope that the wives of some other theater managers may read it and call their husbands' attention forcibly to the fact that, after all, decency pays a bigger dividend than dirt.—Ladies' Home Journal.

WATERS WINS SUIT.

The application of James H. White and John R. Schermerhorn for a new trial in a suit against Percival L. Waters, to establish a partnership between the plaintiff and Waters, who conducted the Kinetograph Company, was denied by Justice Vernon W. Davis of the New York Supreme Court.

The suit has been before the courts for a number of years and the plaintiff, in the first trial, met with defeat. They were in the employ of the Edison Company in important positions and the court found that while so employed they made an agreement with Waters, without the knowledge of the Edison Company, whereby for a stated share of the profits of the Kinetograph Company they gave to Waters certain preferential discounts and credits upon purchases made from the Edison Company.

The application for a new trial was made upon affidavits made by four men who swore that after the appeal in the case had been decided adversely to the plaintiffs they met Wm. H. Gilmore, an adverse witness to White and Schermerhorn. These witnesses alleged that Gilmore said: "He (referring to Schemerhorn) lost his case. I got even with him and I perjured myself to make him lose."

Justice Davis ordered a hearing on these affidavits and Gilmore himself was examined.

Justice Davis in denying the application for a new trial and referring to Gilmore says: "He frankly admits that he does not know what he said while there under the influence of liquor, but he reasserts the truth of the testimony given on the trial."

ECLAIR SIGNS CONTRACT WITH UNIVERSAL.

It is reported that the Eclair Company has finally signed a contract to release its pictures through the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. One of the first pictures to be released under the new agreement is the cartoon study of the "Newlyweds," after the comic series that has been running in the New York World for several years. The first big feature subject selected is "The Crimson Cross," a three-reel biblical drama containing a beautiful conception of the Life of the Nazarene.

"Love is Blind" (American).

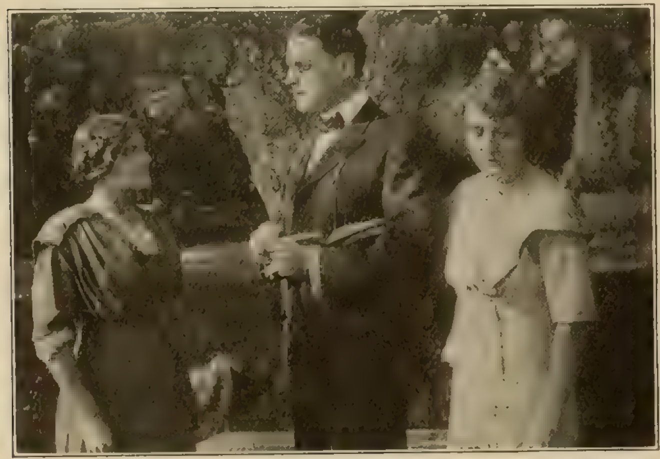
Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE American has filmed a pretty little love story in "Love is Blind," which is to be released Feb. 22. Producer Allen Dwan and his Western company are responsible for the drama, which has several beautiful exterior views, advantage having been taken of the rare scenery in the vicinity of Santa Barbara.

Warren Kerrigan impresses me more strongly by his finished acting in this picture than ever before, and although he has won most of his laurels in Western dramas, of the wild, boisterous sort, it seems to me that he fits in still better in gentler roles, such as Jack Berryman. It is hoped that he will have ample opportunity to appear in similar roles in the near future. Miss Pauline Bush gives a sweet portrayal of Lady Mayne's niece, and Miss Jessalyn Van Trump invests the part of Lady Mayne's daughter with a strong personality.

Scene from "Love Is Blind" (American).

Lady Mayne, her daughter Alice and her orphan niece Flora, are wintering in their beautiful villa in Southern California. Like all mothers, Lady Mayne is on the lookout for a good match for her daughter in the matrimonial field, and when Jack Berryman, the only son and heir of her old friend, Lady Berryman, becomes her guest, she plans that Alice and he spend much of their time together. Jack is suffering from an eye affection which threatens blindness, and his mother has sent him out to the Mayne villa with the hope that he may benefit by the change of climate and the quiet of the country.



Scene from "Love Is Blind" (American).

But, unknown to Lady Mayne, a serious obstacle confronts her planning. Alice is in love with Jimmy Harrison and holds frequent clandestine appointments with him. To the dismay of Alice, Jack falls in love with her. Soon afterwards he becomes stone blind. Alice takes advantage of his misfortune by inducing her cousin Flora to impersonate her, the deception being easily sustained because of the similarity of their voices. Flora learns to love Jack and suffers many heart throbs on account of the part she plays.

On professional advice, Jack leaves the villa and goes to a hospital. Before saying good-bye he declares his love to the girl he believes to be Alice, and the scene almost unnerves Flora, who is glad at heart that Jack is going away. Soon afterwards Alice elopes with Jimmy Harrison and Lady Mayne has the surprise of her life when a telegram arrives announcing their marriage.

Several weeks pass and Jack Berryman's sight is restored. He keeps his recovery a secret so that he may have a delightful surprise on his return to the villa for the girl he loves. He arrives, and is warmly welcomed by Lady Mayne. Flora still plays her part as Alice, according to her promise, and she leads him off to the little arbor where he had declared his passion. Jack is charmed by the sympathy and love reflected on the sweet face of Flora as he repeats his declaration, and it gradually dawns on him that this is the selfsame girl to whom he had made his first avowal. Then he makes known to Flora that he has recovered his sight and offers her his heart and fortune. Lady Mayne has the second great surprise of her life when Jack and her niece reveal their secret.

THE COLONIAL THEATER, WINONA, MINN.

The accompanying illustration shows the new Colonial theater, Winona, Minn., a modern, up-to-date house, built by the Colonial Amusement Company. The seating capacity of the Colonial, including the main floor and balcony, is 900. The house has a fine stage, so that vaudeville acts may be presented, in case the management so desires. The theater represents an investment of $40,000.

The construction of the front shows modern Colonial lines and is brilliantly lighted at nights. Two cluster lights at the curb and the lights on the front of the house and entrance attract the attention of pedestrians from quite a distance. The front is of Italian marble and terra cotta, with a tile floor entrance, trimmed with cream colored terra cotta. The spacious and pretty box office is set off by beautiful mural paintings.

Colonial Theater, Winona, Minn.

The interior of the Colonial is also very chaste in design. The decorations are in ivory and mauve tones, with gold enrichments. The modern Colonial style prevails throughout, in harmony with the architecture of the building. The wodwork is finished in ivory with mahogany trimmings. The indirect lighting system is used while pictures are being presented, and electric and gas illumination is used during the intervals.

At present, and since the opening, August 29, 1912, three reels of licensed pictures, with four changes per week, form the programs. No vaudeville is employed at present, but spot light singers and a six-piece orchestra strengthen the programs.

The Colonial Amusement Company also owns the Princess theater, which seats 350 people. Three reels of independent pictures form the programs in this house. L. G. Roesner and John V. Mott are the managers of both houses.

"The Gauntlets of Washington"

Edison Drama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THIS story is made delightful by some exquisite technical work and the magnificent acting of Marc MacDermott, well supported by Bigelow Cooper. MacDermott plays the part of a Revolutionary relic, a tattered vagabond of seventy, who beats the same old drum he used in the war to eke out a precarious living. He comes tottering up to a crowd before a tavern and excites the hostility of the community's most prominent man, the Squire, played by Cooper. After a clash with the Squire, the wayfarer finds his way into the hearts of men frequenting the hostelry by telling them the tale of how he came to be presented with a gauntlet worn by General Washington.

He begins with an account of how he saw Washington and his aids approaching a farmhouse. He gesticulates up to an attitude of tense excitement and there stands while the picture is transformed to a view of the period he is describing, merged into his narrative with consummate skill. We see MacDermott the youth watching the approach of horsemen instead of MacDermott the vagrant relating his story in the tavern, a marvelous double exposure because it transfers from an interior to an exterior and back again. Again, when the Squire enters the tavern to hear the tale, while he stands listening and the other reciting, the two are transfigured to represent characters in the war times, as it turns out that the Squire then played the fife to the other's drum. They were fast friends in those days, though the force of circumstances has carried their lives into widely different channels.

Scene from "The Gauntlets of Washington" (Edison).

All unconscious of the fact that the Squire of later times was the chum of his youth, the old drummer goes on with his story. There were Tories in those days both numerous and influential, so loyal to the old form of government that many took arms for the King, while others proved a serious menace to the cause of liberty in voluntary secret service. One of these ran several miles to inform a body of British troops that the American leader was at the farmhouse unattended except for his aids. He was followed by the drummer and his chum, and these two hurried back to warn the general of impending danger.

The two American boys devised a scheme of defense which they carried out with surprising results. They went behind a barn and impersonated an approaching army at the critical moment when a detachment of British troops came up to capture Washington. They alternated between playing their instruments and firing an old musket, both with deadly effect, until the enemy was put to flight. While both the presence of Washington within striking distance of the enemy and without the support of his own troops, and the rout of the foe require a stretch of the imagination, the purpose is patriotic and the presentation is one sure to be popular.

Washington is not supposed to play any part of especial significance in the tale; he is represented as indifferent to obvious peril; the main thing is to get him there and have him saved. This is hard to swallow. He thanks his preservers and presents each one with a gauntlet, the pair he happens to be wearing on this regretful occasion. When the drummer finishes his tale in the inn, he exhibits the glove he received and is thereupon befriended by the Squire. The latter takes the old drummer to his beautiful house, puts him in an easy chair, brings forth a fife and begins to play upon it. The venerable drummer listens with interest, then grows more and more intense until he recognizes in the player the comrade of his youth, and the two join hands in renewed friendship when the fifer produces the mate to the gauntlet Washington wore in the eventful days gone by.

Gone are those days, but remembrance of them is ever quickened by the sight of him who gave up his vast property, his home, and all that made life sweet to live for the sake of a principle still slumbering in the hearts of men. Whatever human qualities Washington may have possessed can be discussed by those unable to measure up to his noble ones, but a very practical point must be noted about all presentations in which he figures for even a passing moment. He did more than any other man in war and peace to establish the country we proudly acclaim, and though he may impose little upon the main incidents of a play, his appearance in person is one that instantly thrills the audience.

In a play of slender plot, where the main line of action really hinges upon a deed of his, however simple, sympathetic interest becomes naturally attached to him because he is a strongly-marked historical character. It is not only incumbent upon the director to tell the story, but there is an additional charge imposed of splendid characterization in one who is bound to hold attention every second he is within the range of vision. That additional charge imposed on the director does not mean defying whatever knowledge people have of great men in history, nor can he slight the ideals of the people in presenting one so near to their hearts.

Directors are very careful about the smallest details of a costume or a setting, but it is far more important for them to be accurate in responding closely to well established ideals in offering great historical characters to view. This one man stands supreme, not as a destructive military leader of brilliant campaigns for acquisition, self-aggrandizement or other selfish purpose, but for general betterment and self-denial, representing the flower of our manhood at the nation's birth, and pre-eminent in civil life among his contemporaries for indomitable courage, sound judgment, firm moderation, almost without an error of action or judgment recorded against him. He was in the highest sense of the word a gentleman and a man of honor, and one so noble, so generous, that too great pains cannot be taken to present him as he was to those trained from childhood to revere and love him.

HISTORICAL FILMS IN RUMANIA'S SCHOOLS.

M. Popseco, a deputy of the Rumanian house of representatives has, with the aid of kinematographic experts, produced a magnificent historic spectacle in films called "The Independence of Rumania." King Charles of Rumania gave his sanction to the making of these films, and has given them his unqualified approval. The films will be introduced in all the schools of the kingdom and will be used in connection with text books to teach the children the history of their country.

"Lost Memory" (Great Northern)

By George Blaisdell.

HERE is splendid drama. In the first place, there is a story. That is an essential, a primary essential all will admit, in a good picture. Again, it is well acted by skilled persons; also, it is carefully directed, the tale unfolding smoothly, consecutively. The settings and backgrounds are in accord with the position and apparent means of the leading character—a banker. And the photography? It charms. Throughout the two reels it continually impresses on you its quality. The work of the cameraman is fortified by that of his co-workers in the laboratory. There is judicious tinting and toning. Another point—and one not to be overlooked in these times of censorious sewing-circle hysteria: The picture is as clean as a whistle.

There are thrilling scenes—some of them sensational; as, for instance, the long ride of Thompson on the top of the train, when, after a year in the darkness of a faded memory, there has set up in his brain a glimmer of "heimweh"—an indefinable longing for something which in his jarred brain he dumbly feels but cannot quite comprehend. Then there is the realistic thunderstorm—the vivid flashes of lightning, the pouring rain splashing into pools of water in the highway through the woods, and the crashing to earth of the great tree, burying under it the automobile and the three men occupying it. These are scenes that stir the blood; there are, however, better and more dramatic moments—situations that stir the heart.

Scene from "Lost Memory" (Great Northern).

Just follow the story from the beginning that we may better explain the big scene. Thompson, a banker, gets word that a firm in another city owes him a large sum of money, is in desperate financial straits, and requires his immediate presence to help in avoiding bankruptcy. Thompson returns to his home, prepares for a journey, bids good-bye to his wife and little daughter, and sets out in his machine. There is a breakdown requiring several hours for repair. The machine is pushed to an inn, where the banker and his chauffeur partake of a hurried meal. At the table is a man closely resembling Thompson—he is bearded, of the same figure, but, unlike the banker, is not bald.

When another automobile has been procured Thompson prepares to resume his journey. The stranger suggests that as he is going the same way he will, if permitted to join Thompson, pay half the expense. The banker agrees. A storm comes up. The skies darken, the lightnings flash; a tree falls across the machine. The driver and the stranger are killed. Thompson, his clothes in tatters, crawls from under the wreck as fire starts. He is uninjured, but his memory is gone. The banker staggers across country, climbing over rocks and through woods. He comes to a stream, drinks and falls unconscious. Here he is found by a gypsy girl, who alarms her camp and the banker is taken in and cared for.

Thompson's chauffeur in his repaired car comes upon the wreck of the hired machine. He discovers what he believes to be the mutilated body of his employer and telegraphs Mrs. Thompson. When she reaches the building where the body has been taken her identification is superficial; she faints as the morgue keeper starts to remove the cloth from the face of the victim.

A year after the accident Thompson is still with the gypsies. The girl who found him still attends on him. He tells her he is going away, as his surroundings are not agreeable to him. He goes to a railroad yard and crawls to the top of a train just pulling out. There is a wild ride, Thompson clinging to a ventilator to prevent his being blown off. As the train slackens in pace the former banker jumps to the ground. It is night. He comes to the great fence surrounding his own estate. As he enters the house through a window a policeman sees him and goes to summon assistance.

In the house the black-garbed wife has assisted in putting to bed the little daughter. As she herself prepares to retire she hears an unusual sound below and calls the butler. Thompson has picked up a photograph. It is of his child. It is the final reconstructing agency that restores his mind. He knows who he is. The police rush in and handcuff him. The mother and daughter appear in the doorway. It is the child who first recognizes the intruder. The two embrace the husband and father. The shackles are taken off Thompson's wrists. He takes to his heart his wife and child.

CHURCHES PREFER SALOONS TO PICTURES.

For several months the saloons of Clinton, Ind., have been doing business on Sunday unmolested. Picture shows have been closed on that day. The exhibitors finally waked up and asked for equal rights with the ginmills. The mayor and council have thought over the matter and finally decided that while they would not say "Go ahead," still, if the exhibitors wanted to open and take their chances on being arrested under the State law, well and good. This seemed to satisfy the picture people. Now the church forces have got on the job and have seven petitions in circulation calling on the authorities to enforce the laws. Of course, there's a reason. But what is it? Is it possible the protestants feel secure against any possible competition on the part of the saloons, but really are afraid of the picture theaters?

A TALENTED CHILD ARTISTE.

A very young but very promising little actress, who has appeared in numerous productions, among them releases by the Edison and Vitagraph Company, is Miss Florence Klotz, whose picture is printed here. Miss Klotz hails from Brooklyn and is only a little more than eleven years old. From her earliest childhood she betrayed striking powers of mimicry and was in great demand for private theatricals and entertainments of a more professional character. In addition to her histrionic gifts, which have developed with the years, the little lady has a quick intelligence. Motion pictures fascinated the child artiste and in her first attempt on the silent stage she scored a success. Among the releases in which she has taken parts more or less prominent may be mentioned "The Little Bride of Heaven" (Edison), "Off the Road" (Vitagraph), "The Two Portraits" (Vitagraph).

The Moving Picture Educator

THE MOVING PICTURE HELPING THE DOCTORS.

A FILM well known to the moving picture fraternity, showing the development of the chicken in the shell through all stages of incubation, has just been shown to the Associated Physicians of Long Island. The Brooklyn Eagle in speaking of this event says, "For the first time since the advent of moving pictures the development of life has been shown upon the screen." It is to be regretted that leading newspapers are so far behind, in their knowledge of moving picture progress, as to speak of one of the wonders of the world as appearing for "the first time" one year after the release and review of such an educational picture.

The report referred to also enlarges upon the great possibilities now opened for the study of "all forms of life development." Here again it is well to point out that the moving picture is far ahead of the knowledge of even the leaders of public thought. It may be profitable at this time to call attention to a few subjects that have been filmed, each showing the development of various forms of life.

"How Plants Are Born, Live, Bloom, Fruit and Die" is a most helpful film.

"Roentgen's X-Rays" will also be interesting to the medical fraternity, as it has already been to those who have seen it months ago.

"The Fly Pest." This film is probably the most helpfully valuable subject ever issued, and is perhaps a little more widely known.

"The Frog." This film is equal in importance to that of the egg, as is also "Life in Our Ponds."

"Boil Your Water," "The Mosquito," and "Evolution and Life of a Silk Worm," are each subjects which, if more widely known, would be as profitable as the Brooklyn Eagle says that of "The Egg" is destined to be.

There is also a strong film for the medical profession, entitled, "Examination of the Stomach by the X-Rays," which would no doubt be as much appreciated as any. It may be said that such films as these are but indicative of the extent and value of kinematography when applied to the sciences, and the only reason why they are not more widely known is because the moving picture has been looked upon as filling only a minor position in the world, whereas its true position is that of a universal educator.

When as much publicity shall have been given to the beneficial side of the moving picture question as has been given to the critical and fault finding, then, without doubt, it may more readily and easily take its proper place among the powers for good in the world.

THE BIRD QUESTION IN MICHIGAN.

Apropos of the question of enlisting the children of America in the cause of better bird protection, a man in Saginaw, Mich., has offered seven prize medals to the young people of that State for best results in the following subjects:

An Essay on Birds in General.
The Feeding of Birds.
Photographing Birds.
Success With Bird-Houses.

The exhibitor in that State has a splendid opportunity open to him to help these young people by showing them such pictures as:

Wild Birds in Their Haunts.
Wild Birds at Home (colored).
The Chaffinch and Her Family (colored).
The Sedge Warbler and the Cuckoo (colored).
The Largest Pigeon Farm in the World.

It might be noticed that the donor of these prizes is himself the author of a work entitled, "The Passenger Pigeon," so that as an authority on the subject he knows full well the benefit of that knowledge he is endeavoring to cultivate. This example in the State of Michigan will probably be followed in many other places. England and Germany are taking up the question of bird protection thoroughly. In New York the authorities are complaining about the large number of birds imported for millinery purposes contrary to the law. It is generally supposed by naturalists that if a wider familiarity with birds were cultivated, people would become bird-lovers instead of bird-destroyers, in addition to the knowledge that the birds are a great benefit in both horticultural and agricultural respects.

HOW AN EDUCATIONAL PICTURE CAN SAVE A BAD PROGRAM.

The value and importance of the educational picture was never more demonstrated than on a recent afternoon in a prominent New York moving picture theater. Of five pictures shown three were dramas, one comedy and one educational. In this same theater a few weeks ago we reported on this page a record of eight deaths depicted on the screen in forty-five minutes. Upon the present occasion, while there were not so many deaths, the tragic events were more gruesome. There were two "hold-ups," the brutal murder of an old man in his house, and the almost execution of his manservant accused of the crime. This execution scene must be recorded as one of the most objectionable features in moving picture work, and justifies the severe criticism they so often receive. It seems almost useless trying to defend that better side of kinematography when we have such flagrant transgressions as these to deal with. To describe this execution scene would make the writer as guilty as the film maker, therefore no description of it shall stain this page; suffice it to say that it was an old English gibbeting, with every gruesome detail painfully drawn out to the near end. When it is remembered that the law prohibited these executions in public; it is certainly beyond comprehension how a tableau of it may be shown indiscriminately to men, women, and children, by the million; surely it should be either withdrawn or prohibited. With the exception of the educational picture referred to below, an exhibition of this kind gives neither entertainment or pleasure, which are the legitimate functions of the moving picture.

HINTS FOR THE LENTEN SEASON.

With the beginning of the Lenten season the intelligent and progressive exhibitor varies the ordinary course of his programs and makes room for subjects of a religious or semi-religious character. Of such subjects three are pre-eminent: The Pathe Passion Play, Dante's Inferno (Milano Films), and Jerusalem Delivered, or The Crusaders. To put such features on in a proper and befitting manner is essential to success. The Chalmers Publishing Company offers to exhibitors Lectures and Suggestions on these features, all of which have been prepared by W. Stephen Bush. The booklet on "How To Put On the Passion Play" has run into a second edition and is well known to exhibitors the world over. "Key and Complete Lecture for Dante's Inferno" and "How to Put On the Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered" are of the same standard of usefulness. The price for any of these booklets is one dollar.

NEW STUDIO FOR EDUCATIONAL FILMS.

Raymond Ditmars, in charge of the animal and reptile collections at the Bronx Zoo, who is the author of many elaborate books on Natural Science subjects, has erected the first studio to be used solely for the making of educational pictures. The Ditmars Studio is at Scarsdale, Westchester County, N. Y.

Mr. Ditmars has had much success in presenting lecture-entertainments upon Natural Science topics. He has the knack of taking apparently dry subjects and making them interesting enough to be in great demand before all kinds of audiences. He is convinced the same can be done with educational moving pictures. Prepared along these lines the educational film should become popular.

The new studio is thoroughly equipped for working under all conditions of light. A wing for daylight work is constructed of panels of ribbed glass. The main hall is equipped with mercury vapor lamps and arc batteries. The plant includes a very complete developing room, projecting room, machine shop and garage. A large automobile has been especially fitted for collecting work. It carries a powerful swivel searchlight, scaling ladder, tanks for transporting aquatic specimens and compartment boxes for terrestrial animals. The car is also provided with storage for provisions and clothing in camping out at night in favorable places.

Mr. Ditmars' idea is to make the small things in nature as interesting as the elephants, lions and tigers he cares for at the Zoo. He intends to take no pictures of the larger subjects, but to enlarge on the screen the tiny, wild creatures of which little is known. It is his conviction that among the smaller forms of life there is enough humor, tragedy, ingenuity, ambition and politics to prepare scenarios of marked human interest.

PULPITS ADVERTISE FILM.

In this day of newspaper and church agitation against the motion picture, it is assuredly odd and unusual and refreshing to learn that the clergy of a city join together in advising their congregations to go to a local picture theater and witness a film there shown. This is exactly what transpired at Ft. Atkinson, Wis., a week ago, after Manager F. W. Bellman, of the Lyric Motion Picture Theater, tendered the churchmen a special matinee performance of Thanhouser's "Star of Bethlehem." The ministers were keen to show their appreciation of Mr. Bellman's kindness, for immediately thereafter words of praise for an actual picture film exhibited at a genuine picture house were heard in the Ft. Atkinson pulpits. Listen to the story as Exhibitor Bellman tells it tersely, writing to C. J. Hite:

"At a matinee performance held in the afternoon for the benefit of the clergy, I feel that I made the greatest hit of my career as manager of this house. It is needless to mention the praise given the picture when I mention the fact that at the Christmas evening services in all of the churches the clergymen spoke of the picture to their respective congregations and advised them all to witness it."

The whole episode is merely proof that it is worth while to interest the local ministers in the motion picture form of entertainment. The World trusts that theater managers will hold more than invitation affairs with churchmen as the invited. It has always been understood in the industry that our keenest enemies have been the classes who never set foot in a picture house.

Several of the clergymen in Greater New York churches urged their congregations last Sunday to write to members of the Board of Aldermen to pass the vetoed motion picture ordinance over Mayor Gaynor's head. In some instances the request was made upon notes passed up to the pulpits.

KING COTTON.

This recent Kalem release is an interesting industrial picture, and thoroughly illustrates the wide occupation of the Southern negro. The whole process of this most common and useful household necessity is shown. Beginning with the sowing of the cotton seed, followed by the hoeing of the young plants, the cultivating between the rows until the plants are large enough to "bud and blossom." A famous "cotton picking" scene is elaborately pictured, and the baled cotton is despatched to the market. A cotton mill is next shown with all the details of spooling, spinning and weaving, through to the finished material; which in the form of dress goods is ultimately admired in the stores.

FALSIFYING HISTORY.

The following letter from Mr. Robert A. Lanton, of Washington, D. C., is written evidently by a level headed man who not only has common sense and an appreciation of the picture, but in this instance, as we happen to know ourselves, is well grounded in the facts of the history about which he writes. We have not seen the picture he criticises, "The Genius of Fort Lapwai" released as a Universal Company's Bison brand, but we have read the synopsis in the World for January 18, page 296, and we are compelled to say that every one of his strictures is just as concerns the story there told. Mr. Lanton says:

10 IOWA CIRCLE,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

January 15, 1913.

To the Editor Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—I am encouraged by the high standards you urge for the moving picture drama to address to you the following protest. I hope that the remarks I shall make will not come too late to be used by your reviewer. At least you can make subsequent comment upon, or quotations from them.

If the motion drama is to be a beneficial force in the education of the American people (and its permanence depends on that), historical veracity is one of the standards that must be observed by scenario writer and by producer. I know that is your attitude. Here is the case of a particularly flagrant and unwarranted liberty taken with historical fact.

In glancing over the film stories in this week's issue my eye was arrested by a play entitled "The Genius of Fort Lapwai" (released January 21st). Along in the first paragraph I noticed the name of Chief Joseph, of the Nez Perces. Much interested, and really pleased to find that someone had made use of the dramatic possibilities in the life of that great Indian, though I had in mind a scenario on his life myself, I read on. I discovered enough to disappoint and disgust me in the first paragraph. If it is not a fault of ignorance then it is a most outrageous insult to the fame of a great soldier that the general who deals with and insults Chief Joseph in the first scenes of this play should be given the name of Howard.

The fact is that General O. O. Howard, as noble and generous a character as ever graced the American army, did represent the American government in its unworthy efforts to persuade Chief Joseph to remove his people from the Wallowa Valley, in Oregon, which had been coveted by settlers. There is, however, no basis whatever for representing the real General Howard as insulting the Chief. Government reports and Nez Perce heroes of the Chief Joseph campaign with whom I have talked prove how gentle, compassionate and forbearing was the General in impressing the fact that the Government's wishes would have to be obeyed upon the tribe whose members were justifiably outraged by the breaking of their treaty in favor of white man's greed. The Nez Perce Indians to-day remember General Howard with respect and admiration. He had a most unpleasant duty to perform and he went through with it as a soldier must, but his personal letters reveal how deeply he sympathized with the wronged tribe. In the councils he had with the Nez Perce he was obliged to place under arrest a medicine man whose persistent fanaticism threatened to precipitate bloodshed. This is the only incident of these councils that might be construed as an "insult."

The circumstances that led directly to hostilities are only partially correct. True, the Nez Perces shed first blood in the actual campaign, but only when goaded beyond endurance by the high-handed seizure of portions of their lands by white settlers in defiance of treaty rights, and by the faithlessness of the Government. If the writer of this scenario had gone back into history he would have found that the first man killed by the Nez Perces was one who had murdered an Indian the year previous. The Nez Perces were, and are, an exceptionally intelligent, peaceable and high-minded people, and they deserve better treatment in literature.

As to the use of electricity in exploding mines, I do not feel sure enough of scientific history to criticise. But I venture to challenge the detail as absurd. I very much doubt if in the year 1877 and at a far frontier post, an electrical genius could have got the materials to perform this ingenious trick. As a matter of historical fact no electricity was used in any way during the Chief Joseph campaign.

Neither was Fort Lapwai the first objective of the Nez Perce warriors, nor at any time in the campaign was the fort attacked. The first battle was fought many miles south of the fort and on the borders of the Wallowa reserve. The Indians defeated a smaller force of soldiers and from there marched east toward Montana, keeping to the south of Fort Lapwai. In the five months of war Chief Joseph carried about four hundred Indian men, women and children over 1,700 miles of mountain riding, fighting five battles and only surrendering when surrounded by a greatly superior force. To terminate the campaign, as it is done in this play, by a sensational and fictitious coup is another insult to the memory of a great soldier and a noble man, Chief Joseph himself.

It is a disgrace to the Bison Company which has produced many a good, faithful story of frontier life, to let this film go out, spreading false and unjust information to prejudice the minds of the ignorant and the helpless. If this sort of thing is to continue I favor a historical censor whose duty will be to quash just such flippant mangling of historical facts. I am an admirer of your weekly, and an honest idealist in the field of motion drama.

The time has gone by when "any old thing" that happens to strike a director's fancy as a good story will pass muster as a reproduction of historic fact and it is high time that every manufacturer realized that pictures which utilize historic settings and personages must conform to the laws of all historic literature and have at least the semblance of verisimilitude. The Bison release in question was not released as a historical or educational, but as an ordinary "western," and we have been told by those who have seen it and ought to know that it is a very good one of that kind; the story certainly reads as if it might be a very thrilling and acceptable photoplay. Nevertheless, in view of the fact that no attempt to follow historic fact was made and that the script does most certainly falsify the facts of history from beginning to end, the manufacturer must be blamed for not following the universally accepted rule in such cases and instead of using real names and places have employed fictitious characterizations of personages and settings.

While regretting the incident, it is only fair to say that the Bison people are not the only offenders of this kind and that repetitions of the offense are quite likely to occur until the same care is taken in the production of semi and quasi historical productions for the screen as is taken with the producing of similar works on the stage. The real remedy, of course, is an over or collaborating director who will have charge of and be held responsible for all such technical points.

E. BOUDINOT STOCKTON.

One of Selig's Eastern companies left on the Dixie Flyer on Sunday evening, February 2nd, for Jacksonville, Fla., where the members will remain for several weeks. The members of the company are: Miss Winnifred Greenwood, Miss Edna Bunyea, Miss Caroline Cook, Miss Betsey Madison, J. A. Nelson, William Stowell, Lafe McKee, Thomas Flynn, Harry Lonsdale, Mr. Sargent, Mr. Hazelton and Mr. Roberts. The company is in charge of Mr. Persons, superintendent of the Selig plant. H. Kirkland is the producer, and Ed. Cull camera man.

MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE AT WORK.

The legislators of Massachusetts are very busy these days. The following summary will indicate in a measure the necessity for organization among the exhibitors of the Old Bay State—these being a resume of the bills aimed at the moving picture industry:

A censorship bill for each township or municipality.

Bill aimed at the motor drive. This is believed to be especially directed at Kinemacolor pictures.

To put in the hands of the police the duty of inspecting every moving picture film before its exhibition in public, and to prohibit the production of any immoral or indecent pictures, or any pictures tending to degrade the public. It shall be unlawful to exhibit any picture not inspected and approved by the police.

No theater shall sell tickets of admission in excess of its seating capacity.

Changing the time limit of continuous projection of pictures from that of one reel to one hour. This bill is backed by the State exhibitors.

Permitting the Mayor of Boston to license special exhibitions in churches, halls or other buildings which in his opinion are in safe condition, provided that such exhibitions shall be subject to the laws of the State and regulations of the district police. This bill is opposed by the exhibitors, who claim the bill is too far reaching and that it permits the projection of pictures in any place and would tend to hurt the moving picture business.

Authorizing the Mayor of Boston to suspend or revoke licenses for theatrical exhibitions, public shows and amusements.

Leave to withdraw was given on a bill to place in every theater or house of entertainment seating one thousand persons or more one member of the fire department, the expense of the same to be borne by the proprietor of the house.

In case an application for a license to show pictures is denied the applicant may within ten days file a petition with the Mayor for rehearing, which shall be open to the public. The evidence taken at the hearing shall be reduced to writing and if the Mayor decided that the license shall not be issued he shall set forth his reasons in writing. No applicant shall be refused a license after such hearing except on account of the nature of the evidence introduced at the hearing.

No person shall make application for an operator's license unless he has worked at least six months in a booth in a theater under the supervision of licensed operators. A person who has served six months in such manner shall apply for a second class license under which he shall have the right to operate a kinematograph or other similar apparatus in the presence of licensed operators only in theaters for a period of six months, at the end of which time said applicant may apply for a regular license. A fee of $2 shall accompany the application for a second class license. This section shall not apply to holders of licenses from other States.

M. B. Balsiger, secretary-treasurer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of South Dakota, sends us the following extract from a bill which has been introduced in the legislature of his State:

"House Bill No. 142, Section 4.—Anyone who presents by or with moving pictures any dramatic or humorous stories or scenes illustrating illicit love, infidelity in family relations, murder, striking an officer of the law or suggestive of crime or immorality, is guilty of a misdemeanor. . . ."

Very pertinently Mr. Balsiger inquires: "What kind of pictures do you suppose they want us to show?"

Mr. Balsiger closes his letter with an urgent request for every exhibitor in his State to send in his name for the mailing list of the league in order that all may know what is being done by the exhibitors' organization. Mr. Balsiger may be addressed at Huron, S. D.

Members of the Detroit Exhibitors League and local exchange men are waging a stiff fight against the state censorship measure introduced in the Michigan Legislature. The act provides for a state board of one man and one woman, to be appointed by the Governor and to receive salaries of $1,500 and $1,200. Each film passed on is to pay a fee of $2.50. "If the state tacks a fee of $2.50 on each film, the cost will be charged to the exhibitor," said A. W. Blankmeyer of the Detroit Universal Film company. "We get the strictest and most efficient censorship now from the local police department and 90 per cent. of the films used in the state are provided by Detroit exchanges. Chicago supplies a few West Michigan cities, but the censorship there is even stricter than in Detroit." Support from the National Association has been promised the local exhibitors. It is also expected that the manufacturers will take a hand in the situation.

SOUTH DAKOTA EXHIBITORS ORGANIZE..

A branch of the National Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for the State of South Dakota was formed in Huron, S. D., February 7. Representatives of a dozen or more of the important houses in the State were present. Letters and messages were received from many others who could not attend, but signified their intention of affiliating with the organization. Officers of the South Dakota Exhibitors' League were elected as follows:

President, L. D. Milne, of the Maynard, Mitchell.

First Vice-President, Dr. E. C. Smith, of the Crystal, Geddes.

Second Vice-President, J. A. Dundas, The Julian, Chamberlain.

Secretary and Treasurer, M. B. Balsiger, Bijou, Huron.

National Vice-President, J. E. Hipple, Bijou, Pierre.

A committee on constitution and by-laws consisting of L. R. Stacy, of the Mascot, Mobridge; G. F. Cleaver, the Crystal, Pierre, and C. C. Baker, Dreamland, Britton, were named and reported a constitution and set of by-laws for this State.

A legislative committee consisting of L. D. Milne, M. B. Balsiger, Dr. E. C. Smith, J. E. Hipple and J. A. Dundas prepared a bill to govern the moving picture business in this State, and at a late hour last night the bill was passed and approved upon by all members present. This measure is fashioned after the laws of California, Ohio and other States where experience has shown that the needs of safety appliances and proper construction of motion picture theaters was necessary.

PITTSBURG EXHIBITORS WILL DANCE.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pittsburg is making extensive plans for a large dance and reception to be held in that city on Easter Monday. The large English room of the Fort Pitt Hotel has been engaged for the dancing, and Morreli's Band will furnish the music. It is expected to have a number of photoplay actors and actresses from the East take part in the entertainment, and from the present outlook the affair will be a very successful occasion. Nearly all the members of the league have signified their intention of attending the ball, and as these members will be augmented by others the affair should be a very important and beautiful dance. A supper will be served during the entertainment. The dance is being organized in order to raise money for the delegates of the local league is making the New York convention. The Pittsburg league is making big plans for this convention and is doing all in its power to boost the publicity and importance of this meeting. Fred Herrington and Thomas J. Barbin, who were the representatives of the local league at the recent Columbus meeting, returned from that convention very enthusiastic over the outlook. At that meeting they were able to realize the importance of the Pittsburg organization and its position as a delegate body to the New York convention. Arrangements will soon be made with the Philadelphia league to join the Pittsburg delegation at that city on the trip of the latter delegates to New York. A band will be hired to meet the local delegates at Philadelphia and accompany them to the convention city.

NEW YORK "STANDEE" LAW SUSTAINED.

Chief Justice Franklin Russell in the New York Court of Special Sessions on Tuesday, February 11, rendered an important decision in a test case brought to determine the legality of the so-called "standee" law. In the ruling made by the Chief Justice, in which he is sustained by Justices Forker and Zeller, it is held that the "standee" law is legal, and under it he fined Abraham Marks, the owner of a moving picture house at 159 Rivington Street, New York, $100 for allowing visitors to his place to stand in the aisles. Some twenty other cases now awaiting action before the Court of Special Sessions depended upon the ruling in the Marks case. The decision is a victory for Fire Commissioner Johnson who has detailed a squad from the Bureau of Fire Prevention under Chief Howe to enforce the law from now on.

ILLINOIS LEAGUE ELECTS OFFICERS.

At the meeting of the Illinois State Branch No. 2 of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of America, held Monday, Feb. 3, in Schiller Hall, the following officers were elected for 1913: President, Julius A. Alcock; vice-president, C. A. Anderson (re-elected); treasurer, Wm. J. Sweeney, (re-elected); recording secretary, Sidney Smith (re-elected), and financial secretary, Miss Sarah Colson, in place of S. Katz, who resigned.

The members of the executive committee are: Chairman, C. C. Whelan; I. Natkin, J. D. Rose, F. O. Nielsen, M. Choynski, H. A. Ruebens (Joliet), and John Duffin.

The meeting was attended by over 100 exhibitors, and much enthusiasm prevailed during the proceedings

Taft Agrees with Gaynor.

President Vetoes Bill Providing for Censorship in District—Suggests Punishment for Display of Improper Pictures.

The bill proposing a censorship by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for all moving picture films has been vetoed by President Taft, on the ground that it would encroach on one of the duties of the Police Department. In the message to Congress returned with the vetoed bill the President suggests the passage of a measure that will simply prohibit the exhibition of objectionable films and calls attention to a letter from the Commissioners to the Attorney General, in which the District executives say they would rather not be burdened with the duties of the censorship.

The President's message, in part, says: "Upon inquiry I find that the requirement of Section 2, that all picture films shall be submitted to the District Commissioners for investigation and approval before exhibition, as, under present conditions, not only unnecessary, but incapable of enforcement without unduly encroaching upon the services of the police force of the District.

"I beg to suggest that the purpose of this bill may be accomplished by a statute merely prohibiting, under a penalty, the exhibition of objectionable pictures, without the requirement of prior investigations and approval by the Commissioners before exhibition, and to recommend the passage of such a measure."

HEARING ON PICTURE ORDINANCES.

The Committee on Laws and Legislation of the New York Board of Aldermen held a public hearing Saturday, Feb. 15, on half a dozen proposed ordinances for the regulation of moving picture theatres in Greater New York. There was a general invitation given to all persons interested in the subject to attend.

Proposed ordinances which were introduced a year ago and measures introduced only last month were all taken together collectively, and the public were invited to give the aldermen views pro and con on the measures.

Mayor Gaynor has already urged the aldermen to "get busy" and pass a sensible law to govern the moving picture theaters.

The half dozen proposed measures that came up for discussion on Saturday consist of the ordinance proposed by the Mayor's committee and known as the Folks ordinance. This is the measure that was recently defeated by the tacking on of a censorship amendment giving the Board of Education the power to pass on the films. Alderman Folks hopes, eventually, to get this measure through as it was originally drafted without the obnoxious censorship clause.

Alderman Morrison of Brooklyn has a censorship ordinance in committee, and so has Alderman White; the latter naming the Mayor's Bureau of License as the authority to pass upon the films.

The other ordinances that were considered consisted of various measures having to do with the interior arrangement of the moving picture theaters.

EXCELSIOR FILM ON MONDAY, MARCH 3.

A new brand of film added to the Mutual Program is the Excelsior, the first release of which will be made on Monday, March 3. The company has been quietly working in Florida, and now has on hand a number of negatives which have turned out satisfactorily, and which it is said compare favorably with the best brands of film now on the market.

CLAUDE PATIN TO ASSIST MR. BLACHE.

Claude Patin, lately arrived from the Paris office of the Gaumont Company to assume charge of Paris matters in the Flushing office of the Gaumont Company, will be an assistant to Herbert Blache. Mr. Patin's lieutenancy will leave Mr. Blache more free for his major duties of policy, politics and general management.

JERSEY CITY'S ORPHEUM CHANGES TO PICTURES.

Anthony Michel, operating the Orpheum Theater, Jersey City, N. J., has abandoned stock, and is now showing high class moving pictures. Through J. H. Hallberg, the Economizer Man, he purchased a Powers No. 6A machine, Hallberg A. C. Economizer and asbestos booth.

NEW KINEMACOLOR WAR REELS.

An entirely new Balkan War program will be offered by the Kinemacolor Company on Monday, February 17, at the Carnegie Lyceum, where "The Making of the Panama Canal" and "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War" in Kinemacolor have been playing to exceptionally good houses for the past two months. There are four new reels.

Manufacturers Advance Notes

"THE BETTER WAY" (Ramo).

The first Ramo release, while not fully indicative of the good things to come, is above the average release both in story, action and production. Mary Denver has married in a fit of pique and finds too late that Jack is drunkard. Her life is made miserable for several years when Tom Horton, the man she really loved, returns from a stay abroad. He renews the old acquaintance and quickly comes to an appreciation of the situation, for Jack comes into the parlor slightly intoxicated and leads the visitor off to the library for a drink. He takes several to Tom's one and his condition rapidly grows worse as the guest takes his departure sorrowing over the life he knows the woman he loves must lead with such a man.

Even Pauline, their little child, has learned to fear her father in his evil moments and shrinks from his approach. Mary has even better cause for fear, for in his cups Jack is brutal and the second time Tom comes to visit he finds her with an ugly bruise on her arm, a bruise that she endeavors in vain to conceal.

Scene from "The Better Way" (Ramo).

That afternoon, at his hotel, Tom gets a letter from a firm offering him a responsible position in a foreign country. The thought that he can take Mary with him and begin life anew follows close upon the letter and he writes urging her to go with him.

In her desperation, she accepts and promises to be ready that afternoon. Little Pauline has seen her packing her suit case and, full of joyous thoughts of the visit she supposes they will make, hurries off to pack her own small belongings.

Full of eager anticipation she takes her place in the parlor ready to start, and waits the call. When she hears her mother's voice in the hall she runs out, confident of the good time coming and rather surprised at the consternation she creates. Meanwhile Jack has found the letter from Tom to Mary and watches through a fold of the curtains.

The sight of the child brings Mary to a realization that silent suffering is the better way and she turns back to her duty while Tom, heartbroken, goes his own way alone.

In her room she breaks down, but Jack appears, sobered by the shock and realizing for the first time what his conduct has meant to her. He promises reform and is taken back to her heart while little Pauline, dimly realizing that something has happened, unpacks Mary's bag by the simple process of throwing the things all over the room.

The production was made under the personal direction of Wray Bartlett Physioc, with Miss Mary Alden, Jack Hopkins and James F. Ayres in the leading roles. Pauline Curley plays the child.

"THE PRODIGAL BROTHER" (Pathe).

Fairfax Browning is the black sheep of a wealthy and respected family. Before a brilliant assemblage of guests the engagement of Miss Theodora Browning and Mr. Paul Pritchard is announced and every one is enjoying the affair, until a note is delivered to Fairfax. His sister notes the effect the note has upon him and her belief that he is in trouble is confirmed when he asks to be excused because of a slight illness. The note is from a money lender informing Browning that the former is aware that Fairfax has forged his father's name to a note and that, unless there is sufficient money forthcoming, Mr. Browning, Fairfax's father, will be informed. Young Browning leaves hurriedly to come to some agreement with the money lender and his sister follows him. Paul Pritchard, seeing his fiancee leaving in evident distress follows her.

During Browning's discussion with the Shylock the note is exhibited. Fairfax attempts to force it from the owner and in the scuffle a revolver is accidentally discharged and the money lender seriously injured. By this time Miss Browning is in the house and when she hears the shot she flees, but in her haste she drops a locket bearing her name. Paul, who was awaiting developments outside the house, forces an entrance when he hears the shot. The wounded man staggers out to meet him and drops at his feet just as the police enter. The police find the locket, show it to Paul and he immediately admits he is guilty of the assault.

Scene from "The Prodigal Brother" (Pathe).

The noble sacrifice awakens Browning to a realization of the life he has been living. He goes to his father and makes a clean breast of the whole affair. The latter helps his son obtain an admission from the dying man that the shooting was accidental. With this document Paul is cleared and allowed to rejoin his bride-to-be, and his sacrifice has not been in vain since it accomplished the reform of The Prodigal Brother.

This film tells a real story and is certain to entertain every lover of the drama with a thrill to it. It is superbly acted and you would do well to book it. It will be released on February 19th.

Friends of the motion picture will learn with pleasure that the Republic of Brazil has enacted a law, introduced by Senator Guanabara, placing Brazil in the list of the countries which declare themselves bound by the convention of Berne, which gives international protection to literary property of every kind. Up to the present time Brazil respected no foreign copyrights, but extended the protection of its laws only to Brazilian subjects or residents of Brazil.

E. P. SULLIVAN IN "THE BELLS" (Reliance).

In line with the growth of the introduction of well-known artists into the world of screened pantomime is the Reliance Company's presentation of Edward P. Sullivan in "The Bells"—made famous by the late Sir Henry Irving. Mr. Sullivan is an actor of recognized ability and of the many great characters he has portrayed, that of "Mathias" in "The Bells" stands out as his masterpiece. The several seasons he used "The Bells" as his starring vehicle were most successful from a financial as well as an artistic standpoint.

Recognizing the fact that, with Mr. Sullivan in his favorite role as "Mathias," "The Bells" offered a rare opportunity for a splendid two-reel feature production; the "Reliance" put forth every effort to present an offering that would be a real event in the history of the picture pantomimic art. The result is a noteworthy success.

Scene from "The Bells" (Reliance).

The story of this powerful drama, which is well known all over the civilized world, is even better adapted to picture than it is to stage production. By double and triple exposures the desperate crime committed in the blinding snow storm is magnificently handled—thanks to the genius of Director Oscar C. Apfel, who staged the presentation—and the wonderful scenes, in which "Mathias" is haunted by an awakened conscience and the fear of exposure, with the remarkable climax which ends in his death, are presented with a realism only made possible by a combination of masterful direction, artistic acting and scientific work with the camera. "The Bells" will be released on February 19th.

OUR APOLOGIES TO GEORGE MAGIE.

It was with the best intentions that we promised to print a picture of a scene from the first Pilot release, "The Blacksmith's Story," on the front cover of the World last week. As a matter of fact we did so print the picture, but by one of those singular errors that sometimes happen in the best regulated offices, the picture was credited to Pathe. This unfortunate error ran through about half the edition before it was discovered and corrected. Of course George had to get a copy that was printed incorrectly and was very properly peeved. We print this paragraph to inform our readers who received copies of the World with the misprint, that the picture should have been credited to Pilot. It was a good picture—better than the average, and deserves a place on the program of every independent theater.

"THE HIGHER DUTY" (Lubin).

This picture contains a story and the moral lesson fit to make an intense problem play. Hearts may break, but "The Higher Duty" faces the pure woman and strong man. The photoplay is perfectly cast and Joe Smiley, the director, has given every attention to atmosphere and expression. It is one of those pictures that women like and will doubtless have a prosperous vogue.

Marie Dearborn, a nurse, is engaged to go to the home of an old schoolmate to nurse her child. The family are rich and Marie is overwhelmed with the home, but soon discovers that Mrs. Allen Hall is a frivolous butterfly and simply tolerates her husband. The child improves and the mother accepts an invitation to visit friends 30 miles away and the child is left to the care of the trained nurse. A few days later the little boy gets worse and Marie phones to the office for the father. Together they watch over the boy all night and an improvement takes place. The next night Hall leaves his club early and goes home; there he discovers that there is a sympathy between himself and the nurse. For a while he plays with the child, then giving vent to his feelings he attempts to embrace Marie. She becomes frightened and points to the door. The nurse immediately writes to the mother, urging her to come home quickly as she has to take another engagement. Mrs. Hall arrives and, paying Marie off, bids her good-bye. At the depot, Allen Hall meets her and, admitting his fault, they part each with a heavy heart.

"GIRL, ARTIST AND DOG" (Majestic).

The Majestic Company's release for February 18th is a flower-like romance in pretty rural settings and full of the beauty of the woods and fields. The plot is simple and its object is to create a feeling of human sympathy. Its hero is a boy-like artist who meets, on one of his daily sketching trips, a very pretty girl whom he sees at once will make a lovely picture. Her mother objects to her sitting for him, but they meet again, become the best of friends and soon are deep in love with each other. Her dress is rough and a bit tattered. The boy knows that if he marries her and takes her home to his mother as she is there'll be trouble, so he procures for her a new frock and hat and the minister marries them.

Scene from "Girl, Artist and Dog" (Majestic).

But, even so, the mother is not impressed with her new daughter-in-law. She has to accept, but can not give any affection to her. The picture grows dramatic and emotional as it leads up to the climax when the mother finally takes her to her heart. To make this effective, the author has deprived the young woman, who by now has become a mother herself, of every stay except the love of her husband. She is shown as feeling her lot so keenly that she runs away to her own mother, who will have nothing to do with her. In an affecting scene the husband finds her weeping in their old trysting place, takes her back and demands that his mother treat her affectionately, which for the sake of the baby she is now glad to do.

General Film Company Enjoined.

Temporary Injunction Granted on Application of One of the Stockholders.

Richard A. Rowland, who holds 460 shares of the preferred stock of the General Film Company, obtained a temporary injunction Tuesday, February 11, from Supreme Court Justice Hendrick against the Directors of the company and the film manufacturers whom they represent on the company's board. This injunction restrains the directors from dividing $211,116.03 surplus now in the company's treasury. Mr. Rowland is also bringing suit to compel the return to the company's treasury of $844,463.95, which he said was paid out to film manufacturers who joined the General Film Company.

This $844,463.95 went to the film manufacturers in these proportions, between May 22 and Nov. 20, 1912, according to Mr. Rowland's affidavits: Biograph Company, $83,926.08; Thomas A. Edison, Incorporated, $98,217.04; Essanay Manufacturing Company, $81,853.36; Kalem Company, $72,666.64; George Kleine, $61,846.86; Lubin Manufacturing Company, $81,096.50; G. Melies, $25,186.87; Pathé Frères, $131,972.73; Selig Polyscope Company, $87,762.41, and Vitagraph Company of America, $119,935.46. On May 22, 1912, there was divided in similar proportions $134,863.11, according to Mr. Rowland.

These distributions to the holders of common stock in the General Film Company, which amounts to $100,000, Mr. Rowland said, were a grave injustice to the holders of preferred stock, of which $795,000 worth was issued in $100 shares, paid for at par, or exchanged for valuable businesses. Rowland came into the General Film Company as the half owner of rental agencies in Pittsburgh, Rochester, N. Y.; Cincinnati, Des Moines and Omaha.

The Motion Picture Patents Company, which has been alleged to be a combination of holders of patents, such as the United Shoe Machinery Company has been charged with being, has been the object of court attacks in which the General Film Company has been mentioned. Independent film rental agencies have charged in Supreme Court actions that the General Film Company was formed by the so-called moving picture trust to drive independent rental agencies out of business. Federal proceedings against the motion picture trust are now in progress, and it is from revelations made at some of the hearings, at which inquiries were made into the film trust's disposition of its profits, that the Rowland injunction proceedings arose.

A copy of the injunction was served on President Frank L. Dyer of the General Film Company Tuesday.

The Theater Film Company, Inc., have bought the exclusive New York state rights on "The Miracle" and are rapidly filling all open dates on this marvelous production. Special music has been arranged to accompany the pictures.

"MONTE CRISTO" CASE ARGUED.

The General Film Company, defeated in the lower court by the granting of an injunction on the application of James O'Neil to restrain them from distributing films for motion picture exhibitors of the play "Monte Cristo," has carried the matter to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court for review.

Nathan Burkan for the General Film Company argued before the Appellate Division on the application for the dismissal of the temporary injunction as follows:

The General Film Co. contends that the motion should have been denied because O'Neil has not shown a clear title to the Fechter version of "Monte Cristo." There is no evidence of the exclusive ownership of the Fechter version by John Stetson, O'Neil's immediate assignor, except the complaint and affidavit in the case of Stetson against Studley, brought in the Supreme Court, Kings County, in September, 1884. The Fechter version is not an original work, but an arrangement of matter, incidents, dialogue, language and ideas taken from Dumas' novel and from other dramatizations of the same. No material infringement has been shown. Treating the plaintiff's case in the most favorable light, the injunction is too broad. Even according to plaintiff's own showing only a small portion of the General Film Co.'s pictures can be condemned. And these are not an inseparable or essential part of the entire series. The display in public places of pictorial posters depicting scenes of O'Neil's version constitutes such a publication thereof as to destroy the plaintiff's common law rights therein. The order does not present a propore case justifying a preliminary injunction. The plaintiff's rights are not clearly established and he has not shown that an injunction will be of any present benefit to him, while the value of defendants pictures will be destroyed and thus the same result be accomplished as could be gained by a judgment in favor of plaintiff after trial.

For O'Neil, David Gerber and John B. Knox argued that, being in manuscript form, the play will be protected in the State courts against infringement. A motion picture exhibition of a play is a performance, violative of the rights of the owners of the play. O'Neil's title is unassailable. He has produced it for past twenty-eight years. The General Film Co., as a distributor of the films, is a contributing infringer. The piracy of the "Fechter" version of "Monte Cristo," owned by O'Neil, cannot be seriously disputed after a mere comparison of the book, play and motion pictures. The contention that because the plaintiff advertised "Monte Cristo" pictorially, showing several characters and several of the scenes, it enables anyone to perform the entire play upon the stage is not only manifestly untenable, but a proposition which has been repeatedly advanced by pirates, and just as often rejected and repudiated by the courts.

The Appellate Division is a court of last resort on temporary injunctions, so that the action of these five judges will practically settle the entire litigation.

P. A. Powers Resigns from Universal.

Carl Laemmle and William H. Swanson Purchase His Entire Holdings—No Change in Universal Program.

Announcement is made at the offices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company that Carl Laemmle and William H. Swanson have purchased the entire holdings in that company of P. A. Powers and that Mr. Powers has resigned as vice-president and director in the corporation. The transaction involves the transfer of $204,000 common stock and $75,000 preferred, and was executed on February 13. It is said that the friendliest feelings prevail between the retiring official and his former associates. All the Powers' producing companies remain with the Universal, and the program will be unchanged.

The suit recently instituted in the Supreme Court of New York by C. V. Henkel, formerly auditor of the Universal, praying for the appointment of a receiver for the film company, and the first hearing of which on February 7 was postponed to February 19, has been withdrawn.

LOUISVILLE.

MOVING picture operators of Louisville are suspected of robbing a boy of the "Gypsy's Vendetta." James Brown, a fourteen-year old lad, was carrying the second reel of the three-reel Union feature from the East Broadway theater to the Preston theater when the robbery occurred. Two men stepped out of the darkness at Beargrass Creek and Broadway and held the boy up at the point of a pistol. The men made no effort to take anything else. George Steurle, manager of the East Broadway, a Union house, was notified, and he in turn gave the details of the affair to the police, who are now working on the case. It is believed the film was thrown into Beargrass Creek, as no one could possibly profit through its use. The East Broadway and other theaters operated by the Broadway Amusement Company were especially obnoxious to the operators, who are now on a strike, and it is generally thought that strikers pulled off the hold-up. The strikers themselves have promised to assist in rounding up the perpetrators of the deed. So far, however, nothing has been learned as to its whereabouts.

O. B. Scheck, of Cleveland, president of the International Union of Picture Show Operators, has arrived in Louisville in the hope of being able to amicably arrange a settlement of the dispute between exhibitors and operators. Mr. Scheck is quoted as condemning the walkout in no uncertain terms. The head of the union stated that the strike was uncalled for.

The men now in the booths are to be retained, it is said. In short, the moving picture houses will be operated as "open shops," where neither union nor non-union men will be favored.

The Louisville Photoplay Association offered to take back as many union men as possible on the "open shop" basis. This proposition was rejected by the strikers. The latter has waived the original cause of the disagreement, the time clause in its contracts, and the matter which was the cause of the strike is now regarded as unimportant. The operators and musicians, it is said, have decided to enlist the city authorities in their fight, as far as possible. This is taken to mean that all of the operators now working in motion picture theatres will be required to take examinations, aimed to test their efficiency. The exhibitors have no objection to this test, and will not oppose the passage of such an ordinance. The union men will of course also be forced to take examination before returning to work, and the proposed measure is regarded with favor by many owners. The work of the new men in the booths has, however, been uniformly satisfactory to exhibitors.

"The Movies" is the style of a new department which recently was launched by the Louisville Herald. An entire page was devoted to news of the moving picture business, and the feature scored heavily with the public. While the title of the page has not appealed especially to exhibitors, the idea back of it has. Members of the Louisville Photoplay Association are justifying the newspaper in running such a page by advertising liberally. The paper will make a twice-a-week feature of the moving picture page. Sketches of the stars and general stories of the business are to be used. The paper in introducing the department, stated, "there need be no excuse or xplanation for this enterprise when the vast extent of moving picture theatrical business is known."

The Cecilian theatre has been opened in Louisville by J. H. Leroy, a new arrival in photoplay circles. The Cecilian is located at Twenty-third and Wilson streets. The new house contains about 200 seats. The theatre will run at nights only, with the exception of Sunday, when matinees will be given.

Miss Catherine Johnson has joined the staff of the Novelty theatre, and will render the vocal music during the near future. Miss Johnson is a soprano of talent. She succeeds Wheatley Glasscock, who has terminated a successful engagement at the Novelty.

Cheers during the presentation of the "Ambassador's Daughter," an Edison film shown recently at the Majestic, attested to the excellence of the production. The film was filled with gripping situations and was well handled in every respect.

Plans for Louisville's new theatre, the National, have been completed and contracts will be let in the near future. The structure will be erected at a cost of $200,000. One of the features will be the stage, which will be the largest in Louisville and one of the largest in the entire South. The proscenium arch will be 40 feet wide, while the stage will be 38 feet deep. Three floors are included in the plans. The balcony will contain a dozen boxes, while the same number will be placed on the main floor. The seating capacity of the theatre will be 3,000. Vaudeville will be mainly used, though it is probable that moving pictures will round out each performance. The new house will be ready by the opening of the theatrical season next fall.

The quick wit of Manager Lipscomb, of the Bijou Theatre, Fifth and Walnut streets, Cincinnati, prevented a panic when fire was discovered in the basement of the building. The several hundred patrons walked out of the theatre unaware of any trouble. The fire was discovered by two firemen, who at once notified the manager of the theater. He had the operator turn off the current, following this with an announcement that the apparatus was totally disabled and that checks would be issued at the box-office. The patrons filed out in orderly fashion, discovering the fire several minutes later. It was extinguished with slight damage, and the Bijou resumed operations shortly after.

The Elite theater ,of Bowling Green, Ky., contributed heavily to the relief fund of that city, which went to allay the sufferings of residents driven from their homes by high water. The theater, under the management of J. R. Masters, gave the receipts of one performance to the relief workers.

The Dreamland theater was opened recently at Providence, Ky., showing to big crowds. Music was a feature of the opening performance, an orchestra of six instruments rendering accompaniment to the films shown. A. J. Hurley is manager of the theater.

A. B. Barkley, Jr., has resigned as manager of the Georgetown, Ky., Opera House, and will shortly open a new animated picture house in that city. Harry White has taken over the Opera House and will continue motion pictures as a leading feature of its performances.

At a meeting of stockholders of the company which is erecting the Ben Ali theatre of Lexington, Ky., Charles H. Berryman was elected manager of the new house. Mr. Berryman is also manager of J. B. Haggin's farming interests. The latter is heavily interested in the Ben Ali.

Extensive improvements are to be made in the Columbia theater, of Bowling Green, Ky. The seating capacity is to be enlarged by moving the stage back. The curtain is to be elevated and the ceiling of the theater raised. Tony Sudekum, president of the company, announced the plans following a conference with Manager Masters. Several thousand dollars will be expended.

Reports that a syndicate of New York men is seeking a site at Seventh and Vine streets, Cincinnati, for the erection of a new motion picture theater are given credence by many exhibitors of that city. The new theater, according to tentative plans, will be the largest in Cincinnati, containing about 1,800 seats.

Louis Steurle, of the Broadway Amusement Company, is now in Hot Springs, Ark., on a combined business and pleasure expedition. After leaving the springs, Mr. Steurle will tour the South in search of new ideas to be incorporated in the East Broadway theater. This house will be remodeled in the near future, and it is planned to make the theater one of the handsomest in the entire South. The Broadway Amusement Company is now using three stock companies in its houses, all receiving warm receptions, though the moving picture continues to be the chief drawing card.

The Casino theater, operated by the Princess Amusement Company, has announced a daily change of pictures, in lieu of the three-times-a-week policy which has been in vogue. The admission price has been reduced to five cents.

The Norman Amusement Company has been incorporated in Louisville, taking over the Norman theater at Twenty-first street and Portland avenue. The incorporators are John M. Wentzel, Mrs. Delia Wentzel and Chester Wentzel. The capitalization is $5,000, the debt limit being placed at $10,000.

Fire prevention in moving picture theaters came in for discussion at the annual meeting of the Kentucky State Fire Prevention Association, an organization of insurance men, held in Louisville recently. Frank M. Drake, chairman of the law and ordinance committee, took the attitude that motion picture houses in Kentucky offered altogether too many chances for repetitions of the disasters of past years. He urged that greater attention be paid these theaters in the future. His talk was heard with interest by the fire prevention men. Exhibitors who heard of Mr. Drake's address are of the opinion that the animated picture theaters are in the majority of cases well equipped against fire. It is admitted, however, that in a few isolated cases, exhibitors have not taken every precaution against a conflagration, and it is this small percentage that the Fire Prevention Association will educate.

One of the handsomest moving picture theaters in Kentucky is the one recently completed at Pineville. The Lyric was erected at a cost of $30,000, being built of concrete and brick. It is fireproof in every respect, a dozen exits holding danger of trouble in any case to a minimum. Pineville is located in the Eastern Kentucky coal section, and the Lyric is drawing heavy patronage from miners and others. The theater was built by individual subscriptions, officers of coal corporations contributing heavily.

The Rex theater of Hopkinsville, Ky., has installed an orchestrion, M. Welts & Son, of Freiburg, Germany, handling the order for the instrument. The new orchestrion has been put in place and is playing to the pictures in gratifying style.

Hopkins Theater, Louisville, is following the lead of legitimate houses in lithographing the city, utilizing billboards in various sections. The theater has been the first of the moving picture contingent to feature its attractions in that way.

The Garrick theater, of Madisonville, Ky., will give its patrons more for their money in the future, having announced that four reels will be shown instead of three. Licensed films only will be used. George A. Bleich is manager of the Garrick.

The Royal theater will open at Troy, Ala., shortly, the company having been formed with a capitalization of $3,000. John W. Bowers, Sam J. Starke and M. C. Folmar are interested in the Royal.

The Broadway Amusement Company, of Toledo, O., has begun the erection of a new house. The company is capitalized at $10,000, Thomas L. Gifford being president. Others interested include A. A. Sullivan, F. J. Reis and W. T. O'Hara.

"Rip Van Winkle," a Union feature, proved a good drawing card at the Hippodrome theater, Louisville, recently. Max Simons, manager of the Hippodrome, is contemplating the installation of a balcony in the house at Second and Market streets. The attendance at the theater has been such as to warrant a further investment and work will probably begin in the near future.

T. P. Taylor, Sr., a prominent Louisville druggist, is contemplating the erection of a moving picture theater, adjoining the Keith house on Fourth street, near Chestnut. Should plans materialize, the new house will go up in the rear of buildings now standing on Fourth street, the entrance being through a long passageway. Mr. Taylor has for some time been anxious to enter the motion picture business, for a time contemplating the erection of a theater directly across the street from Keith's.

The question of publishing a weekly program has arisen among Louisville exhibitors, but none has as yet decided to print the weekly schedule. However, the exhibitors of other cities have been successful in making a program bear its own expense and it is expected that the same will prove true of Louisville.

IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

FOUR Illinois cities, Bloomington, Freeport, Danville and Canton, are having interesting discussions of the Sunday theater problem. In the first three it has practically been decided that if is an issue important enough to be passed upon by the voters. A special ballot will settle the matter at the Spring election in Freeport. The picture shows have been running there on Sundays, but the result of the vote which is made possible by the closing of a vaudeville house may close them. Enough names have been secured in Bloomington to file a legal petition and arouse the ministerial association to plans for a campaign. Discretionary methods will prevail in Canton, for a while at least. The Sunday theater, including the photoplay house, was discussed at a meeting held at the United Brethren church, where it was decided to appoint a committee consisting of one member from each church in the city to call upon the theater owners and ask them to close.

Frame buildings used for moving picture houses in Moline, Ill., must be reconstructed with masonry walls within a year, according to a new building ordinance passed by the city council. Originally the measure provided that all picture houses built in the future must be of fireproof construction but later an amendment was offered affecting present conditions.

Rev. Fr. C. H. Krekenberg, pastor of Sacred Heart Roman Catholic Church, Springfield, Ill., who is active in a movement of the Springfield Social Study Club to do away with improper moving pictures in the city, admits he has not been in a local theater since he witnessed "Dante's Inferno" but feels sure of his ground. "A glance at the posters advertising the pictures is enough to prove this assertion," he says. "What I know about the inside of the houses comes to me in reports made by the younger members of the clergy. They have told me some of the pictures that never should have been displayed before patrons, especially before the younger people. Divorce pictures, pictures of holdups and robberies and pictures of conditions in the saloon and café life of the cities are among those I would class as especially objectionable." Father Krekenberg recognizes the value of the picture and sees it as a permanent factor in our educational scheme but pleads for better conditions in its use for entertainment. The Social Study Club will not confine its fight to the films but is strongly against some attractions which have appeared at local theatrical and vaudeville houses. Father Krekenberg even criticizes the newspapers because they "print cuts of theater people in poses or dress not always entirely proper and they contain write-ups of shows that sometimes are suggestive of evil." A committee of the Social Study Club was appointed to investigate local picture houses and report to the city council.

Robert O. Bell, who was formerly engaged in the moving picture business at Jerseyville, Ill., has returned to that city and opened the Colonial theater in the Colonial Hotel building. He is giving a five-reel show every night.

A concrete foundation slipped from under one end of a new moving picture theater being erected on Washington avenue, Upper Alton, Ill., by W. A. Clark, and that portion of the building collapsed, causing a loss of about $1,000.

Officials in Joliet, Ill., have announced that theater owners who admit school children to their places during school hours will be dealt with harshly. Mayor Edmund Allen announced that if the practice continued licenses would be revoked, and Harvey Wood, attorney for the school board, declared that offenders would be prosecuted.

Talbot S. Williams of Champaign, Ill., has opened a moving picture show in the Modern Woodmen of America hall at St. Joseph, Ill., and will give shows each Tuesday and Saturday night. A prize was offered for the best name. Floyd Baum, city electrician of Champaign, is operator.

The Granville Theater Company of Chicago has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,500 to do general theatrical business. The incorporators are Harvey H. Wells, Homer P. Jones and Joseph J. Tuohy.

Moving pictures furnished by the International Harvester Company were used to illustrate the lecture on "The Dawn of Plenty," given by Frank Stockdale before the Illinois Corn Growers and Stockmen's Convention at the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.

The unfinished Temple Theater property on South Jefferson avenue, Peoria, Ill., probably will be sold to satisfy mechanics' liens aggregating about $15,000 unless an appeal to a higher court is granted.

The Woman's Club of Rockport, Ill., had charge of the Photoplay Theater in that city when "The Little Minister" was shown.

Senator Rosecrans has introduced a bill before the Michigan state legislature providing for a board of censors modeled after the Pennsylvania law. It provides for a man and woman censor with salaries of $1,800 and $1,500 a year respectively. An inspection fee of $2.50 for each film is asked and a minimum penalty of $50 for exhibiting an uninspected film and not less than $100 for the second and each succeeding offense is proposed.

The University of Wisconsin proposes to establish a collection of 150 reels of film which will be loaned through the University's Extension Department to schools throughout the state. Many schools have machines but are not in position to pay the expense of securing an adequate supply of suitable films. Some machines will be kept and loaned to schools not fortunate enough to possess them.

The Amuzu Amusement Company has leased the building at 515 East Locust street, Des Moines, Iowa, and will open a new moving picture theater after expending about $15,000 in improvements.

Wartime pictures will play an important part in the program at Lippincott Theater, as the new picture show at the Illinois Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Quincy, Ill., will be known. While the Board of Administration which controls the institutions is favorable to moving pictures and has been installing outfits as rapidly as possible, this show is due to the efforts of the new superintendent, J. O. Anderson, who turned over to the machine and film fund the profits of a store operated in the colony. The theater seats 800 persons and the home has 1,400 inmates so that it will be necessary to give shows on each night on which there are no other attractions, and two or three afternoons each week for the invalid members.

Hancock & Son have opened a moving picture show on the south side of the square at Knoxville, Ill.

It is reported that the building on Monroe street, Springfield, Ill., formerly occupied by a cigar store and but four doors from the principal corner of the city, may be secured for a picture show, but local picture men do not believe the quota of houses will be increased.

Operators of Otawa, Ill., gave their first annual ball January 30 at the Knights of Pythias Hall. Many operators from surrounding cities were present.

The Star Theater at Watseka, Ill., has installed a new Wurlitzer orchestral piano at a cost of $1,450.

Fred Lynn and Ray Walters have succeeded George Davison in the management of the opera house at Bushnell, Ill. They will continue the picture show but will use some other attractions.

B. Argeropolis, who has been operating the American Theater on Chestnut street, Kewanee, Ill., on Saturdays and Sundays, has closed the house until spring. When re-opened it probably will be run every day.

The Litt & Dingwall Company of Chicago has been incorporated with a capital stock of $6,000 to operate theaters. The incorporators are Sol Litt, George C. Warren and Daniel J. Egan.

Yeager & Weik of Rochelle, Ill., who operate two moving picture houses in that city, have purchased the Lyric at Morrison, Ill., from Kolet & Foufas, who have conducted the place for the last year. The house will be remodeled. Kolet & Foufas will open a picture show in Moline, Ill.

The Board of Education of Omaha, Neb., has decided to expend $125 in having the Panama Exposition Company show pictures of work on the canal to 20,000 school children of that city.

William Wheeler of Milwaukee, Wis., is contemplating opening a moving picture show in Madison, Wis.

John Buss of Freeport, Ill., has sold his lease on the Orpheum theater in that city to Mr. Rademaker of Chicago. The place has been operated as a vaudeville house, but Sunday performances have been prohibited and the lessee declares it was a losing proposition. The new owner opened it February 8 as an exclusive picture house.

The Hargrave lot on South Main street, Hillsboro, Ill., has been rented for a summer theater according to the owner who announced the building plans to the city commission.

Moving pictures of the Forest Park Zoo made by the Motograph Company and films of the Bronx Zoo in New York city were used to illustrate a lecture before the St. Louis Association of Credit Men by Cortlandt Harris, secretary of the Zoological Society of St. Louis.

The Universal Portland Cement Company of Chicago is planning to give moving pictures of concrete road making before a meeting of Will county highway commissioners at Joliet, Ill.

Six stockholders, Isaac Hoover, W. H. Moore, J. M. Schwartz, J. L. Colegrove, Kelsey Sharp and J. R. Sharp, of the Taylorville Amusement & Enterprise Company of Taylorville, Ill., prepared a suit asking the circuit court to restrain J. and M. J. Hogan and Ernest Hoover, directors of the company, from selling the company's property—the opera house. They also ask an accounting and receivership. It is alleged the directors planned to sell the opera house building to another company in which they are sole stockholders, the incorporation papers having been issued some time ago. The Hogans and Hoover own about three-fourths of the stock in the amusement company and declare that it had never paid and that the other stockholders will not join them in paying off indebtedness amounting to about $7,000 of $8,000 and that the sale is imperative.

W. A. Paterson has sold the Colonial Theater at Quincy, Ill., to A. L. Schuhardt of that city who has asumed the management.

M. Young will open a moving picture show in the Hassler building at Arlington, Ill.

Rev. Dr. John L. Brandt, pastor of First Christian church, St. Louis, Mo., has installed a moving picture machine and pictures will form a part of the regular Sunday service.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

BRANCHING out is the chief occupation of Springfield moving picture theater owners these days. Following the advent of W. W. Watts of the Vaudette into the Chicago field came the announcement that Bernstein & Shepherd of the Capital were preparing to open a new place at 11 North Sixth street. Upon the heels of this came the sale of the Savoy, which has been a licensed house, to Gus Keresota of the Royal, which has been giving a generous independent program. Bernstein & Shepherd have a new partner in the North Sixth street house which fill be known as the Amuse-U. Ben Rovin of St. Louis, a brother-in-law of Burnstein, will take active charge of the place and the firm will be known as Bernstein & Company. An entire modern outfit has been purchased. The sale of the Savoy witnesses the retirement to private life of Mrs. C. H. Wineman, who has been operating the place since her husband's death.

The Essanay Company had a cameraman on the ground February 3 when Governor Edward F. Dunne was inaugurated. The ceremonies were very simple, but the interest in the new governor and his large family, including the new mistress of the mansion, who proposes to do her own cooking, is keen throughout the middle West and the pictures will no doubt prove popular.

Elmer L. Ott of Springfield, who represents the Powers Company in the middle West, is placing many new 6-a Camereagraphs. He outfitted the new Amuse-U on North Sixth street. The Decatur, Ill., High School has purchased a modern machine, the first school in Illinois to be equipped, although many others are raising funds for the purpose. Fause & Demble of the Bijou at Auburn have added the modern projector apparatus to their show. Ott recently sold a private electric lighting outfit to J. W. McPherson of Loami, Ill., who will give picture shows three nights a week. Ott & Enos have purchased the feature "Blackmailed" and Enos, formerly connected with local theaters, is on the road with it.

"John, look on the calandar and see what day of the month Monday is," a common enough command in any household, might have brought the answer to any Springfield inquirer: "February 3, 'From the Manger to the Cross' at the Vaudette." The State Journal issues each month a special calendar which is hung in the homes of most of its readers. It contains a list of the important meetings such as conventions, etc., and the attraction at the Vaudette was the nearest to advertising it had carried. Manager Watts again demonstrated that the regular moving picture house can do a good business with twenty-five cent attractions. The three days that he showed the Kalem biblical masterpiece were business-bringers. The first day he had competition when the Grand showed the Thanhouser "The Star of Bethlehem." Watts is very well pleased with his statesright venture, as Illinois requests for booking the film have been numerous. The supply of special paper was very limited, but rather than have Harry Thornton and Ben Francis Whitney, lecturers, in charge of the No. 1 set idle, they were sent out to the smaller towns near Springfield, where the small stock of paper could be used to advantage and played to good business. Return engagements will be booked for some of the theaters.

The Casino Theater, East Washington street, is trying to live up to its slogan "Springfield's Greatest Feature Theater," and is showing a great many two and three-reel pictures.

Major H. T. Loper, proprietor of the Lyric, played an important part in the inauguration of Governor Edward F. Dunne, as he was one of the five national guard officers who rode in the parade.

Walter Davisson, pianist, has left the Vaudette and has gone to Portsmouth, Ohio, where he has a position in a theater. Roy Elliott, violinist, is now leading the orchestra.

ILLINOIS.

FREEPORT citizens put an unusual twist in the ballot upon the Sunday theater question. Instead of submitting a single question to the voters it was decided to allow them to decide three issues—should the theaters and vaudeville houses be allowed to open; should moving picture shows be allowed to operate on Sunday and should billiard and pool halls, skating rinks, shooting galleries and bowling alleys be allowed to operate. This form of ballot raised a big protest.

The Universal Portland Cement Company of Chicago has been securing good results from an industrial picture "Concrete Road Construction," which has been exhibited throughout Illinois in connection with meetings of farmers' institutes.

Fox street is to be the "Theater Row" of Aurora, as it will soon have four brightly illuminated houses. The Egermann building at Fox and Water streets is being remodeled into a picture house to be operated by W. H. Marple and his associates, who also control the Palace. William Mullen will also operate a theater with a Fox street entrance and John H. Ferris, once in the moving picture and vaudeville business in Chicago, will quit a chicken farm near Aurora to operate a moving picture house in the Downer Place block.

Roy C. MacMullen and F. L. Scheidt each hold 59 shares in the newly incorporated Colonial Photoplay Theater Company of Joliet. L. H. Sandiford, with two shares, is minority stockholder in the concern which has a capital stock of $12,000 for the construction, establishment and operation of theaters.

The Colonial Theater, 426 North Main street, Bloomington, is said to have had a slight fire recently which resulted in the discovery of neglect of the fire regulations, one exit being completely barred by a piano standing across it.

C. E. Mertens and Will D. Lumpp are promoting a new $20,000 opera house at Shelbyville and have disposed of $5,000 worth of stock.

The Groves theater at Granville has changed management and has been re-opened as the New Star, a picture house.

Manager James Reilly of the Princess theater at Alton had a special matinee for the delegates of the Southern Illinois Lumbermen's Convention which met in that city. The pictures of Alton recently made under the auspices of the Board of Trade were exhibited.

Plans have been completed for the new Remington Theater in Kankakee to replace the structure which was destroyed by fire October 3, 1912. It will be entirely fireproof and will cost about $72,000. The contract will call for its completion by June 1, 1913.

Carl Rademacher of Chicago, who took a lease on the Orpheum theater in Freeport and converted it from a vaudeville house into a high-class picture show, closed the place from February 1 to February 7 to make needed changes.

The Joy Theater, East Court street, Paris, has been redecorated, and a new ventilating system has been installed.

A. M. Johnstone has opened a moving picture show at Averyville, a factory suburb of Peoria, and will give shows nightly, with Saturday and Sunday matinees. The place, which will be known as the Gem, will ask a five-cent admission.

The Mutual Film Corporation of Illinois has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000 to deal in motion picture machinery, etc. Its headquarters are in Chicago. The incorporators are Samuel C. Ward, Fred C. Churchill and Percy H. Dunkin.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Plein of Dixon, will reassume charge of the Family Theater in that city April 8 when the lease of the present operators will expire.

Directors of the Orpheum Amusement Company, which operates a string of houses in Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan, have elected the following officers: President, Walter S. Butterfield, Battle Creek, Mich.; Vice-president, F. E. Sterling, Rockford; Treasurer, Marcus Heiman, Madison, Wis., and Secretary, F. E. Carpenter, Rockford.

The old Exchange Hotel building at Wilmington is being remodeled for a moving picture show which will be operated by Charles Johnston and Alex Gustafson.

The Colonial Theater at Mt. Carmel, is a charter member of the Booster Club, an organization recently formed to attract more business to the city, and the Colonial probably will be one of the concerns which will receive direct profit. A fund of $2,000 has been raised and in August a big automobile will be given away free. On that date a regular carnival will be held. Meanwhile coupons will be given by the merchants with all purchases, and prizes will be given every three weeks. This should attract many to town and incidentally to picture shows.

The pipe organ built for W. O. Stevens of the Eagle theater at Princeton, is a novelty. It is the first output of a new factory started by John E. Byington of Dixon, a veteran organ repairer. Mr. Stevens is an organist of ability and recently gave a recital on the new instrument and pronounced himself as satisfied that he received value for his $1,350.

Merchants of Wyoming are assisting Manager Warren of the Star theater in his plan of giving away a $350 piano. Several secret societies of the town are in the contest and attendance has been very largely increased.

H. C. Hall, who has been connected with the Illinois Traction Systems at Carlinville, has gone to St. Augustine, Florida, where he will have charge of a moving picture show.

Manager Moran of the Alamo at Plainfield has rented the opera house in that city and will give Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday night and Saturday matinee shows.

The dedication of the new Lincoln building at the University of Illinois, at Urbana, February 12, featured a reel of pictures made at Champaign and Urbana by the Progress Motion Picture Company. The Neil, the Champaign independent house, had the first booking of the pictures.

Troubles over the Empress Theater at Decatur have been settled out of court and Charles G. Powers of Decatur and Frank C. Smith of Springfield will hold the lease. A. Sigfried, who has been connected with the vaudeville and picture destinies of Decatur for years, will be resident manager.

IOWA.

MANAGER IVERSON has remodeled the Superba moving picture theater at Lyons.

Moving pictures will be used by the Iowa Dental Society in a state-wide campaign to educate people to take better care of their teeth. The film was originated by the oral hygiene committee of the National Dental Association and will first be shown in the state at the alumni clinic of the College of Dentistry, University of Iowa at Iowa City, March 3, 4 and 5.

Moving pictures were used by suffragists at Grinnell to attract crowds to their meeting.

The Lyric Theater on Perry street, Davenport, has ended its vaudeville career and is now a burlesque house.

A moving picture show will be opened in Fesler's Opera House at Riverside, giving Wednesday and Saturday night shows.

George C. Martin filed notice of a suit in the district court at Davenport against W. J. Doyle for $1,000 damages. He declares Doyle wrongfully sued out a landlord's lien and closed the doors of his picture house.

Representative Burt of Bedford has introduced into the Iowa State Legislature a bill providing for a state board of censors. It provides for a censor at $1,500 a year and an assistant at $1,200 a year. Pictures must first be exhibited in Des Moines and makers will be charged $2.50 a reel. Fines of from $50 to $100 for the first offense and from $100 to $500 for succeeding offenses are provided in the measure. The editor of the Cedar Rapids Republican calls it "a piece of official nonsense which means a few more offices for lazy politicians who want to annex a job of some kind." He believes that the managers and the public will take care of the morality question in connection with the moving picture as the questionable business does not pay. He sums the measure up as "such a violent invasion of the higher conception of the average American that it is wholly revolting."

NEW ENGLAND.

THE recent order of Mayor George H. Newhall of Lynn, Mass., to the effect that there should be no more vaudeville performances in that city on Sundays, resulted in some disturbance on January 26. In the Olympia theater, of which Arthur E. Lord is the manager, and which has been in the habit of putting on a bill consisting of vaudeville and pictures, the efforts of a number of soloists were greeted with groans and hoots of derision. Some of the singers did not find favor with the audience, and others demanded their money back. Dissatisfaction was expressed in practically all the vaudeville and picture houses in Lynn, but the mayor is quoted as saying that he will "stand pat," as he was much pleased with the manner in which the performances were conducted. Needless to say, there won't be any grumbling at Lynn provided good pictures, and good singing numbers are given.

On January 26th, the Auditorium Theater, Malden, Mass., was used to hold a memorial service for Dr. George L. Farrell, late mayor of that town.

Otto Mack, conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was given a big write-up in a daily paper this week, and is quoted as saying, "I am delighted with moving pictures, and go to see them at least once a week with my wife."

The Scenic Theater, formerly known as the Park Theater, Waltham, Mass., was threatened with destruction early on Sunday, January 26th, when a fire, starting probably in the boiler room, wiped out the basement, lobby and ticket office, and smoked up the entire building. The Scenic is located on Elm street, and it was a two-alarm fire. Mr. M. Jennings of Boston, who runs a chain of moving picture theaters, owns the Scenic and the buildings in the rear. The loss is about $8,000 and the theater will be rebuilt.

The Theatrical Stage Employees Union, at their latest meeting in Boston, received reports from the five delegates of the Union who attended the recent New England convention at Worcester, Mass. The members decided that the 20th anniversary of the formation of the Union, in April, shall be observed by the holding of a banquet. A committee to make arrangements will be appointed later. President Edward T. Reynolds made a satisfactory report on local conditions. Fifteen new members were admitted, an unusual event, as the admittance of more than two members at a time is very rare.

M. H. Gulesian, owner of the St. James Theater, Huntington avenue, Boston, announces that on February 10th the policy of the theater was changed. Vaudeville and pictures are offered for entertainment instead of the former stock company attractions. Mr. Gulesian states the change of policy is purely for business purposes. Since the theater was built, Mr. Gulesian has had many offers from theatrical men, to rent the house. The offer that was accepted was from Marcus Loew, who already has the Orpheum and South End theaters in Boston.

J. Townsend Russell is now filling an engagement at Tremont Temple, Boston, in his "picture readings," dramatizing Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn." Prices are from twenty-five cents to one dollar, with two performances daily. Mr. Townsend is doing very well and will remain two weeks.

Brookline, Mass., called the "richest town in the world," doesn't want moving picture theaters! The reasons given may be summed up like this: The electric theaters take money from the pockets of the poor people, and that's where Brookline residents want money to be. Second, there is a likelihood of the pictures making the school children stay away from school. This was decided at a meeting of the Board of Selectmen of Brookline, when they denied the petition of Max Talbot of Brookline, for a license. Mr. Talbot was ready to build in Brookline village a theater, to cost about $10,000, seating 748 people, including the balcony. At a meeting, many Brookline people, members of the clergy, lawyers, etc., all had various things to say against the theater.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Devlin, Fire Commissioner Cole and Judge J. A. Brackett, opposed the bill in the Massachusetts Legislature requiring the presence of firemen in theaters. They said that the theaters are adequately protected by trained crews. The matter is now under consideration.

Grange halls and one-night stand opera houses in the small towns and villages of Vermont are to be converted into theaters, offering good picture programs, according to plans made by the Vermont State Board of Health. This board is to use the pictures as a means for aiding in the prevention of tuberculosis. A program of pictures showing the various ways of preventing the White Plague, together with much of an instructive nature regarding the disease, will make up the programs. The outfit consists of a motor generator and wagon equipment that is to be hauled from town to town by horses.

It is understood that the Jefferson, Nickel and Keith theaters of Portland, Me., intend to pool their interests, and that some sort of combination is contemplated.

The new theater now building at Greenfield, Mass., is nearly ready for its opening performance, which will be some time this month or the early part of March.

Roger Flint, manager of the New Shrine Theater, Rutland, Vt., reports most satisfactory business ever since the theater opened on January 9. Vaudeville and pictures are used, and the programs have met with popular approval. The Shrine Theater is strictly fireproof and modern in every way, and does the cream of business in Rutland.

W. W. Blair, formerly associated with the Goldstein Brothers' Amusement Company at North Adams, Mass., has leased the Lyceum Theater, New Britain, Conn., and will start off with stock company attractions, but it is believed that vaudeville and pictures will be the policy before very long.

The Opera House, Lowell, Mass., played to real capacity business on January 25-27th, when the Paul J. Rainey African Hunt pictures were shown. This house is one of Julius Cahn's string.

Examinations for operators of moving picture theaters were held in St. John, Canada, last week. Under the new Canadian government law, all operators must pass an examination and be licensed.

It is rumored that T. R. Smith of Springfield, Mass., intends to erect a theater, to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures, in the Forrest Park district, provided the license can be secured. The Edisonia, on Main street, and the Mirror, on Wilbraham road, are owned and operated by Mr. Smith, and are both doing a very satisfactory business. There is every reason to believe that Mr. Smith will be granted a license for his contemplated theater, as he runs his houses in the best way possible.

A bill was recently introduced into the House of Representatives to eliminate all vaudeville acts from the programs of the smaller vaudeville and picture theaters in Boston and its suburbs. This bill was strongly opposed by the Corporation Counsel and by men representing the City of Boston. There is not much doubt but what this bill will be "killed."

W. F. Edde, manager of the Star Theater, Bristol, R. I., is strong in his praise of Universal films, so much so, in fact, that he distributes hundreds of copies of the Universal Weekly each week to his patrons. Mr. Edde states that business is "simply fine," and he thinks that the marked superiority of Universal films has much to do with the increased box-office receipts.

Some time ago these columns told of the fact that the "Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals" had determined to use the motion picture as a means of stimulating interest in humane education, and were having films manufactured along these lines. The Premier Theater, Boston, was the first house in which these pictures were demonstrated. Pictures were projected showing the ventilated feed bag, the cruelty of the check rain, and the closed and open blinder. A reel was exhibited, depicting agents of the Society making arrests of drivers with overloaded teams and the Society ambulances assisting a fallen horse. Other subjects were shown, chief among them being the S. P. C. A. agents inspecting a stock-train on its arrival at the stock-yards, caring for lame and injured animals, the traffic in "bob" veal and in worn-out cows. A particularly inspiring reel was "Kindness Inspires Confidence," showing the feeding of pigeons on the Common of Boston and proving that these creatures come to know the folks who feed them and become most friendly. These pictures will be shown in photoplay theaters throughout the state and exhibitors should lend their co-operation in such a worthy cause.

The General Film Company is entirely reorganizing its branch offices at St. John, N. B., due to the fact that H. McArthur, the manager, has resigned, to accept a similar position with the new Kinetograph Company, which is to open offices in that city. J. Wales of Montreal, will succeed Mr. McArthur and C. B. Price, from the New York offices of the General Film Company, was sent to St. John, to start manager Wales on his new duties.

On February 3, the Yale alumni of New Haven, Conn., held the annual dinner and entertainment at the Lawn Club. Following the dinner, there was an exhibition of motion pictures, including the reels of the Yale-Princeton football game last fall, the Olympic games at Stockholm, Sweden, and the Oxford-Cambridge boat race on the Thames, London. The committee in charge evidently knew what it was about, as the picture program was a most decided success.

Manager O'Neill is now in charge of the Star Theater, Boston, having succeeded Frank L. Broune. Mr. O'Neill contemplates making some radical changes, all in the line of progress. The Star is now using the service of the R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company of Boston, having given up Mutual service. The Star was the first house in the city to show Mutual films, but decided to avail itself of Mr. Marson's service after considering the matter. Three changes weekly of first run pictures are contracted for, each change of program, to contain one multiple reel feature film production. Other changes in the lobby and elsewhere are under way, so Mr. O'Neill tells us.

The management of the National theater, Boston, the B. F. Keith house, began offering, Monday, February 10, Kinemacolor pictures exclusively, as an added attraction. This is the only theater in Boston having the right to project Kinemacolor pictures. In the near future the National theater expects to show the new Edison talking pictures.

The Shawmut Investment Company, a recently organized corporation, has purchased from Joseph Rudnick, the property numbered 346 to 368 Blue Hill Avenue, corner of Creston Street, Roxbury, Mass., and comprising a two-story brick, fireproof theater, the Shawmut. It is believed that no change in the policy of the house is contemplated. Manager H. A. Chenoweth is surely giving his patrons a big run for their money—six reels of good motion pictures and four vaudeville acts have filled the Shawmut's large auditorium daily.

Thomas A. Edison has called upon the students of Harvard College, Cambridge, Mass., to help him in making his new invention, talking moving pictures, a success. He wants the college men to devise plots, for photographic presentation, which will at the same time permit of conversation to accompany them. Many students of Harvard have already sold scenarios to the manufacturers, and these men are now hoping to be able to satisfy Edison with their "talking plots." The writer understands that it is possible that the men in the dramatic course at Harvard may write talking photoplay scenarios as a part of their work, to be submitted to Edison later. Mr. Edison, in his request for scenarios from Harvard students, in the columns of the "Crimson," the daily college paper, states that the playlets for the Kinetophone, must run for just six minutes, and must be clean and free from offense. He will accept either comedies or dramas.

Rev. J. N. Supple, pastor of St. Francis de Sales Church, Charlestown, Mass., scored the attempt to place a moving picture house in his parish, at a meeting of the Federated Catholis Societies this week. The Reverend stated that an attempt had been made to secure the property of the Bunker Hill Baptist Church, corner of Bunker Hill and Mystic Streets, for a photoplay theater, and wound up his absurdly prejudiced harangue as follows: "I have opposed the scheme strongly and the promoters have been unsucessful to date. When I opposed the proposition, I was informed that a Jewish synagogue would supplant the moving picture show, and I replied that they could start anything but a place to ruin the souls of my children. It is in such cases as this, with a Catholic federation of the men, that we can do good work and forestall any attempt to bring what I believe to be evil into the district."

It would appear that the Reverend is an out and out fanatic, and of the most pernicious type; judging from his statement about "ruining the souls of my children." This remark is just about the worst yet.

Manager Gilbert of the Gem theater, Berlin, N. H., reports unusually brisk trade with vaudeville and pictures.

Cheney's Opera House, Rumford, Me., is showing a good quality of pictures to good houses.

Louis P. Woolf, for six years with the Boston theaters, controlled by the Automatic Vaudeville Company, of New York, has resigned. Mr. Woolf was managing the Palace theater, having formerly been in charge of the Premier and the Comique theaters, both owned by the Automatic. Manager Woolf states that he failed to receive a promised increase in salary, and decided to leave on this account.

Four hundred and twenty odd dollars were stolen from the safe of the Star theater, Boston, on February 1. C. F. Rollins, treasurer of the Star Amusement Company, told the writer that the $420 was the total receipts for Saturday, February 1. No suspicion has been thrown on anyone, and the theft is very liable to be a mystery forever.

The Palace theater, Boston, is now in charge of Manager Jackson, who has climbed from operator to manager in a short time. The Palace runs a straight picture show.

The regular monthly meeting of the Massachusetts Branch of the Exhibitors League was held on Tuesday, February 4.

The second annual ball of the Moving Picture Operators, of Springfield, Mass., was held at Apollo Hall, last week. From every report, we are safe in stating that a big success was scored.

Poylen's Theater, Taunton, Mass., under the management of Leslie V. Wilson, opened February 3, with vaudeville and pictures. This new house has a seating capacity of 1,200, and a stage 57 feet wide, which is equipped to the minute. Standing room only ruled opening week. Boylen's is one of the finest theaters in Massachusetts, and certainly should do very well, if managed rightly.

Geoffrey Whalen is stil making a most decided hit at the Olympia theater, Lynn, Mass., where he lectures on the films. Manager Lord finds business brisk, with vaudeville and pictures.

The Arlington Orchestra, in addition to the usual programs of vaudeville and pictures, at the New Pavilion theater, Portland, Me., seems to meet with public approval, and Manager J. W. Greely reports good business.

Randell Smith, who desires to open a first-class theater, to be devoted to photoplays, in the Forest Park district of Springfield, Mass., is finding much oposition. Residents of this district have entered protests, and a hearing on the matter is to be held.

The Gaiety theater, Springfield, Mass., and located on State Street, has closed, and it is not known when it will reopen.

Manager O'Neil, of the Star theater, Boston, reports that he is well satisfied with the service he secures from the R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, of Boston. During the week of February 3-9, the Star featured "Hunting Big Game in a Large City," "Balkan War Events," and "Pursued by a Lioness."

In his annual address to the council at the inauguration exercises in City Hall, this week, Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, of Boston, advocated moving pictures for all the schools, and that school halls should be made theaters of the people. Mayor Fitzgerald firmly believes that, through the proposed installation of moving picture machines, the people could be taught the value of mental and bodily development. The pictures could show schools at work, nurses among the poor, bathing facilities of the city, gymnastic events, bad housing conditions, disease, danger of bad milk and impurities in food products. Mayor Fitzgerald is recognized as one of this country's leading men and is quoted from coast to coast. Such an idea as the mayor has in mind, will be of great benefit to all, and will no doubt be pushed until it is put into practical operation.

Moving pictures are to enter into the instruction of the students at Yale, New Haven, Conn. The mining engineer classes, of the University will be shown by means of motion pictures, the operations of getting ore from a mine, and the process it goes through, until ready for shipment.

Manager Kimball of the Standard theater, Bellows Falls, Vt., reports excellent business, with good programs of vaudeville and pictures. The Standard is a new house, and Bellows Falls people were slow to try the new theater out, but now that the first stage has passed, business is steadily increasing.

Harold Getchell has secured the lease on the hall on High Street, South Portland, Me., and intends to operate it as a straight picture house, after making a few alterations.

National Hall, Winchendon, Mass., will be renovated and improved by William McAuley, who intends to run a photoplay theater there.

The Boston Post recently ran an unusually fine editorial on moving pictures, telling of the powerful force of them over man, woman and child, and asking why this force is not used more often for the purposes of education. Geography, history, and many other things may best be taught by the aid of the Kinematograph, says the Post. Here's a good sentence: "It may as pertinently be held that the moving picture houses need not monopolize for mere amusement the enormously valuable influence of the motion views. When you can combine entertainment and instruction in one and the same thing you have made education far more easy that it has been before. Motion pictures would do a great deal toward solving the problem."

Marcus Loew believes he has a big thing in the St. James Theater, Boston, which he leased from M. H. Gulesian, who had been giving stock company shows. Mr. Loew opened with his own particular brand of vaudeville and pictures on February 10. It is rumored in Boston that Loew just beat B. F. Kieth's "to it." Report has it that Keith was dickering for the lease, having offered $30,000 yearly as rental, and, at this stage of the game, Marcus Loew stepped up and offered $40,000 and closed the deal in short order. This house seats about 1,600; is as well constructed as any legitimate theater and is almost brand new. It is in the residential section, and should be a big money maker. Mr. Loew is covering the city with free "introductory passes" for ladies only. V. J. Morris will look after the St. James.

Pindar and Rudloff, proprietors of the Crystal Theater, Meriden, Conn., are having the best business of their career at this house; and feature Independent films to the limit.

The Puritan theater, Fall River, Mass., is now changing its pictures three times a week, and business seems to respond to the change of policy. L. M. Boas has general supervision over the Puritan. HENRY.

Among the Exhibitors.

Nothing Left Undone To Make Things Handy for the Operator

A knurled knob conveniently placed on the outside of the mechanism case enables you to keep your picture in perfect focus. Another adjusting knob makes it possible to reset the shutter and eliminate the travel ghost without stopping the machine.

You can instantly and accurately set the intermittent movement. There is only one eccentric bushing in the and it is so much easier to set than the two eccentric bushings in most other machines that it's a joke.

Did you ever turn the crank on a Simplex? It runs so easy and quiet you will think the mechanism has been taken out, until you open the case and see the wonderful workmanship on the parts. Then you will understand.

Space prevents our mentioning many other original and convenient features of the mechanism, lamp, lamphouse, condenser mount, pedestal, etc.

OPERATORS, GET WISE

The Simplex machine means more to you than you now realize.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

VITAGRAPH.

SUSPICIOUS HENRY (Feb. 24).—Yellow-covered literature of "Old Sleuth, the Detective" character, is the favorite reading of big, fat, overgrown Henry. His devotion to this style of fiction fills him with an uncontrollable desire to be a Sherlock Holmes. He makes himself a tin badge and a pair of false whiskers. He goes out in search of adventure. He comes across Michael Murphy, stupefiedly drunk. His suspicions are aroused that a murder has been committed, when he discovers some red blotches upon the side-walk. These red splashes have been made from a dripping pot of paint which Mr. Marsh has just purchased and is carrying home to paint his back stoop. Henry follows the paint spots to the home of Mr. Marsh. He retraces his steps and finds that Murphy has disappeared, having in the meantime been removed by the police. He discovers Murphy's coat, which he takes with him to the police station, notifying the sergeant that a murder has been committed and he knows who killed the man. The officer believes his story and he sends several patrolmen to take Marsh into custody. The sergeant finds in the coat pocket, Murphy's address and sends an officer to his home to notify Mrs. Murphy that her husband is murdered.

The policemen return with Mr. Marsh and he is locked in a cell, notwithstanding his declaration of innocence and his wife's pleadings. Mrs. Murphy puts in an appearance at the station house in great grief. She is taken to Marsh's cell to identify him as an enemy of her husband. She fails to do so, much to the joy of the imprisoned man and his wife. As she turns to leave, she spies her husband, Michael Murphy, sound asleep in the adjoining cell. She gives a shout of delight to find him still in the land of the living.

"Suspicious Henry" is speechless at this turn of affairs and confesses his over-zealousness to be a detective. The sergeant orders him punished by submitting to a good drubbing, administered by Mrs. Murphy with a large night-stick, which she applies with vim, vigor and gusto.

WHEN THE DESERT WAS KIND (Feb. 25).—By unexplained circumstances, Marjorie Bowman and Harvey Ross are separated. While he remains in his home town, she drifts to one of the unsettled territories of the West. Marjorie is an attractive woman of strong personality and self-reliance. It is not long before a very ardent wooer appears in Jim Duncan, a man of bad reputation and worse character, which he hides beneath a very suave exterior whenever he meets Marjorie. The truth comes out when the sheriff receives notice that there is a reward placed upon his head. The sheriff goes in quest of him and finds him at the saloon. The sheriff covers him with his gun, but he manages by his calmness, to hold the sheriff in conversation and abeyance, then by a quick movement, takes the officer's gun and escapes. He goes to Marjorie's home and persuades her to marry him; going to the justice of the peace, by whom the ceremony is performed. Meantime the sheriff is on his track. Duncan again returns to the saloon, and entirely throws off his mask, drinking and carousing and showing his cruel disposition, when an Indian girl enters the saloon, by taking liberties with her, and when she resists him, striking and killing her. Her father, an old chief, enters the place in search of her, and, finding her dead, swears vengeance. When Duncan leaves the saloon to return home, the Indian follows him and attacks him, but gets away before Duncan can use his pistol. The drunken man being aroused to fury, follows the Indian into the desert.

The sheriff, in search of the desperado, is told by Marjorie that he is not home. The sheriff shows her the notice for the reward for his arrest, and for the first time she learns that the man she has married is a bad man. The sheriff, with his posse, follows the fugitive into the desert and on their way find the dead body of the old Indian, and further on, come across the inanimate form of Duncan, the victim of the merciless heat of the barren waste. While all this is happening, Harvey Ross, having made up his mind to visit Marjorie, and ask her to marry him, reaches her home, only to learn that she has been made the wife of another. Disheartened, he turns his footsteps toward the little hamlet which constitutes the town. On the way he meets the sheriff and the posse with news of the death of Duncan. He runs in haste to Marjorie and imparts what, under different circumstances, would be sad news. She receives his message with a sigh of relief, feeling that the desert has kindly corrected a dreadful mistake and made it possible for her to marry the man worthy of her.

THE FINAL JUSTICE (Feb. 26).—Determined to win Millicent, the daughter of Mr. Vane, Carson Barrett, a man of the world, sets about to defeat his rival, Lewis Hueston. He knows young Hueston's skill as an expert penman, and challenges him by making out a check to him and signing it with his signature. He tells Hueston the check is his if he can duplicate it. Hueston copies it so well that one cannot be distinguished from the other. Barrett takes both the checks in his hand and by clever substitution, gives him back the forged one and tells him he can cash it. Hueston not suspecting Barrett of any treachery, goes to the bank where he can cash it. The forgery is discovered. Barrett denies all knowledge of the check. Hueston is arrested, convicted and sent to jail.

Millicent has never ceased to love Hueston, but her parents persuade her to marry Barrett. One morning she picks up the newspaper and reads that Lewis Hueston has escaped from prison. She is greatly interested in the article. Her husband enters the room and snatches the paper from her. He intently peruses it. While he is thus engaged, Millicent places a blank record on the phonograph nearby and starts the machinery. Barrett turns angrily to her and asks if she still loves Barrett. She confesses she does. He tells her that because of her love for Hueston, he is in his present condition. She, in astonishment, asks him how so, and excitedly he tells her he led Hueston to commit the forgery which placed him in jail. His words are all recorded in the phonograph. He angrily leaves the room. Just after her husband has gone, Hueston appears. She hastily tells him that she knows all about Barrett's villainy, gives him the record, begs him to flee, and she will meet him at a certain point. Her husband detects her and follows her to the appointed place. Hueston faces him and accuses him of his treachery. Barrett steps back as if to avoid him and accidentally falls over the cliff into the river below. At this moment, the prison guards and officers appear and capture Hueston.

Millicent, now being a widow, secures, through her lawyers, a new trial for Hueston, and on the evidence of the phonograph record, he is declared innocent and released from prison, finally securing justice. Later, when the memories of the past are almost forgotten, Lewis Hueston and Millicent are seen together in sweet anticipation of their coming marriage.

TIM GROGAN'S FOUNDLING (Feb. 27).—Tim Grogan, a bricklayer in Chicago, lives in bachelor's quarters. The widow McGee, a neighbor on the floor above, frequently drops in to help tidy up or to bring him a pot of jam or some little present. Grogan sees her designs, but though he appreciates her good qualities, he has been too long used to his freedom to give it up.

A gang of blackmailers and kidnappers, headed by one Phil Covington, abduct millionaire Ligard's little daughter, Pearl, while in the park with her maid. Fearing detection, they plan to flee with the child to Chicago. While Covington goes off with Burke to put their purpose in execution, they leave Pearl in charge of Sanford. Sanford yields to his besetting weakness and gets drunk. Pearl is frightened and runs away from him and is picked up by the good-natured Grogan and taken to his home, where, with the help of Mrs. McGee, he tends and cares for her; but the care of the child brings Mrs. McGee very much closer to him. The kidnappers discover the whereabouts of the child and try to take her from Grogan, who defends her and the tables are turned on the kidnappers by the arrival of Ligard and the detectives.

Ligard thanks Grogan for his kindness and Pearl promises to come and see him. Left alone, he feels the loss of the child. Mrs. McGee makes him a leap-year sort of proposal and he decides he will marry her and they will spend the evening of life together.

THE OLD GUARD (Feb. 28).—Decorated by the Legion of Honor for his services in the Imperial Guard, under the Emperor Napoleon, on the burning sands of Africa and the snows of Russia, Havresac, one of the Old Guard, in his second childhood, lives on the memories of his past. His niece, Melanie, works as a maker of artificial flowers and manages to keep a meagre home over their heads. Two French officers, Colonel Weston and Colonel Millard, learning of their poverty and the past history of the old soldier, call at their home and provide for their needs.

Colonel Weston falls in love with Melanie and asks her uncle's consent to their marriage. At first Havresac refuses, but later, he places Weston's hand in hers and gives them his blessing. Just after this has occurred, the old man hears the playing of the band of a passing regiment, and looking from the window, insists upon taking his musket and joining the march. He is restrained by the Colonel and Melanie from leaving the room, but to satisfy the spark of his old-time valor, they allow him to stand in front of the window with his musket at "shoulder-arms." He becomes so inspired it is too much for his waning strength and he falls into his old arm-chair and passes through the last great battle of life into the presence of the Great Commander of those who have fought the fight and passed into the great beyond.

GOVERNOR WILSON (Feb. 28).—Scenes and incidents about Mr. Wilson's home at Sea Girt, New Jersey, during the recent political campaign for the presidency. Introducing many prominent men of affairs and state, who made up the body politic in the nominating committee, notifying him of his selection by the Democratic party. This film gives us a closer acquaintance with the president-elect and shows us some of his home and family relations, and his vacation on his country estate by the sea.

THE COLLEGE CHAPERON (Feb. 24).—The annual Junior Prom is at hand, and the students of the Conserver Military Academy are making their arrangements for this famous function. Jack Carter and Ned Graves invite two out-of-town girls to be their guests at the festivities. The girls, Maud and Alice, accept the boys' invitation, with the understanding that Jack's Aunt Nellie will act as their chaperon. It is so arranged and preparations made accordingly. Shortly before Prom Day, Jack is notified that Aunt Nellie cannot be present. The boys are much put out at this bit of news and are about to call the engagement off, when suddenly a bright idea occurs to them. They arrange with Sammy Stone, one of their friends, to impersonate Aunt Nellie. Sammy consents and plays the part. Outside of several embarrassing situations that arise, the scheme works out all right until Sammy, in his elaborate ball gown, attempts to dance with one of the professors. His identity is discovered and he lands in the guard house. Here his friends visit him and offer their condolences to "one of our best little chaperons."

THE FLAMING FORGE (Feb. 25).—The Village Smithy and the Village Cobbler had been the best of friends for many years. Smith had a daughter; Cobbler had a son—young, honest and manly, but, possessed of a roving, care-free nature that often led him o'er seas afar, and sometimes caused him to revel with the shifters of the village grog shop. The village parson had long loved Jennie, the Smith's daughter, in silence. So had Jack, the Cobbler's son. Jennie respected the parson, but her love was for Jack. One day Jack, who had been away before the mast for a long time, returned to the village in time to witness the parson in the act of proposing to Jennie. Nothing daunted, Jack made known his presence and proposed likewise. Jennie accepted Jack. That evening, Jack, having imbibed too freely at the tavern, was in his cups. The parson thereupon proved himself the man by keeping his erstwhile rival from the sight of his betrothed. For this kindness Jack promised never to drink again. The marriage took place with the parson officiating and the lucky young people knew naught of the heart-ache felt by him who had made them one.

YANKEE DOODLE DIXIE (Feb. 26).—A Federal and Confederate veteran, in view of a prospective marriage uniting their families, become fast friends. One plays the fiddle, the other the flute, but they cannot harmonize on tunes, as one demands "Yanke Doodle" and the other insists upon "Dixie." This trouble grows so acute that the innocent young people become involved in the controversy and their engagement is broken. Love finds a way, and they arrange for a secret marriage. The good parson plans it even more wisely, asking the fathers to come and make music for a wedding, not naming the contracting parties. When the ancient enemies find themselves face to face they are mad, but unwilling to retreat, they turn back to back and make music with a vengeance, utilizing the favorite tunes while the ceremony is in progress. When they face the bride and groom and see who is there, they are vastly provoked; but the diplomatic parson, having them both under his spell, patches up peace.

THE BANK'S MESSENGER (Feb. 27).—The bank in a small western town, because of its poor facilities for protection, does not keep much cash on hand. One day this bank finds itself upon the verge of bankruptcy. It applies to the First National Bank in a larger community some distance away, for funds, with which it hopes to stop the impending run. The National Bank, in order to deliver the cash before noon of that day, arranges with an express rider, who agrees to deliver same before the time mentioned, notwithstanding the fact that the territory through which he must pass is the hangout of a notorious band of outlaws.

The outlaws hear of the rider's mission, and prepare for him. After some exciting chases and a running fight, the outlaw band capture the messenger and relieve him of his money. By this time their ammunition is gone, and in order to silence the rider, for good, they place a keg of giant powder beside the bound man. They then light the fuse and run for safety. The rider manages to free himself in time to kick the sputtering keg over the embankment before it explodes. This puts most of the outlaw band to flight, but the leader again engages with the messenger. This time the messenger is victorious and succeeds in capturing his assailant and recovering the money. After turning the outlaw over to a posse, he continues on his journey.

THE UNDERSTUDY (Feb. 28).—Stella Le Vere, an ambitious, but struggling actress, is abandoned by her husband and is forced to leave her baby girl, Grace, in the care of an orphan asylum. Later, the child is adopted by a well-to-do and kindly family named Thornton, who bring Grace up in ignorance of her identity. Grace develops into a beautiful young woman, and, as she grows older, forms a strong attachment for the stage. Her ambition to become a great actress is discouraged by her foster mother, who has the girl's best interest at heart. Accidentally she learns of her own identity, and resolves to run away, go upon the stage, and make an attempt to find her real mother. She does so, and after many trying experiences, finds herself an understudy to her mother, who is the star in a musical comedy success. She keeps her identity secret until one night she secures a chance to prove her ability by temporarily taking her mother's place. She wins a wonderful ovation and incurs the jealous dislike of the star—her mother. At this time she discloses her identity, but this news seems to make her mother even more furious. Now, with her eyes fully opened, she returns to her foster parents—her brief stage career brought to a disillusioned end.

LUBIN.

THE TEACHER AT ROCKVILLE (Feb. 24).—Alexander Morton, nicknamed Sandy, has been infatuated with an uneducated young woman, Kate Clayton. He becomes tired of her and they separate, and Kate, who is fond of Sandy, never lets him know that he is the father of her child, Tommy, who was born several months after the separation.

Years pass and Sandy becomes a drunkard. Into his life at this period comes Miss Mary, a school-teacher. She first sees Sandy in a drunken stupor, his face upturned to the sun. As she is placing his hat over his face, he arouses, and her evident disgust causes him to feel a sense of shame at his condition. He tries to improve his appearance and an awakened ambition causes him to look for and secure a position on a ranch. Learning of her fondness for wild flowers, Sandy frequently takes a bunch of them to the school house. At the end of the term Miss Mary arranges a picnic for the children and Sandy assists her in making the day enjoyable.

By this time his devotion has won the heart of the school-teacher. On the last day of the school term Kate learns of Mary's intentions of going back East on a visit. She realizes how unfit she is to continue the bringing up of Tommy, and knows that in a short time he must learn the truth concerning his parentage. Kate tells Mary that Sandy is the boy's father and has never known it. Mary is heartbroken, but promises to take his child. Mary and Tommy leave by the stage coach, she having left no word of farewell for Sandy. He sees the coach depart and runs to where he can watch its disappearance. Mary catches sight of him, and asking the driver to stop the coach, she sends Tommy up the embankment to pick some flowers. He does so and as the stage resumes its journey, Mary kises one of them and throws it out of the window. Sandy seeing it, picks it up and brings it to his lips with a full realization of the price he must pay for the folly of his youth, and that Mary is lost to him forever.

IMPORTING CATTLE FROM MEXICO INTO THE UNITED STATES (Feb. 25).—This is an educational picture showing the system of passing cattle across the line into the United States. The inspectors are on the job. The beasts are duly examined as to health and then driven into a disinfecting bath, through which they have to swim before leaving the run, which takes them to the cars.

THE FEMALE DETECTIVE (Feb. 25).—Tom Aitken is very much in love with Kitty Tryon. Everything is lovely between them until Jack Fisher, a noted train robber, drifts into camp. He at once tries to force his presence upon Kitty. Fisher is jealous of Tom and decides to rob him of his gold. Fisher and his gang follow Tom to his camp. But the game is bluffed by the appearance of an old fortune-teller. She seems always to pop up in time to block Fisher's game.

After Fisher and his gang have kidnapped Tom and taken him to their shack, the fortune-teller appears again, but this time a little spryer than ever. When she whips out two revolvers and commands them to hold hands up, she gives Tom the handcuffs, the outlaws are shackled together and marched to the sheriff's office, where they are turned over to the law. The fortune-teller's identity is discovered in the person of Miss Mae Hotely, president of the Hotely Detective Agency.

THE SUPREME SACRIFICE (Feb. 27).—Edith and Daisy, two sisters, are in love with Dick, a young chap devoted to automobiling. He prefers Edith, and they become secretly engaged, as the girl does not want to tell her father yet. One morning Dick takes Daisy for a ride. There is an accident and the girl is hurt, but Dick escapes. He carries her home. Her father sees the girl brought in and a servant is sent for the doctor. Dick blames himself, but Edith consoles him. The doctor says the girl can never walk again. The father turns to Dick and denounces him. Dick goes away while Edith consoles her father.

Later, while Edith is amusing her lame sister, Daisy confesses her love for Dick. Edith is at first horrified; then she realizes that she and Dick must sacrifice their lives for the girl who loves him, because he was the cause of the accident. She tells Dick this and their happy love affair is turned into a tragedy. The lame girl is wheeled out and Dick asks her to marry him. She consents. When Daisy is once more in her room, Dick sees Edith coming from the house. She had waited to bid him a last good-bye. This time she breaks down. He tells her he loves her. The lame girl upstairs hears them, and she throws down a rose with a note pinned to it telling them that she wants only her sister's happiness. It falls at their feet. They rush in to her, but her mind is made up. They are free to marry. She gets her father to consent to the marriage and to forget all his resentment against Dick. The lovers go out happy, while Daisy breaks down in her father's arms.

DOCTOR MAXWELL'S EXPERIMENT (Feb. 28).—Dr. John Maxwell, a surgeon, comes home to find his daughter, Alice, awaiting him asleep. He sends her to bed, and reads of a new operation upon the brain that will change a criminal into an honest man. He resolves to test it. An hour later, Bill Dawson, a burglar, enters the house. Maxwell captures him, and gives Bill the choice between jail and the operating table. Bill choses the latter. The operation succeeds, and to the delight of Alice, William is sent away a few weeks later to begin life anew. Dawson becomes a successful man of business, but loses track of his benefactor.

Two years pass by. Unknown to Dawson, Dr. Maxwell has gone the road to ruin. Dawson advertises for a stenographer and Rodney, his manager, sends a girl into his private office. The girl is Alice Maxwell. "What has happened?" demands Dawson, after the recognition. Alice shows him a worn-out letter. "Dear Alice," it reads: "speculation and morphine have ruined me. Save what you can of the home. I cannot face you, and I am going—God knows where. Your Father." Dawson cannot offer Alice money, but he gives her a position in the office.

Inside of a year they are man and wife. They return from the honeymoon into the new house and the new life. A man sees them enter, or rather, the wreck of a man. He does not recognize them. Instead, he determines to break in and get at least a square meal. Dawson hears a noise in the kitchen, and leaving Alice, he investigates. He finds his benefactor. Not knowing that Alice is Dawson's wife, Maxwell pleads to be allowed to escape, for the sake of "old times." Dawson hears Alice coming. He locks the door, and takes Maxwell to the bath-room. "Get into these clothes and shave, Quick!" He commands. Maxwell obeys. The debt is about to be repaid. After Maxwell is dressed up, Dawon gives him a suit case and brings him into the drawing-room. "I've found your father, and he's going to live with us forever," says Dawson. And it was the beginning of another experiment that succeeded.

AUNTIE'S AFFINITY (Mar. 1).—Marie and her Aunt Amanda live at the Hotel Borden. Marie is in love with Tom, son of the hotel proprietor. Aunt Amanda forbids Marie to ride in Tom's auto, so one day Marie pleads a headache and Aunt Amanda goes alone for her daily walk in the park. Marie steals off for a spin with Tom. Peitro, the portly and handsome chef of the hotel also goes walking in the park. He dresses well and makes an impression on Aunt Amanda when he discovers her lost pocketbook in the park. Each is ignorant of the other's identity. The two meet often by appointment. Peitro tells Aunt Amanda that he is the Count of Montividio and she believes him. He buys an engagement ring, but loses it during the excitement in the kitchen. The ring turns up in Marie's plum pudding. Peitro is exposed and discharged. Aunt Amanda is heartbroken. During the excitement Marie and Tom elope. But it all turns out well when Peitro shows up with an official letter, signed by the Italian consul, certifying that Peitro is the true Count of Montividio and heir to a vast fortune.

THE LOST SON (2 reels—Special—Feb. 17).—John Nolan, in the heat of anger, strikes down his opponent with a billiard ball and, believing him dead, runs away. Ed Jennings, the injured man, recovers.

Nolan's mother advertises for him and innstructs the police to find her boy, but in vain.

Ten years later, George, his younger brother, holding a position of trust and suporting his now widowed mother, is robbed of some of his employer's money and tries to make it up by playing the races. He loses, and in desperation returns to the "bookie" and tries to put up his watch. The "bookie" opens it and sees his mother's picture. George tells him that Jennings is alive, and the little family is reunited.

MELIES.

THE MISFORTUNES OF MR. AND MRS. MOTT ON THEIR TRIP TO TAHITI (Mar. 6).—Mr. Mott, who all his life has ploughed the soil of California for his living, suddenly comes into a fortune, and Mrs. Mott induces him to take a trip to the South Sea Island of Tahiti. They board ship at San Francisco, and during the voyage the sailors revive the ancient customs observed when crossing the line of the Equator. The custom was prevalent in the days of sailing vessels, when passengers and sailors crossing the line for the first time were baptized or initiated.

Neptune comes on board attended by his heralds, lieutenants, servants, etc., and takes complete command over the ship during the crossing of the line. Mr. Mott is arrested in the name of Neptune and brought before His Majesty for sentence, which is, to be shaved by the monarch's barber with a razor of rough wood; dipped thrice in sea water; ride the greased pole, etc., much to the discomfiture of Mr. Mott, but to the amusement of the sailors.

The island of Tamiti is at last sighted and the pair disembark at Papeete, the capital. They witness the reception tendered by the natives to the French Governor, Monsieur Geraud, and to the ex-queen Maoao—a great spectacle of its kind. Then they go sight seeing over the island, witnessing the odd costumes and sports of this people of a tropical country. The film pictures the coral reef which surrounds Tahiti, and many customs and picturesque spots of the island, rightly termed "The Garden of the Pacific."

ESSANAY.

THE WESTERN LAW THAT FAILED (Feb. 25).—Dave Morgan, out of work and despondent, decides to go West and find a position. He leaves behind a broken hearted mother. Out in the West, where men are usually kind hearted and generous, he finds everybody, seemingly, turned against him. Impossible to get work, he decides to use underhand methods in securing enough money to return East. Dave discovers a young fellow by the name of Tom Ryan, talking to a number of his fellow cowpunchers. Overhearing the conversation, Morgan learns that Tom has just received a letter from his wife, stating that a baby boy has been born and for the proud father to return to his home in the East immediately. Tom is about to leave, when he is accosted by Morgan, who asks him if he can take his job on the ranch. Tom tells Dave to see the owner, and gives the latter some money. While so doing, Tom accidentally drops the letter he received from his wife. Dave picks it up and runs after Tom to return it. Tom gets away without the note. After seeing the boss of the ranch, and being refused a position, Dave decides to steal the ranchman's horse and proceed East as far as he can on horseback. He steals the horse and is discovered by the ranch owner. The latter instructs his cowpunchers to go after Morgan. Morgan is caught and about to be hung, when he explains that it was impossible for him to secure employment, and that he had decided to go back home by fair means or foul. Dave then shows the cowpunchers the letter. Thinking it is genuine, one from Dave's supposed wife, they let him go, giving him a good round sum in cash. Dave returns home where his aged mother is overjoyed at the return of her boy.

THE GUM MAN (Feb. 26).—Mr. I. R. Right, commercial traveler for the Celebrated Chewing Gum Co., of Fort Wayne, Ind., arrives in the town of Stickenville, with his samples. He enters the Grand Hotel across from the post office, registers and goes to his room. The proprietor's daughter, Mary, brings up some ice water for the whirlwind salesman. Mr. Right endeavors to speak to the lady, but is given a cold look for his trouble. That night at the Town Hall the "natives" of the village, give a box party. Mr. I. R. Right, having nothing on his mind but pleasure, purchases a ticket and goes to the "big doings." Boxes filled with lunch and delicacies are raffled off. The notable representative of the House of Gum defeats his rival, Hiram Bartlett, in purchasing a beautiful box of lunch. Inside the cover he finds a card with Mary Morgan's name on it, meaning that she is to be the salesman's partner. The two become infatuated over each other's personalities, so much so in fact that they fall in love and decide to be married immediately. Hiram, becoming jealous, provokes a quarrel, which breaks up the happy party. Not satisfied with spoiling everybody's entertainment, Hiram informs Mary's father of the proposed elopement. The young couple return to the hotel where they pack up their belongings. Mary's father enters the room and is rudely pushed into a chair, which has been plastered with gum. The young couple leave the hotel in a hurry, proceed to the justice of peace's office and are married. Old father Morgan, still glued to the chair, and carrying the aforesaid piece of furniture with him to the marriage mill, is overwhelmed when informed of the ceremony. Stuck to his job, he sinks weakly into the chair.

LADY AUDLEY'S JEWELS (Feb. 27).—Augustus Pompleton, with his wife, Clarice Devereaux, of the famous McNight's Celebrated Repertoire Company, are stranded in the small village of Jayville. Pompleton at the suggestion of his wife enters the railroad station and asks the ticket agent where they can find the nearest and cheapest hotel. The star leading lady of the noted company drops her la valliere, made of plate glass and paste, on the floor. The station agent picks it up and asks her how much she will sell it for. The la valliere is sold for three dollars. Jed Perkins, a would-be sleuth of the town, receives a badge, star, belt, handcuffs and the regular paraphernalia used by town constables from a detective correspondence school. A five hundred thousand dollar jewel robbery adorns the front page of the town newspaper. Having secured enough money to hold them over at the hotel for a couple of days, Augustus Pompleton and his wfe register and go to their room, to determine how to reach New York. During the absence of the porter, Perkins volunteers to take some ice water up to them. He discovers the performers sorting out some stage jewels. He immediately comes to the conclusion that these two are the thieves wanted in New York in connection with the big robbery. The actors carry out the misunderstanding are taken to New York by the correspondence sleuth. Having arrived at the police station the captain discharges the couple, and has the would-be detective locked up.

SWAG OF DESTINY (Feb. 28).—Flinty McNeal, a crook, receives a letter from his sweetheart, pleading with him to abandon his crooked life, marry her, and settle down on a little chicken farm near Dayton, her uncle having died and left her some money. McNeal is about to turn over a new leaf and start on the straight road, when he sees a man pick up a pocketbook from the sidewalk filled with money. The old desire to "get it" comes over him, and he follows the man to his home. That night while Jim Dorgan, the finder of the pocketbook, and his wife are sleeping under the influence of liquor, McNeal steals quietly into the house. His plan is interrupted for the time being by the crying of two infants. Mrs. Dorgan arises from the big arm chair, enters the sleeping chamber and rocks the baby to sleep. She then falls into a heavy slumber. McNeal enters the rom in which Mr. Dorgan is asleep, takes the pocketbook from the table, steals cautiously back into the bedroom, kidnaps one of the babies, and leaves. He takes the infant to his sweetheart's home where he promises to travel the straight and narrow path. The girl falls desperately in love with the baby, although aware of the fact that Flinty had stolen it. Some time later McNeal discovers the home he had robbed of the baby was nothing more or less than a baby farm, which had been raided a few days after his notable theft. Mr. and Mrs. Dorgan were sent to jail. Flinty and his sweetheart, now married, happy on the farm, leading a pure and simple life, promise themselves to make the child's future a happy one.

THE INFLUENCE ON BRONCHO BILLY (Mar. 1).—Jim Hendricks receives a letter from his daughter in the East stating that she is on her way and will arrive with her little girl that day. The stage coach carrying her from the railroad station, some miles from her father's home, meets with an accident. While repairing the vehicle of ancient times, Bessie Hendrick's young daughter, canters off into the woods in search of wild flowers. Bessie runs after her. Having captured the young rascal and returning to the road Bessie discovers the coach has gone on its journey. Broncho Billy on horseback discovers the young woman in her unfortunate position, offers his horse to her, places her safely in the saddle with her daughter and leads the horse to her father's home. The young Westerner, Broncho Billy, not really the character we see him, is a desperate outlaw. Jim Hendricks and his wife welcome their daughter with open arms and after learning of Broncho Billy's noble and generous deed, offer him the hospitality of their home. The next morning, Broncho Billy, about to depart, has a long talk with Bessie. His plans for holding up the stage coach that day are cast to the four winds. He determines to lead a straight life, and all for a woman.

BIOGRAPH.

A CHANCE DECEPTION (Feb. 24).—The jealous husband saw a flirtation; the Raffles, a necklace. The husband's suspicions were further confirmed when the Raffles came out of his hiding. The Raffles permitted the deception, until his manhood came to the surface. He realized how his own happiness might have been so jeopardized, and the little wife concerned was restored to her own.

LOVE IN AN APARTMENT HOTEL (Feb. 27).—In the apartment hotel lived the aspiring maid, whose solicitude maintained order in the bachelor's apartment. He was her ideal, and the all-adoring bell-boy was firmly but gently given to understand that maids who read "Heliotrope Glendening's Advice to Young Ladies" look higher than ice-water toters. A compromising complication, however, with an unexpected visit from a beautiful lady, quite convinces the aspiring one that wealthy young bachelors may be the grandest men ever, but their aspirations, when it comes to the crucial test, are not for chambermaids.

PATHE.

THE INFERNAL PIG (Feb. 26).—In this film you are shown the working of a mysterious Black Hand Society. Pietro, wishing to join it, is given the task of delivering a pig containing a bomb to a wealthy butcher. The bomb is fixed to explode at noon that day. Carrying the pig and the bomb, Pietro loses his nerve and leaves the pig in care of his wife. He goes out again and his uneasy conscience influences his actions so much that he gets into trouble with the police. When they are through with him he lands in a hospital, but as the clock nears the midday hour the thought of the bomb at home sends him scurrying from the hospital, with patients, nurses and orderlies in pursuit. He reaches home breathless, to find that Mrs. Pietro has cooked the pig and that the bomb was merely a test to prove his loyalty to the tenets of the society.

GLIMPSES OF PROVINCE, FRANCE (Feb. 26).—You take a journey through one of the most beautiful parts of beautiful France while watching this film and it is all keenly enjoyable.

THE PIONEER'S RECOMPENSE (Feb. 27).—While her husband was on his trapping duties one day Mrs. Ainsley and her infant son were murdered by Indians, and from that day on Bob Ainsley swore to slay every Indian he met. A Redman passing the grave of Mrs. Ainsley, is fascinated by the cross at its head. He marks a similie of it on his breast. Bob Ainsley sees him at the grave, fires, and the Redman drops. He is later found by his tribe and they are frightened by the cross. The next morning a papoose is born with the mysterious sign upon its brow.

The baby's father and mother are forecd to flee, and after struggling for several days they die, leaving the infant alone. Ainslie finds the papoose and his determination to exterminate the Redmen wavers—and is forgotten.

THE CHEAPEST WAY (Mar. 1).—Dan Cary, a crafty old farmer, known as "Foxy Dan," decides that his beautiful daughter was too much of an expense on his hands and determined to marry her off. She liked a young rube in the village, and Cary saw to it that the bashful lover was provided with the quiet corner so necessary to the all-important declaration of love. With a wise wink he gave his consent to the engagement. But the engagement of beautiful Betty was by no means a wedding. So he tried the plan of roughening the course of true love. The rube fell for the scheme and asked Betty to elope with him immediately. But he never suspected that the convenient cabman, and the handy license and ring were all Dan Cary's idea of The Cheapest Way.

A STUDY OF KITTENS (Feb. 25).—Kittens are the delight of young and old, winning all hearts by their cunning antics, which is only one of the reasons why this film will be liked and applauded. A baker's dozen of kittens live their lives for a full day, from breakfast to bedtime, before the camera. They are unposed and simply follow their natural bent, every action resulting in numerous laughs being recorded.

SEA ANEMONES (Feb. 25).—An insight into one of the myriad mystic animals that live their lives in the bottom of the sea. They are of cylindrical shape, having a mouth equipped with numerous tenacles, which, when open, make it look for all the world like a flower.

NATIVE INDUSTRIES IN SOUDAN, EGYPT (Feb. 28).—The natives of Soudan perform their many and varied labors before the camera, giving one a knowledge of their habits, customs, and the crudity of their implements. There is an entertaining fascination in watching them work.

THE CHILDREN OF JAPAN (Feb. 28).—Scenes in Japan during the day known as children's day, when the streets are turned over to them and they are given the key to the city. An interesting study of child nature.

BUILDING PONTOON BRIDGES (Feb. 28).—A French engineer corps builds a bridge in 22 minutes and 14 seconds. An enlightening instance of the efficiency of the French Army.

KALEM.

THE MESSAGE OF THE PALMS (Feb. 26).—Henry Strong, a young civil engineer, is placed in charge of a party which makes a preliminary survey for a railroad. In their work they enter the property of Colonel Carlton who objects decidedly to the invasion of his ancestral land. Henry secures the aid of the sheriff, who convinces Carlton that the young engineer is acting within his rights but the Colonel develops a spirit of animosity toward the surveyor.

Lovie Carlton, the Colonel's daughter, does not share her father's opinion and falls deeply in love with Strong. Knowing that they cannot hope to secure the father's consent, the young people are secretly married and leave for South America, where Strong has secured a promising position.

Several years pass. The Colonel refuses to read his daughter's letters and sends them back unopened. One adversity follows another until the old gentleman is ruined financially and finally dispossessed. His faithful servant, Uncle Tom, endeavors to secure employment that he may aid the Colonel but no one will engage the old negro.

One afternoon Uncle Tom visits a place where palms are being cut and shipped to different cities for the Palm Sunday services. A little child tells the negro the story of the palm and, much impressed, he asks her to send a prayer for the Colonel. The little one therefore scribbles a message on a palm reading: "Please God, tell Miss Lovie Carlton that Uncle Tom wants her to come home, 'cause he aint able to take care of Colonel Carlton no longer."

At the Palm Sunday services in a distant city the palm comes into the hands of Lovie's little boy who hands it to his mother to decipher. Lovie's husband has prospered and the message of the palm is the means of making the old Colonel's last days very happy.

THE FIRE COWARD (Feb. 24).—Jim Houston, a young revenue officer, is sent into the hills to locate a band of moonshiners. He meets with little success as he can find no definite clue but he establishes a warm friendship with Dot Hillman, little knowing that her father and brother are the leaders of the "wildcatters."

Houston has an hereditary fear of fire which he is unable to overcome. The woods adjoining the Hillman home take fire one afternoon and the entire family leaves to battle with the flames. Houston is stricken with terror when Dot begs him to join them. He declares that he will overcome his weakness and reluctantly follows. But the sight of the forest in flames completely unnerves the young man and he flees in fright, knocking Dot's brother, Tom, into a mass of burning embers.

When the flames are extinguished and the safety of their home assured, the Hillmans return and are highly indignant because of Houston's cowardice. Determined to taunt him, they secure a white feather from the cook who is plucking a chicken and send it to the revenue officer with their compliments.

Smarting under the disgrace Houston declares that he will redeem himself by capturing the moonshiners. He renews his vigilance and surprises a party of the "wildcatters" at work. They succeed in escaping but one of them loses the heel of his boot.

The next morning Houston visits the country store where a number of mountaineers are assembled and discovers that one of Tom Hillman's boots is minus a heel. Houston wavers for an instant. He has hoped to regain Dot's love by demonstrating his strategy but now he realizes that he will implicate her brother and lose her forever. His sense of duty wins out and after a desperate struggle he succeeds in making a prisoner of young Hillman and bringing about the extermination of the moonshine operations.

SALLY'S GUARDIAN (Feb. 28).—Bobby Merrill, a wealthy young bachelor, receives word that he has been appointed guardian of the daughter of the late John Devore, who had been associated with Bobby's father in business. Bobby and his butler elaborate preparations and the house is stocked with toys. When Sally arrives and proves to be a charming young woman, Bobby and the butler are almost paralyzed.

The young bachelor has a great scheme. He tells Sally that he is the nephew of the guardian and then he proceeds to disguise himself with false whiskers. As the guardian he forbids Sally from having anything to do with the nephew and as the nephew he prevails upon Sally to elope, that they may overcome the guardian's objections.

When they are married and reach a summer resort, the crafty butler sends them a message, reading: "I have decided to forgive you and send my blessings. I am leaving for my estate in England and make you a present of my American property. Robert Merrill." While Bobby and Sally are on their way home, the butler has a bonfire in the back yard, in which he destroys the false whiskers.

WHAT NEW YORK IS DOING FOR ITS DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND (Feb. 28).—The wonderful progress made by science in helping the afflicted is demonstrated in this interesting production. We see deaf and dumb children regaining the power of speech through the strengthening of the vocal chords and instructions in vibration. Many of the hardships suffered by the blind are removed through lessons in reading by the sense of touch. Some are taught to be musicians, some to operate typewriters and others to do sewing. A striking feature of this production is the apparent spirit of happiness on the part of the pupils.

THE MISSING BONDS (Mar. 1).—Henry Withers, the confidential clerk of Archibald Langdon, a banker, pays court to his employer's daughter, Kathryn, who does not suspect that her suitor is secretly an unscrupulous gambler who hopes to recoup his losses through the marriage.

Robert Randolph, a young business man, brings a number of bonds to the Langdon office, where they are left as security. While transacting the business, Randolph meets Kathryn who calls on her father and he is quite impressed with her. When Kathryn loses a valuable necklace which she is taking to be repaired, Randolph finds it and answering her advertisement, renews the acquaintance.

Withers sees the young couple together and informs Langdon, who forbids Randolph from visiting the house. The young people decide to elope with the assistance of some friends but their plans are frustrated by Withers and Langdon and Randolph is again humbled.

Randolph, suspecting Withers' true character, one evening follows him to a gambling resort and sees him secure a loan on the bonds which have been left in the Langdon office as security. He secretly recovers them from the proprietor by making good the amount of Withers' loan and next morning he calls for his property. Consternation reigns when it is found that the bonds are missing. When quietness is restored, Randolph extracts the bonds from his pocket and exposes Withers' crime. Angered at his clerk's dishonor, Langdon orders his arrest, and extends a friendly hand to Randolph.

EDISON.

THE RANCH OWNER'S LOVE MAKING (Feb. 25).—Mary Morris is employed in the toy section of a department store; her wages are small and she has to support a young sister who is an invalid. The child is very ill. The doctor has just told Mary that Nellie (her sister) must be kept constantly in the pure Western air or she will die. Mary realizes the impossibility of this with her very limited means and is in consequence broken-hearted. It so happens that Jim Hunt, a very good-natured, wealthy rancher who has just arrived in the city for a visit, sees Mary on the street as she is going to work, and it is a case of love at first sight. He follows her to the store and enters with the intention of proposing right away but when he sees her at the counter of the toy department he fails to pull his courage up to the sticking point and covers his confusion by purchasing a big doll, which he takes with him to his hotel. Alone in his room he decides that after seeing Mary the second time he is more in love than before, and will go right back and propose to her.

On leaving the hotel he is given a telegram that has just arrived from his foreman at the ranch calling him home immediately.

In his big, good natured, blundering way he rushes into the store, tells Mary he wants to marry her and before she has time to speak in reply, he hands her a roll of bills and tells her to buy what things she needs and come to be married. He rushes from the store, leaving the girl with more money than she has ever trought of owning, and before she really has time to get over her surprise, a messenger brings her a note to be at a certain minister's house within two hours. This decides her; she does not know the man and she needs the money to save her sister's life. She does not even wait to consider the right or wrong of the action, but abruptly leaving the store, rushes home and hurriedly packing, takes her sister away. Her destination is within a mile of Jim Hunt's home.

Hunt returns home disheartened. He learns of the sick child through his friend, the doctor, and without knowng who she is, orders all sorts of luxuries to be sent to the cottage and pays for the services of a nurse. When Nellie has quite recovered, Mary, who has many times asked the doctor the name of her unknown benefactor, begs him to take a note asking him to let her thank him personally before they leave for the East. Of course at the meeting there is a mutual recognition and an explanation on the part of Mary. Jim forgives her before she has finished her story and there is another proposal, not so hurried, but more successful.

"ONE-REEL FEATURES"

TO THE TRADE:-

We take this means of thanking the trade for the many orders we have received on our first release. The enthusiasm with which ''The Blacksmith's Story'' has been received is certainly very gratifying.

Our second release, "THE TWO GLASSES," FEBRUARY 20TH, is better than our first, and remarkable for its diversity of scenes, where the author, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, has drawn a pretty story of the conversation between the wine glass and the water glass.

Our third release for FEBRUARY 27TH, ''THE DOLL AND THE DEVIL,'' is a highly costumed spectacular comedy from the old French opera, arranged by Roy L. McCardell, and will be the first film to give the trade an idea of the efficiency of our new plant both in the depth and largeness of the scenes, not to mention the fine lustrous photography obtained by our extensive lighting system.

A NIGHT IN TOWN (Mar. 2).—Mr. Newmaryd and his wife leave for a trip to the country. Before so doing, Newmaryd invites his uncle to pay him a visit, never thinking that uncle would call while they were away. As soon as they are gone, the maid and butler invite all their friends up to have a party. They dress in their employers' finery and are entertaining in royal style when uncle arrives. The butler introduces the maid as being the wife of his nephew, and uncle is very much smitten with her. He makes all sorts of advances to her and arouses the jealousy of her steady fellow, the butler. He sits in a corner with her and the butler follows them. He chases the maid away, and then proceeds to give the old fellow a sound thrashing. Uncle runs away, and returns later when his nephew and wife have returned. His nephew introduces his wife and uncle is considerably confused until Newmaryd explains that the woman uncle so much admired was a maid and uncle dare not tell of the carrying on that was done in the absence of his nephew and his wife.

THE INNOCENT BRIDEGROOM (Mar, 2).—Belmont is courting Widow Keene. She sees him with a young lady and refuses to consider his suit until she has had him investigated. She employs a detective agency to find out all about him. She sees him on the street one day with the same young lady as before and decides to folow them. This she does, and discovers that the young lady is a hairdresser and masseur and that she is treating Belmont's scalp, he being rather short of hair. Satisfied that he is all right, the widow marries him and they go away on a honeymoon trip. However, she forgets to notify the detective agency to call off their sleuth. Belmont and his wife arrive at the country hotel and the detective follows them. He sees them register and notifies the clerk that the woman with Belmont is not his wfe. They are ordered out of the hotel, and the detective goes up to their room for more evidence. Belmont and his wife return for their grips and discover the detective in their room. They think he is a burglar and a fight ensues. At last they go home and Mrs. Belmont is nearly consoled when a bil arrives from the detective agency for investigating her husband for $250. This Belmont has to pay, and all ends well after considerable explanations have been exchanged.

POWERS.

THE LAW OF COMPENSATION (Feb. 28).—Marx is a gentlemanly crook. One day he notes two well-dressed men going into a jeweler's; he steals up and watches them closely and marks a necklace of pearls bought by one of the men. He follows them; they enter a saloon; he enters, too. His actions have awakened the suspicions of a detective who has long wanted to catch Marx "with the goods." He watches and sees him go softly behind Mr. Jerome, one of the gentlemen, and take a jewelled cigarette case lying on the table. The detective rushes in and accuses Marx. Mr. Jerome is a criminologist. He looks hard at Marx, then turns to the detective and tells him he is wrong. He gave the man the cigarette case. Marx thanks him and goes. The detective is angry at thus being balked at his lawful prey, and expostulates with Mr. Jerome, who lays the detective a wager that the case will be returned to him.

Marx is watched by three companions; they demand that he hand over the cigarette case. But touched by the charity of Jerome, he refuses. There is a fight and Marx escapes. Before the struggle, one of the men shows Marx a wallet he has stolen and sneeringly gives him a ticket to the charity ball.

Marx on reaching his room, dons his evening clothes and goes. Amongst the well dressed throng he sees a beautiful woman wearing a valuable necklace of pearls. He appropriates it, well pleased with himself. He sees Jerome approach her and ask her to dance. He learns that the lady is Jerome's wife.

He comes face to face with Jerome and hands him back the cigarette case. He goes. Mrs. Jerome discovers the loss and describes the man who apologized after accidentally rubbing against her. Jerome recognizes the description—it is Marx. He calls up the detective, who, with an officer, goes to Marx' room and arrests him. They take him to the Jerome home. The two men are face to face. Marx denies the theft, and coolly asks Jerome for a cigarette. Jerome is puzzled, but he opens his cigarette case and discovers the necklace lying therein. The men look at each other. Jerome says, "I have need of a man like you." Marx can hardly believe his ears. A man wants him and will trust him. They shake hands on it.

VICTOR.

THE APPEAL (Feb. 21).—Henry Warburton and his wife, Isobel, were a young married couple who supposedly did, by their friends, "live happy ever after." But this was not so. Isobel was a sort of butterfly. She loved her husband and was true to him, but she liked to be admired by everyone and did not like to sit and wait for her husband to finish his work to take her out, so she went out with other fellows. At first Warburton was very willing that she do this, knowing her love for him and understanding that she just loved society and fun. After a while he grew tired of it and complained to his wife and ordered her not to do it again.

While at the office one day, he needed a certain paper which was at home. He hurriedly telephoned his wife to bring the paper to his office. She had something else to do first and did not think about hurrying with the paper. Thus a deal was lost through her lack of interest. When she left the office her husband watched her go from the window and to his amazement, saw her stand and talk with a gentleman on the street and then walk off wiht him. His jealousy was aroused and he followed. He saw the gentleman walk to the house, and in the door. Had he but known that it was just a friend, or that his wife put him out of the house, when he told her he really cared for her, the troubles of Henry Warburton would have soon been at an end, but he suspicioned his wife instead, and this led to a disagreement and at last to a separation.

Too late, Isobel, saw her mistakes of the past; how she really neglected her husband thoughtlessly and what trouble it had brought upon them. She wrote for forgiveness, but was refused. At last driven to desperation, she 'phones to him—the last appeal to forgive. He was still hurt and unyielding and so with his ear at the 'phone, he heard the answer of her last appeal as it came to her. A shot and all was still after a faint good-bye. Now too late for Warburton, he saw his mistake and was left to go on alone.

NESTOR.

A FOOL FOR LUCK (Feb. 24).—The Chester-Bowers-Lyson Moving Picture Company is rehearsing some scenes for a touching drama. Alfred is made up as a convict, and after a trying time rehearsing and a successful scene, he gets a thirst and persuades Edward to accompany him to a neighboring saloon, during the setting of the next scene.

In the prison yard the compulsory guests are splitting rocks for compulsory recreation. Slippery Jim seizes the chance he has been looking for for months, and true to his name, he slips away. The news quickly spreads and Hawkshaw, the detective, tells intelligent Police Officer Doolan, to keep an active lookout for the fugitive. He also tells him that a $500 reward is offered for the capture of the convict.

He sees Alfred as he returns with Edward to the studio. He pounces upon them and takes them to the station. Doolan's reward is spoilt by the telephone, with Edward on one end of the wire and the director on the other.

Doolan's vision of an early marriage dissolves with Alfred's release and Edward's opinion of his intelligence. He goes sadly forth. Enter Slippery Jim round the corner. A collision introduces him to Doolan and the convict pinches himself to see if he is awake when Doolan digs him in the ribs, gives him a fine, fat cigar and tells him that "he can't fool him again.

Doolen insists upon taking him to his studio, where explanations ensue far too quickly to suit poor Jim. Doolan announces his early marriage, and Alfred and Edward are invited to the ceremony.

A PIG'S A PIG (Feb. 24).—Edna is a terrible flirt; her range is wide, for Daddy owns a ranch and the cowboys all dote on Edna. Daddy gets sick of coming upon cowboys making love to Edna. He gets a brilliant idea. Edna shall suffer for her frivolity if necessary and he will have some fun at the same time.

Daddy says that the boy who shall catch a greased pig and bring it in first will get Edna. The boys agree, but Edna, with a very decided leaning towards Richard, thinks the idea is silly. A clergyman is prevailed to be present in order to see the license properly signed and to perform the ceremony. The boys start after a very active pig whose pace is increased by fear of the shouting throng after him.

Richard believes in brains, rather than activity of foot and the ability to accumulate grease. He starts for the pig pen and secures a twin piggy; he greases him carefully and bears him in triumph to Edna, and the astonished Daddy. He and Edna are quickly married, and the congratulations are interrupted by a shouting throng of cowboys, one of whom bears a very angry and sticky pig.

THE VORTEX (2 reels—Feb. 26).—Bess and Jim were happily engaged and soon to be married when the stage-coach brought Denning Stokes. The gallant, handsome stranger, with his fine clothes and jewels, seemed to hypnotize Bess. But knowing that her father and mother preferred honest Jim for her husband, the girl met him by stealth. It was not, however, until the very day of her marriage that she consented to be married to Denning instead of Jim. So while the guests waited at her father's house, she and Denning were being made one by another minister and were soon whirled away in the stage-coach never to return to that part of the country again.

Two years passed, and although Bess found her husband's cruelty and drunkenness hard to bear, she had little Nellie, a tot of a year, to comfort her. One day when Denning insisted upon her taking the baby outside, she met Jim, who had just arrived by stage a few moments before. Denning, from his cot, where he had thrown himself, half drunk, heard voices, recognized that of Jim and at once came out. A quarrel ensued in which Denning's revolver was accidentally discharged, and Bess mortally wounded. Angrily declaring that he would accuse Jim of shooting Bess, Denning ran for help, but the young wife giving little Nellie into her old friend's care and exonerating him before a witness, insisted upon his hurrying away, so that when Denning returned he found only a stranger at the lifeless body of his wife, and was unable to trail Jim further.

After wandering all day, Jim met a party of Indians, and the chief's daughter, taking a fancy to the white papoose, insisted upon Jim coming to the camp with her. The chief, although he gave them food and water, refused to allow Jim to remain, so the maiden insisted upon going with him.

Sixteen years passed. Nellie, now a young girl of seventeen, believed the squaw to be her mother and Jim her father, and the two, loving her dearly, never told her differently. But when Judge Brooks and his son, Joe, arrived at the little hotel, which Jim kept, to spend their holidays, Nellie and Joe promptly fell in love with each other. The Judge would not have disapproved of the match, had Nellie not told them that she was a half-breed. This left Jim to the choice of either telling his real name and revealing the identity of Nellie and being arrested for her mother's death, or remaining silent and seeing his adopted daughter miserable. He chose the former, and Denning, who had been trailing Jim for years, and just brought the sheriff to arrest Jim, was taken entirely off guard when the sheriff announced that he also was wanted. A thrilling fight ensued, ending in Dennig being mortally wounded by the sheriff. But it was not until he was made to realize that he could not recover that he confessed the truth, thereby sweeping away the Judge's objections to his son's fiancée and once more making Jim a free man.

comes the owner of a thriving ranch.

Brentwood meets a beautiful Spanish girl, Luz, and is much attracted to her. Her father and mother are pleased at the rich rancher's attentions. A half witted half-breed, Felipe, with an insane hatred of all "Gringos," resents Brentwood's intrusion.

One day a young wanderer, Allen, comes to the hacienda and begs for work. Felipe would turn him away, but Luz sees the good looking young youth and intercedes for him. Time passes and the young people are mutually attracted. The father of Luz surprises Allen one day putting a rose in his daughter's hair and sends him about his business.

Felipe is delighted and is found one day practicing throwing the riata. Luz admires it.

Brentwood asks for the hand of Luz, and the parents are pleased, but not so Luz. Allen seeks work at Brentwood's ranch and the two meet. Brentwood recognizes his son in Allen. Allen denounces him and leaves. Brentwood is struck with contrition and sends a peon for his son with one hundred dollars in gold to help him on his way. Brentwood again appeals to Luz and rides away exasperated by her refusal. Felipe follows and kills him, believing he has insulted his beloved mistress.

Allen enters a barroom and in paying for a drink he shows a lot of money. The sheriff notes this and Allen is arrested as the murderer. His quarrel with Brentwood is brought into the evidence against him and it looks as though nothing could save him.

Luz, riding along the road discovers Felipe's riata. She confronts Felipe and gets him to the court room, where he confesses, and in a fit of delirium dies. Allen and Luz are united as the picture fades.

REX.

IN THE SOUTH SEAS (Feb. 27).—Domingo is a pearl diver and a good husband to Afga. One day while diving, he brings up his last batch of shells—for he is stricken with the awful water blindness. Afga insists upon taking her husband's place and dives. Fate decrees that Afga shall bring good fortune to lighten their pain. She discovers a large pearl, one of great price.

The Chinese traders pay their periodical visit to the fishery, and after trading with the natives, learn of the big pearl. The crafty Ching Gow leaves Ah Foo to deal with the natives and goes to Domingo's hut. He uses all his wiles, but Domingo and Afga refuse to sell at Ching Gow's price.

Domingo and Afga fear for their pearl. They wrap it in a bulb of kelp and cover it with sand. Night comes and Ching Gow, Ah Foo and other Chinamen leave their ship and stealthily row to shore and enter Domingo's hut, and after the couple have refused to divulge the hiding place of the pearl, they kidnap Domingo and Afga and take them aboard, where preparations are made to torture Domingo in the presence of his wife.

An instrument of torture is erected, put up over the hatch and consists of a huge stone set in a spiral coil so that when set going it will descend slowly but surely and crush the life out of the man beneath. Domingo is to be tied to a chair and placed under the stone. Afga watches the proceedings in horror from the top of the hatch.

Afga selects a moment when Ching Gow is below and a Chinaman is bending over the infernal contrivance. She knifes the Chinaman, takes the knife he carries and throws his body into the sea. She descends the hatch and as Ah Foo and Ching Gow are gloating over their fiendish work, she manages to whisper to Domingo to avoid the chair. He understands. She gives him a knife, which he conceals. Afga returns to the deck and dives into the sea. Several Chinamen observe her and put off in a boat, which she dodges by her expert diving, and being helped by the darkness, Afga reaches shore and secures help. The natives swim out to the boat with Afga.

Ah Foo stands by the trigger ready to put the machine into action, whilst Ching is telling Domingo to sit in the chair. Domingo turns upon his enemy and there is a terrible struggle. Ah Foo sees this and drops upon Domingo. He is forcibly put in the chair and tied securely.

Ah Foo returns to the trigger and releases it, when Afga and the natives swarm aboard and fight and kill the Chinese crew and Ah Foo. Ching Gow fights to the last, but is overpowered and placed beneath the rapidly descending stone. He is left to his fate as Afga, guiding Domingo, and the natives swim back to land.

The natives celebrate their victory with a characteristic dance and the pearl brings a good price; and as Afga kisses Domingo's sightless eyes he tells her he is well content in the possession of her wonderful love.

IN THE BLOOD (Mar. 2).—The colonel is a stern man, firmly set in his morals and principles, unyielding in his hatred of the faults of those whose natures are lighter than his own—terribly just, and therefore, unmerciful. His wife is of more natural clay, but light-hearted and frivolous. She admires her husband, but is afraid of him. She seeks more joyous companionship and being a "good fellow," she is attracted to the young lieutenant, who falls in love with her.

The young couple go too far, and finally the lieutenant is forbidden the house and the wife rebels. There is a stormy scene and despite the fact that Lois is devoted to her baby, she, longing for sympathy, makes an appointment with the lieutenant and together they ride away in an automobile. The colonel finds a note from Lois, telling him she is escaping from his overbearing tyranny. He resolves to put her out of his life for all time.

The automobile breaks down and Lois weakens, and despite the endearments and protests of the lieutenant, she goes back home. She pleads desperately with the colonel and the child clings to her, but the colonel is adamant. While she is promising that he shall have no further fault to find her, one of his friends comes in with a handbag which was found by the body of the lieutenant—a suicide. The public scandal decides the colonel, and he arranges a separation.

Lois keeps in touch with the sympathetic nurse with love for the child. She watches over her from a distance.

As the years roll by the child proves to possess her mother's nature and the sternness of the colonel and the protests of her nurse fail to cure the child of her love of fun or her waywardness. The colonel is terribly grieved, but he does not understand.

ouis keeps in touch with the sympathetic nurse and eventually persuades her to advise the colonel to send the little girl to a school for unmanageable girls. The scheme works, and the colonel sends the child to Lois, not knowing who she is. Lois understands her nature and joins in her games and institutes a system consisting of love and pleasure, which causes the girl to write and tell her father that she is a good girl now and "may she live here always."

His paternal love is awakened and he is fearful the child will be weaned away from him. He goes to reclaim her, and finds the woman he has made an outcast of. He sees what she has done for their child, and understanding comes, and they all return home together to lead a happier life.

THE COWARD'S ATONEMENT (2 Reels) (Feb. 25).—William Carter and Harry Collier are great friends and both love the bright little Irene. She likes Will, but not enough to accept him. She becomes engaged to Harry. War breaks out between the North and South. Harry enlists joyfully, but Will only joins the Confederate army under compulsion. Colonel Dickinson does not believe in secession and joins the Union army. He is put in charge of a regiment to fight the Southerners. Irene weeps when the boys march away.

Very early in the war Harry shows his metal in saving an ammunition wagon on a burning bridge in the face of a Unionist fire. He is promoted to the rank of lieutenant. Will feels the pangs of jealousy, but overcomes them and congratulates his friend.

General Robert E. Lee sends a dispatch ordering a detachment to be sent under a picked man to defend the Georgia and Southern Railroad from the destroying Unionists, and Harry is assigned to the dangerous mission. In his company is Will. The Unionists, under Dickinson, blow up part of the road, but are routed by the charge of the Confederates under the intrepid Harry. During the sharp fight Will sees two men fall, one on either side of him. He is wounded in the arm and in a panic of terror he rides away. He goes to the home of Irene. She, not knowing who the marauder is, nearly shoots him for cowardice. He determines to retrieve himself as she bathes and binds his painful wound.

Colonel Dickinson arrives with his troops. Irene pushes Will into her bedroom. She permits the orderlies to search the house, but appeals to Colonel Dickinson when they go to her bedroom door. The colonel allows the room to go unsearched. Colonel Dickinson, in a room adjoining the one in which Will is oncealed, writes a dispatch telling General Grant where to send reinforcements—to Stony Fork Bridge. Will hears the import of the message and determines to secure the dispatch. He writes a false dispatch, stating that the "Union reinforcements for Dickinson will arrive at Stony Fork Bridge tomorrow." This he puts into his breastpocket. Will gets out through the window and runs to the barn, where the horses are quartered, whilst Irene delays Colonel Dickinson by giving him some light refreshment.

The scout entrusted with the dispatch goes to the barn to get his horse. Will strikes him down with a whiffletree. Another guard hears the noise, runs to the barn door and is shot by Will, who has just time to hide the real dispath in the bandages on his arm, when he is overpowered and taken before Colonel Dickinson. He is searched, and the false dispatch found in his breast pocket. Dickinson believes it to be his original dispatch, sends it off by another scout. He orders Will to be confined, but permits Irene to bathe and rebandage his wounded arm. In this way Irene is able to obtain the original dispatch. She runs to the barn, and seeing the dead scout, makes an old darkey strip the body of his clothes, and donning them herself, she mounts and gets to the Confederate lines, where she is recognized by Harry.

Will, confined in the smokehouse at Irene's home, sees her go and feels more satisfied with himself, but determines to escape in order to thoroughly retrieve himself in the eyes of Irene, his cowardice, and for his own salvation.

The battle of Stony Fork Bridge starts and progresses. Breastworks are stormed and the battle sways back and forth. Dickinson orders his artillery to shell the town. A shell bursts through the smokehouse and Will escapes through the opening made thereby. The advance contingent of the Confederates is thrown back, and Harry, with reserves, comes to the rescue with one of his old-time charges. Will arrives breathless, unseen, and mad with the lust of battle. As he reaches the breastworks, the Confederate flag-bearer is shot. Will seizes the flag, and as he leaps over he is shot and falls, mortally wounded, by the side of Colonel Dickinson, who is dying. The two opponents in the war shake hands and succor each other in the throes of death. Will sinks back "and for all the evil in his life he did, his death atoned." Harry adds to his spurs, and he and Irene find their old comrade with his beloved flag wrapped around him and a smile of contentment on his lips.

THE BUGLER OF COMPANY B (Feb. 22).—Col. Miles believes a three-year term enlistment will benefit his son, and prevails upon him to join his command as bugler. Col. Miles is in active service in Arizona. Milton, the son, lives at a rapid pace. An act of insubordination calls for punishment, and although the Colonel is deeply grieved, he permits the arrest of Milton.

Milton, believing his relationship wil protect him, becomes quarrelsome with an officer and assaults him. The colonel treats the case with the same dignity as one of no kin, and orders Milton court-martialed for the offense. Milton becomes vindictive towards his father. During the trial, at which the colonel attends, Milton insults the officers present, the army in general, and likewise the colonel and "that d—— rag" he has been saluting for twenty years. He tears the flag from the table and throws it beneath his feet. The colonel apologizes to the officers for the deflement of the country's flag by his son and he orders the buttons cut from his uniform and that he be drummed out of camp. This is done, Milton disappears and from that day on the colonel ages rapidly.

As a shabby hobo Milton arrives back home and at night calls on his sweetheart. The girl tolerates his presence, listens to the outpouring of his grief and explanations, then tells him she still loves him, but it is a love such as one has for the departed, for he has destroyed all ties of betrothal. After leaving his sweetheart the fires of conscience begin their relentless gnawings. He loves his father despite his period of execration, but the magnitude of his shameful offense holds him in obscurity—an outcast. He cannot resist the power that draws him to the neighborhood wherein his father's command is located. As a shabby tramp he seeks a hill that overlooks the camp, and day after day he crawls silently to the top where he can feast his hungry heart on the scene where waves the flag and people he renounced. One day he is almost discovered by a small party of cavalrymen. Then he abandons the neighborhood rather than be discovered. In order to shun all that would bring up scenes of the past he ingratiates himself into the good graces of an Indian tribe and eventually is taken into their fold.

The Indians begin a series of depradations and finally killings. The awakening comes to Milton when a squad of his father's own command comes to the Chief to remonstrate, when at a given signal the squad is massacred, all of which is seen from Milton's tent flap, where he is hiding to conceal his identity. The bodes are divested of uniforms, which are burned, bodes hidden and horses rebranded, etc. Milton learns there is to be an immediate attack on the camp of his father's command. He secures the bugle of the massacred musician, secrets it, then determines to warn the camp and sacrifice his life if need be. Growing desperate as the war dance begins, he seizes his horse and gallops away. Other Indians see him, fire, and the shot renders his leg useless. As he nears the hill from which the camp is viewed, he sees the Indians creeping to attack the camp. He makes the top of the hill in time to blow repeated calls "To arm!" The camp, not knowing who the bugler is, takes advantage, and is enabled to repulse the attacking Indians after a brisk fight.

Milton is satisfied with his sacrifice, and crawls away willing to die rather than reveal himself, yet anxious to keep out of the hands of the Indians. A couple of Indians have stalked him, however. They capture and take him before their chief. They torture him, not to the point of death, for the Chief has a more subtle means of revenge. He heats a bowie knife and destroys the sight of both of Milton's eyes, then places him astride a horse, ties hands behind him, feet beneath, clothed in full Indian regalia. Then has three or four Indians take him to trail leading to camp, set the horse in free flight so he will approach the camp. The Indians retreat, knowing he will be shot by his own people.

The Colonel after the battle, wonders if the unknown warning bugler is Milton. Old memories awaken. He wanders about the camp, his mind intent upon thoughts of his boy, when he notices the approach of a single rider. He fears trickery, and takes a gun and shoots the oncoming Indian rider. The horse is stopped a short distance from the stockade gates by some of the soldiers, and they recognize the body as that of Milton, the long-missing buglar of their company. Realizing the horror of the situation and fearing for the Colonel's mind from the shock of unconsciously killing his own son, the soldiers throw a blanket over the remains after taking him from the horse. The Colonel approaches and is desirous of getting a full report, and is puzzled at the meaning of the occurrence. The soldiers are successful in keeping him from viewing the body, but by chance a hand of the body projects from underneath the blanket, on one finger of which is a ring which the Colonel recognizes as belonging to his son.

He totters for a moment, then tries to get to the body, but the soldiers forcibly keep him from it until the Colonel thunders a threat of arrest, when they fall back and move away with backs to the scene. The Colonel discovers the identity of the body and calls for the surgeon, who comes and pronounces death. As the Colonel stands stunned into silence with the awfulness of his grief, the surgeon pulls from the breast of the body a small case in which is a small silk flag. Nothing more is found. The Colonel reaches for it, realizing its meaning. He stands at attention, salutes the body with all the dignity of his drooping body, turns to a subordinate officer, charges him to take command of his place, removes his sword and belt, which he lays on the body. He weeps over the loss of his boy as the soldiers move silently away, leaving their beloved Colonel alone in his grief.

ECLAIR.

THE MAN WHO DARED (2 Reels) (Feb. 27).—Jack Stone was wanted, or, at least under suspicion, as a maker of illicit whiskey, but he had an inner feeling that, above all else, he should protect the rights of his sister and force, if necessary, her husband to a fair and proper treatment of her.

There was to be a dance that night in the settlement and Jack Stone intended to go. He knew that Sergeant Smith, of the R. M. P., the husband of his sister, Julia, had been making secret love to Tess of the Hills.

While under suspicion, there was no absolute evidence against Jack, and consequently, the police were unable to place him under arrest when he appeared at the ball. Here he made love to the beautiful Tess and she willingly received his attention. Jack left the dance with Tess. Later, Stone and Tess were accosted in the forest by Sergeant Smith. On his return to headquarters Smith found an order, instructing him to proceed at once to collect evidence against the illicit whiskey sellers. He immediately set out with an attachment of mounted police to search the home of his brother-in-law, but the word of warning came to Stone in time and the casks of liquor were quickly hurled into the cellar of the cabin, where they were set on fire by an overturned lamp, purposely thrown by the fleeing Stone. The troopers arrived to find the house in flames. They endeavor to enter the house, but are driven back by the flames, and fortunately for them, since the entire cabin is wrecked almost instantly afterwards by a terrific explosion.

Stone took to the trail, which led up into the wilderness, and Sergeant Smith felt that he now had some hold on this man, whom he considered his rival for the affections of Tess. So began a chase of man after man.

It was a long, rough, desolate way through those wild Northwest hills, and both men were badly exhausted before the first day ended. Stone, who finds his brother-in-law, the R. M. P. Sergeant, lying exhausted and almost dead from exposure, is touched by the sight of this strong man lying there absolutely helpless. He forgets his wrath and his manhood asserts itself to the extent that he takes Smith into his arme and nurses him through the night.

In the morning, the Sergeant, revived by his pursuer, awakens with a start. Upon realizing his position, he reaches for his gun, but it has been taken from him, He refuses to listen to Stone and demands that he be given his revolver. Upon Stone's suggestion, they decide to fight out their battle as two strong men. The two, there alone in that great desolate wilderness, pace for their distances and fire. Both are wounded, but Jack is able to drag himself to the home of his sister. He tells her what has happened and she rushes into the hills to the assistance of her husband.

Help is secured when she fires three shots from her husband's revolver and the injured man is carried home. Here they find Stone dying, with the beautiful Tess attempting to minister to him, but Stone has played his part, and he now rebukes the little coquette who has caused the estrangement between his sister and the mounted police officer. She learns now that his attentions to her, his daring entrance into the dance hall in the midst of the police, who were only too anxious to arrest him, had only been for the purpose of bringing Smith to a realization of the terrible wrong he was doing his wife.

The tragic death of Stone was not in vain. Smith realizes the worthlessness of the woman for whom he had thought he cared, and then and there, he resolves that never again would he besmirch the honor of the uniform he wore. Smith and his wife are reunited at the death-bed of the outlaw, Stone.

THE SISTERS (Feb. 24).—Violet and Olive are sisters. They own a large farm. Violet is a good business woman while Olive is studious and shy. Both love Al, a young college boy. Old Stubbs wants to marry Violet because their farms are next to each other. Edward, the foreman of the farm, loves Violet but she considers him beneath her notice. Violet discovers that her love for Al, the college boy, is not returned and her jealousy rises to an insane frenzy when she finds that Al and her sister are engaged. In her rage she throws her sister to the floor, and runs from the house. Se sees a sign stating that the Gypsies are in camp and have love potions for sale. While bargaining for one in the wild hope that she may win Al's. love, her jealousy rises until she buys poison from the Gypsies.

This is seen by Old Stubbs, Violet's venerable suitor, and he follows her. She goes in her sister's room and puts the poison in her medicine. This is seen through the window by Old Stubbs, who orders her to go back in the kitchen. She wants to take back the poison, but Old Stubbs forbids her to touch it. He demands that she marry him or he will accuse her. She is about to consent when Edward, her foreman, who has been an unobserved witness of the poison episode, comes in the kitchen with the glass containing the poison, which he throws into the fire and puts Old Stubbs out. Later, Violet marries the foreman, her sister the college boy.

HALF WAY TO RENO (Feb. 16).—The trouble started because the young husband had half an hour to spare and devoted the time to looking over his wife's bills. More sorrow was caused by the fact that he commented upon them. There was an angry exchange of words, and when the man wrathfully departed he left a very tearful little wife behind him. While she was still plunged in grief, her dearest friend called and added fuel to the flames. According to the "dearest friend" the only womanly thing to do was to go to Reno and get a divorce. The wife consented, and departed after leaving a note, meant to be bitingly cruel, but which was really pitifully weak. The husband came home to prepare for a business trip out of town, read the note, and regarded it as a stupid joke. He did not remain to investigate because it was nearly train time and important consequences hinged upon the trip.

The husband was just comfortably settled in the sleeping car when a strange woman entered with a baby and a valise. She dropped the valise on his toes, the baby in his arms, muttered, "Where is that dratted boy," and rushed out of the car. The man was so dumbfounded that he did not even notice his wife, when she entered, and a moment later when the train started, leaving him the unwilling custodian of a child, his cup of misery flowed over. For a time he regarded himself as the most miserable of men, and no matter what he did was unable to get rid of the infant. The child, however, brought him good fortune, for the man's offended wife forgot her anger in pity and finally aided the helpless men to care for the child. There were mutual explanations and mutual forgiveness, and when the mother finally joined them explaining that she had lost the baby while trying to locate her elusive small son they were really sorry to see the infant go away. For they realized that it was only the tiny hands of the baby that had turned back a woman who was half way to Reno.

THE PRETTY GIRL IN LOWER FIVE (Feb. 18).—It is a long trip from Chicago to Los Angeles and when the young man boarded the train in the Windy City, he was afraid that time would hang heavily on his hands. Then he looked around the car and saw one interesting object, a pretty girl in Lower 5. He had Section 6, directly across the aisle, and he did al he could, in a gentlemanly way, to scrape up an acquaintance. The maiden, however, viewed him with disdain, and would not even accept his assistance when she was unable to open the window. They stood together on the platform of the observation car, but they might as well have been miles apart, for she ignored his presence. There was sorrow in Section 6, and freezing disdain in Section 5, while the train was plunging its way westward.

The scenery changes on an overland trip, and so do the dispositions of many passengers. The young man in 6 found a chance to be the gallant knight of the damsel in 5, acquaintance followed, and long before they arrived at the California city they were on friendly terms. In Los Angeles the girl was met by her father, the boy by his sister, and the friendship so unconventionally begun later ripened into a happy love romance.

THE TWO SISTERS (Feb. 21).—One sister was useful; she was a hard working doctor in a little country town. The other sister was ornamental; she was young, pretty, stylish and thoroughly selfish.

The doctor worked hard to keep her sister in luxury. When their parents died, they had left the little girl as a sacred legacy to their elder child, and she never forgot it.

The doctor had a sweetheart, a young lawyer, who was far from being the manly chap she thought him. He met the little sister when she returned on a summer vacation from her fashionable boarding school, and promptly forgot the vows of love he had made the elder girl. The doctor awoke one morning to find that her sister and her sweetheart had eloped, leaving only an indifferent message behind them. It took from her life all she had to love and from that time on she tried by hard work to forget her sorrows.

Five years later, the school girl was a haggard, worn woman, city gayety had wrecked her constitution, and her husband, who had wedded her only for her beauty, began to regret his bargain, when he saw he had an invalid on his hands. He cruelly deserted her, as cruelly as he and the woman had gone away five years before. Fortunately for the neglected wife, she had still one friend, the sister she had wronged. The doctor worried about the girl, and something, perhaps it was intuition, led her to search for her sister just when the younger woman needed her most. She found her broken in health and spirits, but the doctor, through her medical skill, was able to restore her physically, although it was a long time before her mental calm came back to her, and she never forgot that everything she was or had, she owed to the big sister who had repaid deceit with love.

WHEN THE LIGHT FADES (Feb. 24).—John Robertson and his brother Fred, were fishermen and inseparable. Both loved the pretty Jennie Blair, but John, more bold, spoke his love and won her.

They went to live in the home of the brothers, but hard luck came upon them for the sea refused to yield a living for the three. Fred, who loved in silence, tried to cheer them with hopes of the future, but John, growing morose and sad, departed suddenly one night to seek fortune elsewhere and return.

In the moments of her extremity, Fred, loving her, spoke no word of himself. Faithfully he brought her the catch of the day and did his best, as a faithful friend, to keep her in food and shelter.

But as the years rolled by and no word came from John, he grew bolder, spoke his love and the pair were wed. A child came to bless them and then, one night a bearded figure that was John, came to the little cabin and looked in through a window. What he saw shot a sudden pain nto his heart for Fred and Jennie, serenely happy, were amusing themselves with the baby.

Clutching a bag of money, John entered the house. They did not recognize the bearded fisherman of years ago, and he gave them a bag of money, saying "I was John's friend, and before he died he bade me bring you this." Then turning to the door, he went out into the night and was seen no more.

FATHER'S FINISH (Feb. 27).—Father being a minister and a bit over-particular, took a decided dislike to Bob. So they thought out a plan and the two blackened up their faces in such a way that no one could recognize them. Then they went to papa and asked him to marry them. Papa, in his ministerial capacity, performed the ceremony—then the denoument.

FAMOUS ILLINOIS CANYONS AND STARVED ROCK (Feb. 27).—Located about one hundred miles from the metropolis of the West is a bounty of the most gorgeous canyons to be found anywhere. Solid rock forms veritable pyramids and is covered with beautiful vegetation in endless variety. Nature alone has been the architect and has shown its master hand in a very marked manner. One canyon adjoins another and each seems to excel the other in the beauty of the rock formation as well as the lavish display of decorative and romantic forests and vegetable life. Natural springs abound in the region and the various strata of rock seem to have been permeated with vari-colored chemicals which add to the overwhelming beauty and offer a delight to the eye and soul of man that is awe inspiring. The Illinois river, silent, but majestic, enhances the gorgeous situation. Much of the early history of the State of Illinois was enacted at this location and it was here where the illustrious Marquette planned to establish the capitol of the new world.

HIGH AND LOW (Mar. 1).—Jim Calvin, son of the rich mill owner, was like many of his friends, good for advice, but weak on execution. He wouldn't work until he enjoyed a heart-to-heart talk with his father. Ralph Carrington, the foreman, caught Jimmy smoking—an unpardonable offense—so he "fired" Jimmy on the spot. Hanging about the lumber yard was one-armed Bergen, a former victim of the sharp Calvin saws. He saw Jimmy and they plotted mischief, for Jimmy was denied his home.

One-armed Bergen and Jimmy met behind a fence one night and attempted an assualt upon foreman Carrington. The latter with the aid of a policeman, subdued them, passed some change to Mr. Policeman and took them home. Then Calvin repented and sent for his son and Carrington, easy to forgive gave one-armed Bergen and Jimmy a job in the lumber yard. It marked a turning point.

RELIANCE.

THE BELLS (2 reels—Feb. 19).—Mathias, an inn keeper, receives notice that his rent is due, and that if it is not paid at once, his tavern will be taken from him. In the midst of a terrible snowstorm, a Jew arrives in his sleigh. While paying his bill, he displays to Mathias' eyes a bag of gold. This sets him to thinking how much he needs that money. The Jew gets up at night and has his sleigh taken from the barn. He must be off to town, and starts with all the bells of his sleigh ringing. This awakens Mathias. He slowly gets out of bed and follows the Jew through the snow. Creeping up behind the sleigh he murders the Jew. He feels safe for no one has seen him leave the house, but through the fifteen years that follow he never sees a golden coin without hearing the sleigh bells as they rang on the night of December 24th, when he murdered the Jew in his sleigh. Mathias has a daughter, Annette, who becomes engaged to Christian, a young soldier. Mathias leaves his inn to purchase Christmas presents in a neighboring town. While there he attends a show given in the town hall, by a noted hypnotist, La Voir. This man makes announcement that by hypnotism he can make any subject tell the things that weigh upon his conscience. Feigning illness, Mathias at once leaves the hall. After he returns to his inn, La Voir visits his town and puts up at Mathias' place. He proves to be a friend of Christian, who makes him acquainted with the family. Unable to stand the man's searching gaze, Mathias goes to his room and falls asleep. He dreams that he is on trial for murdering the Jew. When he denies all knowledge of the crime, the judge calls in La Voir, who by power of his art makes Mathias tell what he did on the night of December 24th, 1818. Under La Voir's influence, Mathias tells the entire story and goes over the ground of the murder stey by step. He tells of the falling snow, his many visions of the dead Jew and the unending ringing of the bells. He then dreams that he is condemned to be hanged and when he feels the rope about his neck, choking him, he wakens to stagger out into the hall. But the dream has been too much for the already conscience burdened man, and clutching at his throat, he falls dead before his daughter and her fiance who have come to call him.

MAJESTIC.

THE WINNER LOSES (Feb. 11).—Dick Downing is a charming young fellow who has but one failing—gambling. His friend, Bob Burbank, is also a gambler. They both are enamoured of Nell Gatewood, but she favors Dick. When Dick asks her to marry him, she agrees, but first exacts a promise from him to stop gambling. He breaks his promise and loses all his money, including his pawn ticket and the theater tickets which he bought for Nell and himself. These are won by his friend Bob, who tells Nell of her sweetheart's losses, and incidentally asking her to accompany him to the theater on the tickets he won. She promises.

Dick is standing in the lobby of the theater when Bob and Nell enter. He leaves, and on his way home saves a rich "souse" from being fleeced of his money by a couple of thugs. The "souse," who is a broker, takes Dick to a gambling house where he loses his money at an alarming rate, when Dick takes his place, and for the first time in many months wins back all the broker's money and a whole lot more.

After sleeping in Dick's room the next day, the broker asks Dick to go with him to his office. Upon their arrival a clerk in the broker's office informs him that he is losing money in stock in which he has just invested. After getting a tip from a friend, he orders that all the fluctuating stock be bought up. He gives half of Dick's enormous winnings to him (Dick) and offers to place it on the stock. Dick yields.

While Bob is pressing his suit with Nell at home, Dick is making a pile of money on stocks. Later he wires for a taxi, drives for a minister and then races to the home of Nell with the news. He rushes into the parlor, where he finds Bob, and at first believes that Nell has gone back on him. After telling his story, Dick and Nell depart. Nell tells Bob to get the ten kisses from the old maid aunt which she had agreed to give him if Dick had broken his last promise not to gamble, which he did not.

THE HIRED DRESS SUIT (Feb. 16).—Florence admires the way Dick dresses, but looks rather in disdain upon Bob who is inclined to shabbiness. Spurred on by this, Bob buys a bargain suit for $12.50. But on the first day he wears it, a scrubwoman drops a pail of water over him. And then the suit begins to shrink. Florence who is with him notices the suit and calls his attention to it. He takes one look and bolts. Dick sails up and escorts Florence. Bob buys another suit at a store which claims their suits never shrink. This time he gets a frock coat. But when he arrives at Florence's he finds Dick already there clad in immaculate evening dress. This gets Bob's goat. He takes out his bank book and unwillingly draws out his last cent for evening clothes. Florence is delighted with his appearance, but, when he proposes, she is dubious about marrying a man who dresses so extravagantly and says they may consider themselves engaged when he has $200 in the bank. On his way home Bob gets into a quarrel with a man whom he takes for a burglar. He proves to be one of the neighbors. During the battle, Bob's new evening dress is torn to shreds. Walking gloomily, Bob falls into the excavation. He is next seen in a hospital cot. A man, representing the Millonaires' Realty Co., comes to settle Bob's claim much to Bob's surprise for he didn't know he had a bad case. The agent takes out a hundred dollar bill, Bob sits by dumbly, unable to speak. The man takes out another. Bob faints. The agent gets scared and lays four one hundred dollar bills on the table. Bob comes to and grabs them. Florence comes to see him and when her father sees the money he willingly gives his consent to the marriage, and Florence is perfectly satisfied.

GIRL, ARTIST AND DOG (Feb. 18).—Donald Willis, a promising young artist, though but a boy n years, goes with his mother to a beautiful new home in the heart of the country. He is delighted to live so close to nature and every morning starts off to indulge his passion for painting the beauties of the woods and fields.

One day he meets a girl—a raged, barefoot girl—but with a face of rare loveliness. He asks her to pose for him. She shyly runs up to the tumbled-down shanty in which she lives for her mother's permission. Her mother, a coarse, uncouth woman, refuses harshly and sends the boy away.

But he cannot forget the tattered girl with the lovely wistful face and soon visits her again in the woods. They become the best of friends, this boy and girl. He meets her each day by an old stone wall—and one day he whispers his love to her. She tells him she has loved him since the first day he came to her. He wants to marry her at once—before his stately, aristocratic mother can interfere. But as he looks at her ragged dress and bare feet he knows this would be impractical. He buys her a dainty frock in the village—and a bonnet and some slippers. In a twinkling she is transformed and they are married in the little rectory.

But his mother sees through the fine clothes—and knows the girl for what she is. Heartbroken at what she supposes will ruin her boy's life, she treats the girl with coldness and disdain that almost breaks the loving, trusting heart.

Three years pass. There is a baby in the home now. The mother of the boy loves the child—but has not yet learned to even tolerate it's mother. The boy sees this constant friction and grieves over it. Finally the girl, unable to stand it any longer, takes her baby and goes back to her mother's shanty. But she is not wanted here either. She finds her way to the old stone wall—trysting place of long ago—and here she weeps out her misery. The boy finds her a little later and understands. He takes both wife and child home.

"You cannot have the baby unless you are prepared to receive her mother with equal love and kindness," he says. And the grandmother holding out her arms to the child—clasps the girl also in close embrace.

PUNCH.

ROWDY STARTS SOMETHING (Feb. 20).—The domestic peace of the Hallowells, a young couple living in a small town, is disturbed by a poorly cooked breakfast and Dick, the husband, leaves the house angrily after his wife has threatened to return to her mother. She starts packing her trunks and he proceeds to the quarries of which he is the manager. Rowdy, the family bull-dog, follows his master. Reaching the quarry, Hallowell is told by his foreman that the supply of dynamite in his mouth and startles Dick and the forehut where the explosives are kept, by the dog, who seizes a stick of the highly dangerous dynamite in his mouth and startled Dick and the foreman by appearing before them with it. Fearing every moment that the dog will cause it to explode by biting or dropping it, the two men scatter in terror. At his wits' end Dick hurries home followed by the dog, who scatters fear on every side. Rowdy, unable to understand the excitement he is causing, reaches the house only to find it locked and the family barricaded inside. He gains entrance, however, through an open window and rushes into the sitting room with the dynamite still in his mouth. The Hallowells' child calls the dog and but for the sudden entrance of the nurse might have seized the stick. But, upon seeing the the dog and hearing the shouts of the Hallowells, the nurse flees from the house pursued by Rowdy. Dick calls upon the police who hurry to the house. Tired of pursuing the nurse, the dog has returned to his kennel, and when the police and Dick find him, is sitting comfortably before it with the stick before him. They surround the kennel but he routs them and drives them over the back fence, grabbing up the stick and following his master who now flies wildly down the street. Dick attempts to board a street car but Rowdy follows and empties it of all its passengers, even the motorman deserting his post. Into the country Dick flies with the dog behind him, stumbling over a camp of tramps and almost ruffling the happiness of a pair of young lovers. In attempting to cross a stone wall, the dynamite explodes, and all danger now over, Dick hurries to the nearest telephone and informs his agonized wife that he is safe. As he turns from the phone, Rowdy, covered with dust, etc., come in. Like a cat he seems to have nine lives, and as Dick sinks thunderstruck and weak upon a box, the dog covers his face with kisses.

BY PARCELS POST (Feb. 20).—Little Mr. Grey and his still "littler" wife, are surprised to receive a letter from their sister saying she is sending her dear little girl to spend a month with them. They prepare a room with dainty, doll-like furniture, but when little Mary arrives, it is found she will not even fit in the door. She is so tall and so broad that she can take both uncle and aunt up in one arm. And the poor postman who brought this precious package by parcels post, thinks it the worst ever, even worse than chickens, monkeys, dancing bears and other impediments he has been loaded down with.

RAMO.

THE BETTER WAY (Feb. 19).—In this play we find Mary, disgusted and discouraged at the life of unhappiness she is living with Jack Denver, her husband, who has been drinking heavily of late. At this opportune or rather inopportune moment, Tom Horton casually renews Mary's acquaintance. Horton had been Mary's girlish ideal previous to his departure to South America and her marriage to Jack. Mary, in this frame of mind, is ready to listen to Horton's promises of happiness with him, and is willing to take this radical step.

Pauline, her little girl, seeing her mother packing up, and concluding that they are going visiting, packs her little satchel and waits in the parlor until her mother apears preparatory to leaving with Horton. The sight of the child brings Mary to her senses and the elopment is abondoned. Jack learns the truth and makes the earnest manly promise to reform.

NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS (Feb. 26).—Laurie does not realize that she is about twelve years beyond the kittenish stage of her life, but she can't help noticing that she weighs 185 pounds and has a foot more waist than usually is found on the sweet young thing she wants to be. Some of the girls tell her that they keep in trim at the gymnasium, and to the gymnasium Laurie goes to put through a heroic course of sprouts. She doesn't like the gymnasium, but she likes the handsome instructor and she sticks to the exercise until she gets a black eye trying to box. To comfort her the instructor puts her on the scales to show her how much weight she has lost. She has gained another five pounds. This is the final straw. The instructor seeks to comfort her and she accepts it as a proposal of marriage—and accepts him too. He accepts her when he finds that she has money, and so the gymnasium course brings a husband to Laurie, though not in the way she had expected it would.

MOVING MOTHER (Feb. 26).—The ceiling falls in the sitting room of Mamie's flat and the janitor is just as worried about it as janitors generally are. This angers Mamie, who is an independent sort of small person, and she hustles out and rents a new apartment. She arranges with the moving man to come in a couple of days for the things. Mamie's mother is a helpless sort of hypochondriac and her nerves need soothing constantly. The excitement of the day is too much for her and she takes an overdose of chloral. She is still asleep the next morning when the van men come to tell Mamie that they have a better job for the following day and that she must move at once or get another van. She moves, but mother sleeps through it all and is moved along with the sofa on which she sleeps. The men spill her a couple of times, but they do not muss her up much. The fresh air and the shaking up wear off the effects of the drug and she wakens to find herself alone in a strange house. The drug has not entirely worked off and she promptly concluded that she has been abducted. She runs for the police who make a thorough search of the apartment and capture the innocent little Mamie. While the disgusted policemen steal out mother gets more nerve quieter and sinks back to sleep.

THE LEOPARD AND THE BURGLARS (Feb. 21) —Seeing that several desperadoes are causing the police much trouble, a detective purchases a leopard, and gets on the trail. With amazing alacrity the burglars hasten from out the scene, with the leopard hard upon their trail.

WHEN UNCLE MADE HIS WILL (Feb. 21).—Upon learning that their uncle is about to make his will, the Spoofems hasten to pay their respects in the hope that they will not be forgotten. The journey is a long one, and their haste leads them to adopt every possible form of locomotion that it possible to find. They arrive in the most rural of country, and there are reduced to the uttermost limits of despair by the lack of good locomotive power. Their experience in donkey barrows, or in riding steeplechases upon cows' backs provide an amusing film.

CATCHING THE "BIG SNEEZE" (Feb. 13).—Jimmy, his little brother Tim and his mother go strolling. As they pass a lonely place a man steps in front of them and throws pepper into the mother's eyes and nose and snatches her purse. He runs away leaving her to cry and sneeze. The two little boys guide the blinded mother home. After she has had her eyes bathed, they show her an article in the newspaper, which reads: "Purse snatchers have been very audacious. They ply their nefarious trade in broad daylight and at night outside of the brilliantly lighted cafes. They first blind their victims with pepper."

The following night Jimmy and Tiny Tim, angry that their mother has been so horribly treated by the thief, decide that they will "get this Big Sneeze." They dress up in some of their father's old clothes. The garments are many times too large for them. They take with them a large banjo and another instrument. They are disguised as street musicians in order to gain admission to the big cafes, where they hope to catch "Big Sneeze." They enter the "Pink Mouse" cafe. They notice a man taking pepper from the table and putting it in a handkerchief. He resembles the man who had attacked their mother. They edge nearer to him and Jimmy notices a bulge in his back pocket. He believes and hopes it to be stolen jewels. Jimmy puts his hand in the pocket and draws out his mother's stolen jewels. With the other hand he throws pepper into the nose and eyes of the "Big Sneeze," whom it really was. The two boys denounce him as he who had robbed their mother. The "Big Sneeze" is arrested. Meanwhile, at the home of the boys, a servant has entered their room. She finds it vacant. In alarm she informs the mother, who is also agitated. At that moment, however, the two boys enter, Jimmy carrying the recovered jewels. They are happily received.

THE RACE FOR THE MILLIONS (3 Parts—Special Release).—By the terms of the will of Louis Perier, he has left his fortune of $2,000,000 in charge of Joseph Irton, notary, to be given to the daughter of his brother, John Perier. It is stipulated that if Mr. Irton is unable to find the niece within two months from twelve o'clock noon from the day set, that the estate is to revert to his housekeeper.

An unscrupulous woman, this housekeeper determines to get the money. She writes to her brother in Paris, and tells him to find and kidnap the girl before the notary will have arrived. Mme. Riquier's brother finds that Nellie Perier is a milliner.

When the brother's sister arrives in Paris, she assumes a fictitious name—Mme. Gomery. She and her brother abduct Nellie as she is delivering the hat Mme. Gomery ordered. In the meantime, Jean Rogers, Nellie's fiancée, puts in an appearance at the milliner's store to show her a newspaper article concerning herself. He finds her gone and rushes to the hotel where Mme. Gomery lives. There he learns of the abduction. Nellie, meanwhile, is being conveyed to an island, guarded by Riquier's men. Many days pass and Nellie is still a prisoner. She determines to escape. One night with an improvised rope, made of bed-clothes, she descends the dizzy heights. Her escape is discovered, and one of the jailers goes forth to bring her down with his gun. As she attempts to enter a rowboat he shoots. Nellie pretends that she has been shot and drops as if unconscious. The jailer carries the seemingly insensible girl to the top of the cliff. Here Nellie unexpectedly revives and by a dexterous twist she pushes him over the cliff. Nellie is seen struggling for life in the breakers off the coast of St. Elmo.

In Paris, Jean Rogers is aiding in the search. He chances to read a newspaper story about a girl having been found clinging to the bottom of an overturned boat. It tells of her being demented and of her inability to recall her name or anything about herself. The Riquiers also read the news. They had heard of the escape of their captive. They go to the castle of St. Elmo and falsely identify the girl as being one of their kin. The physician in charge gives the Riquiers permission to take the girl away. The Riquiers are about to carry her off to another prison when Rogers sees them riding away. He pursues the automobile and clings to the back of it. As a ruse, he takes a revolver and shoots. Its report is similar to the bursting of a pneumatic tire. The conspirators get out to investigate, leaving Nellie in the back seat. As they go 'round one side Rogers goes 'round the other. He jumps into the automobile and speeds away, leaving the conspirators in the lurch. The Riquars telephone to the police and ask that their automobile be stopped.

Rogers chances to enter an exhibition ground in which there is to be a balloon ascension. He knows that the Riquiers must be close upon him, and that his only means of escape is to go aloft. He persuades the aeronaut to allow him and Nellie, whom the shock of seeing her sweetheart has restored to reason, into accompanying him on his flight. The Riquiers arrive just as the balloon is soaring high. They deterine to have one more try. They pursue the balloon, which is carried by the wind out to sea. Standing on the rocks, Mme. Riquer's brother fires his revolver at the vast gas bag. It penetrates the fragile silk and the balloon slowly sinks into the sea. As the gas escapes the balloonists are thrown into the waves, which happily carry them behind a small promonotory out of sight of the conspirators. The fugities struggle to land and the empty basket drifts away. The conspirators see it and construe it as a sign that its late occupants have gone to the bottom.

On the morning of the appointed day Anna Riquier calls on the notary. There is but five minutes more before twelve o'clock, noon, will have arrived, and she will have inherited the legacy. Meanwhile on the road to the notary's house, the two weary lovers trudge along. As they pass a police station they ask assistance. They arrive just two minutes before the moment of twelve. Nellie goes ahead. At the door on guard, fearful that Nellie should arrive at the last moment and claim the fortune, stands Riquier. He sees Nellie and attempts to throttle her. There are rough hands upon him the next moment, and Jean Roger's fists are pummeling him. It is one second before twelve when Nellie bursts into the notary's room, just as he is about to deliver the money to Anna Riquier. Nellie is identified, the conspirators are arrested and are led away to condign punishment.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE INDIAN SERVANT (Feb. 22).—This is a story of a foreign diplomat who has returned to his home and brings with him an Indian, who had attracted his attention. The Redman is introduced into the house of the diplomat as a servant, and at once proceeds to play havoc with the routine of the household. His blunders are of the innocent sort for the time being, but he creates consternation among the regular white servants and makes friends only with the children of the family, and of these there are several. The good matron of the family, in an emergency, sends the Indian out to buy a bonnet for her own use, and when he returns he has three splendid articles of feminine headgear, which he later admits he had taken from the heads of young women whom he had met in the millinery shops. He returns to the house in triumph, but he is followed closely by the victims of the theft. The Indian tries to make love to the maids and gains the enmity of the mistress of the house by his attentions, which, although well meant, are entirely out of keeping with the customs of the people and community in which he finds himself. The climax arrives when, on one eventful day, the Indian is left to amuse the children during the absence of the family. All goes well for the time being, but the aborigine decides to give the youngsters the times of their lives. He starts by donning paint in all the colors of the rainbow, and each of the kidlets are similarly adorned. They enjoy war dances and have the furnishings of the house almost demolished when the parents arrive upon the scene. At the point of spears and other collections of relics found in the diplomat's rooms, the household help has been routed and it is with diffiulty that the Indian is induced to settle down to routine, although the prospects of his remaining a "good Injun" are far from being certain.

WITH THE SERVIAN ARMY BEFORE ADRIANOPLE—Soldiers Receiving Rations. The men are seen forming into lines, ordering their arms, piling them and then attending at the canteen for rations. The first are sick men; the next might be thought to be sick men; they have been in the trenches more or less continuously for some days. The men are next seen entering trenches, a sortie by the Turks being expected.

Camp Scenes. Draught oxen feeding. Men carrying sacks which contain bread.

The "Bulgarian Trot." Some of the soldiers dancing the Kolo dance, a favorite diversion in that country. They join arms and dance in large circles.

Army Dentists and Surgeons at Work. A dentist is drawing a man's tooth; a rather slow operation. Doctors are examining men, looking at their tongues and feeling their pulses, and administering pills.

Tending the Wounded after a sortie by the Turks. A number of ambulance wagons are being brought onto the field, and the wounded are brought into them on stretchers.

Mending a Pontoon Bridge over the Maritza River. This was destroyed by floods, and the soldiers are shown repairing it.

Colonel Lyonl Kostics, the famous Servian commander, discusses the position with his aide-de-camp. Colonel Kostics has many friends in London, and he is often to be seen in Bond street in the season.

A Turkish Sortie. The Servians are shown preparing for a sortie by the Turks. The Servians are running to take up their positions in the great redoubt at the Tonje River. On the left in the first picture in the section the reserves will be noticed. The men take up their positions and aim their rifles. The Turks are within range, but the range of a modern rifle is greater than that of a camera, and the opposing forces cannot be seen. The reserves now follow their comrades into the trenches.

A ROMANCE OF THE CANADIAN WILDS (2 reels).—John Benton, an artist, living in New York, has overworked himself to such an extent that his pictures have lost the natural quality that has made him famous. He resolves to seek inspiration in a country where the conventionalities of city life have not penetrated and forthwith sets out for the northern part of Canada, to dwell for a time among the French Canadians.

Established there in a modest inn, he devotes his days to close commune with unmolested nature.

One day, while looking for a new subject to reproduce upon his canvas, he chances upon a young Canadian girl filling her water jar from a mountain stream. A pleasant acquaintance follows, and he persuades her to pose for him. The intimacy of artist and model soon ripens into love, but the girl's father misconstrues the situation, and forbids any further friendship between the two, while Pierre, a native admirer of the girl, is thrown into a jealous rage.

Pierre secretly nurses his hatred of the artist until murder takes root in his primitive mind. On one occasion the girl saves the life of the artist and sends Pierre upon his way unavenged. Not daunted by his first failure, Pierre breaks into the artist's room at night with intent to kill, but chance again robs him of his victim, and in escaping from the house Pierre is seriously wounded by one who supposed him to be a thief.

Suffering from his wound, but still persisting in his murderous desire, Pierre nearly accomplishes his deadly designs upon his rival, but again the girl intervenes at the crucial moment and saves her sweetheart's life.

How Pierre eventually repents and by death pays the penalty of his wickedness, how the stern father is persuaded by the village priest to forgive his daughter, and how the young lovers are finally united, is all shown in this Kinemacolor drama.

LOWER LAKE GENEVA, SWITZERLAND.—1. Geneva. A panorama of this magnificent city.

2. On the Lake. Views of yachting on the lake. The color of Lake Geneva is a deep blue, in which it differs from the greenish hue of the other Swiss lakes.

3. Versoix, Ninon and Rolle—small places passed enroute in the order named.

4. The Savoyan Alps. On the north side Lake Geneva is bounded by gently sloping hills, richly clothed with vineyards and orchards, and enlivened with smiling villages. To the east and south a noble background is formed by the long chain of the mountains of Valois and Savoy. A splendid panorama of the Savoyan Alps is obtained from the steamer on which we are traveling.

5. Lausanne-Ouchy. Ouchy, the port of Lausanne, is first seen. Continuing, we see Lausanne, which lies half a mile above Ouchy.

6. Sunset on the Lake. The sun is sinking to the margin of the lake, the view being taken between a cluster of poles used for mooring moats.

FIFTY MILES FROM TOMBSTONE.—The man of the East leaves wife and baby for the gold fields. Later he strikes gold, writes for wife and baby, the mail bag falls off the stage coach, floats down and catches on the rocks, while the husband and wife wait for news of each other.

The wife starts to find her husband, but arrives too late for the weekly stage to the camp. A boy takes her in a wagon across the desert. At a "Waterhole" the woman alights to fill the canteen and some drunken Indians frighten the boy, who drives off. The mother wanders till her strength gives out, leaving the baby under some bushes, she climbs a near-by hill, hoping to see some signs of life. She falls exhausted and is found by some Indians, taken to their camp and nursed back to life. The baby is discovered by some cowboys, taken to camp, and Jim being the only man who knows about babies, adopts it.

The baby must be fed, there is no milk; the Chinaman solves the difficulty by buying up "The Only Female in Camp"—a goat. An itinerant priest visits Jim's shack and sees the baby. He next visits the camp of the Indians, hears the white woman's story and by his efforts the little family are united.

MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL.

BEES (Jan. 23).—This educational release is one of the most comprehensive studies of this interesting little worker ever presented on the screen. It is not only of an educational nature, but decidely interesting.

Toledo (Jan. 30). This interesting subject of Toledo, the famous city in Spain, well known to everyone as the home of the Toledo blade or sword, is one of decided interest. The views are ectptionally well chosen.

Segovia (Feb. 6). These most interesting views, taken in this most beautiful province in Spain, are delightful to the eye.

The Frog (Feb. 13). This scientific study of the frog is one which will be of decided interest to young and old, principally on account of the very fine microscopic studies.

THANHOUSER.

SHERLOCK HOLMES SOLVES "THE SIGN OF THE FOUR" (Feb. 25).—Major Sholto, a retired British army officer, who has amassed wealth in India in a mysterious manner, dies suddenly. His two sons were unable to find any trace of the wealth. Search the house patiently, and at last in an attic, concealed by a secret panel, discovered a brass bound box. It contains jewels of almost fabulous value and a letter, telling them that Mary Morstan, the orphan daughter of one of Sholto's brother officers in India was entitled to an equal share in the treasure. Thaddeus, the younger brother, is willing to carry out his dead father's wishes, but Bartholomew, the elder, insists that they alone should possess the jewels. Finally Thaddeus, unable to persuade his brother to relent, writes Miss Morstan an anonymous letter, telling her that she has been wronged, and naming the place where they can meet.

Miss Morstan, perplexed by the strange communication, consults Sherlock Holmes. Holmes and Dr. Watson, his associate, keep the appointment with Miss Morstan and are led by Thaddeus Sholto to his home. Thaddeus tells Miss Morstan of her inheritance, and that he intends to force his brother Bartholomew to surrender her share of the treasure.

They reach the Sholto mansion, and Thaddeus goes to his brother's room to summon him. But he comes dashing down stairs, terror stricken. Holmes and Watson dash up the stairs, leading to the room. There, huddled in his chair, is Bartholomew and on his breast a torn sheet of paper, with five words scrawled upon it, "The Sign of the Four." The treasure is gone!

A quick examination shows that the man has been killed by a poisoned thorn which is lodged in his head.

In the garret Holmes comes upon fresh evidence of intruders. In the heavy dust are impressions of a boot and of a wooden leg, and the imprint of two little bare feet. The detective hurries to the roof, where, dangling to the ground below, is a heavy rope.

Securing a blood hound he tracks the fugitives down, the chase finally leading him and his co-worker, Dr. Watson, to a little ship-yard, where he learned that a man with a woden leg, accompanied by a little East Indian, had hired a motor boat and sailed up the river. Holmes, in another boat pursues.

The fugitives are captured, but not before they throw the treasure overboard. Then Jonathan Small, the man with the wooden leg, and his faithful folower, little Tonga, whose deadly blow pipe had killed Sholto, are brought to Holmes' rooms and the casket opened. The jewels are not there. The treasure had disappeared forever.

KEYSTONE.

HEINZ'S RESURRECTION (Feb. 17).—Heinz is lazy, and his wife is disgusted with him. His friend, Pat, secretly admires Mrs. Heinz, and one day tells her to make Heinz help her with her work. Heinz refuses to assist her and is doused with a pail of water. Angered, he leaves the house and meets Pat, to whom he tells his troubles. Pat advises him to play off dead, to see if his wife loves him. Accordingly, they go down the street where second hand coffins are for sale, and purchase one and take it home. Pat lays out Heinz in the coffin, and then goes in and tells Mrs. Heinz her husband is dead. She weeps, but her tears quickly dry when Pat sympathetically kisses her. Pat carries the scheme through, and persuades Heinz to submit. Pat nails the coffin down, and orders an immediate funeral. The hearse and carriages come around and the mourners follow the coffin. By this time Heinz is beginning to see that the joke is getting serious, and flashes are shown of his efforts to free himself.

Heinz is placed in the hearse, and the pall bearers walk solemnly at the side. Pat rides with the widow, and manages to alleviate her sorrow. The funeral procession does not move quickly enough to suit Pat, so he gets up on the seat of the hearse and plies the whip to the horses, and they leap forward at a gallop, with the carriages endeavoring to keep up. The pall-bearers grab the traces and fly along. Sharp corners are turned at break-neck speed, and finally the hearse tumbles over a cliff, and the coffin drops out. The horrified mourners rush down, and the infuriated Heinz emerges from the broken coffin. Seizing an axe left by some wood-choppers, he chases the crowd, who rush pell mell for home. Pat has a narrow escape from the wrath of Heinz, but Mrs. Heinz saves his life and soothes her angry husband.

BRONCHO

THE LURE OF THE VIOLIN (3 reels—Feb. 26).—Tony Cuneo, a handsome Italian musician, though possessed of wonderful talent, is in straitened circumstances, and "beats" his way west on a freight train. He meets "Shorty," a devil-may-care young fellow, who is also riding at the expense of the railroad company, and during a quarrel Tony pushes Shorty from the top of the car while traveling through barron western country.

Shorty wanders about badly hurt, and is found by a troop of soldiers who carry him to the fort. He gets over his injuries and enlists in the army, and becomes the orderly of Capt. Swift.

Tony joins an emigrant train, paying for his food and transportation by furnishing music for the emigrants. Early one morning, before the camp is astir, Indians swoop down on the emigrants, and a terric battle ensues, in which the white men are destroyed and many of the women captured. Tony, a coward at heart, is frantic with fear, and while the white men have been fighting he has been groveling under a wagon. As the redskins rush into the camp, Tony begins to fiddle, and the Indians are struck by the strains of the strange music. His life is spared, and when the troops attack the Indians and defeat them in a fierce battle, Tony is taken to the fort.

Capt. Swift is the accepted suitor of Grace, the daughter of the Colonel, and the wedding day is set. The girl is of a temperamental disposition, and she is thrilled by the sweet music of the violin in Tony's hands, and charmed by his attentions. He persuades her to elope with him, and, unbeknown to her, steals the Colonel's money. Hearing the noise in the dead of night, the Colonel arises and is shot by Tony, who drops his pistol and jumps through a window. The pistol has been stolen from Capt. Swift, and is identified, and the young officer is placed under arrest.

Things look dark for the Captain, and Shorty is in despair. To save Swift he determines to sacrifice himself, and leaves a written confession, stating that he fired the shot and stole the money, and disappears. He eludes his pursuers, and with a tattered suit and a heavy growth of beard he is unrecognizable. He makes his way further west, and in a small mining town one day he sees Tony. Grace has deeply repented her action, and has found out the true nature of the man. Shorty calls on him, and compels him at the point of a pistol to write out a confession of his guilt. As Shorty turns to go, Tony leaps upon him, and in the scuffle Tony is fatally wounded.

Shorty goes back to the post with the confession, and Capt. Swift goes in search of Grace. He finds her in a convent, and she tells him, in a touching scene, that she has decided to remain there for the rest of her life—safe from the strife and passion of the world.

PILOT.

THE TWO GLASSES (Feb. 20).—The Two Glasses from a poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox is a symbolical play, showing the influences of wine and water. After a dinner the two glasses get confidential, and tell each other stories of their past. The wine glass proudly tells its humble companion how it has dethroned kings, brought men down from lofty positions, thrown people into prison who have been highly respected, dragged down virtue, and debased humanity in general. The humble water glass cannot boast of such victories, but quietly tells its companion how it has succored the wounded on battle fields, helped the parched wanderers on the desert, rehabilitated the drunkard, and uplifted many who have fallen. Overcome with remorse, acknowledging the superiority of its humble companion, the wine glass totters and falls.

SOLAX.

THE VETERAN'S MASCOT (Feb. 26).—Eileen O'Hara decides to go to New York and try for a stage position, and leaves her old parents. She secures an opportunity, changes her name to Eileen Everdale, and makes an enormous success which causes her to forget her old people.

The parents go to New York in search of her when no word comes, and there they fall into dire poverty, being finally threatened by eviction by a landlord. In this extremity Susan VanDusen, a little girl of six who has made their acquaintance, comes to the rescue. She has watched with interest the financial operations of Timothy Brown a civil war veteran with one leg who begs at a corner near her home, and seizes on that plan of raising money as a good one. She digs up an old tin can, and from the same dust heap obtains a discarded placard, on the reverse side of which she prints the legend that she too is a veteran of the war, and moreover is blind. She then takes her stand on the corner. Her announcement is productive of good-humored commend and some change. A policeman interviews her, and finally Eileen Everdale, the successful actress, comes by in her motor car, and she too, stops.

The story of the old people is told, and Eileen takes the "veteran" Susan off on a shopping tour, then accompanying her to the tenement where the old people are living. Recognition is of course immediate, and the veteran comes in for highly acceptable gratitude.

THE BASHFUL BOY (Feb. 28).—The story starts with the bashful boy in his schooldays getting cold feet in one of the kissing games. The girl whom he is expected to kiss likes him better than she does the other boys, but he is too bashful and stupid to see it. She mischievously plays upon his jealousy but he only suffers green-eyed agony in silence.

Later in high school, the bashful boy is deeply smitten, but as in his younger days, fails to make the most of his opportunities. A rival eventually appears and the girl, disgusted with the youth who isn't bold enough to win her, forgets about him, and encourages the attentions of another. This sours the bashful boy and makes him a woman-hater.

Twenty years later finds "un-faint heart" settled down to a life of single blessedness, and his idea of perfect bliss is a place where no women are around to disturb one's peace and comfort. At this period, by a very novel twist, ingeniously worked out, the former sweetheart, who is now a widow, meets the bachelor. This part of the plot is abundant with pathos and humor, compelling in every detail, and made attractive by the wonderful acting of the widow's child, who is responsible for the reunion of the oldtime sweethearts.

IT WILL DO THE SAME FOR YOU

Auburn, N. Y., Jan. 30, 1913.

The J. H. Genter Co.,
Newburgh, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—

We wish to inform you that the curtain shipped to Mr. John Ross, Cornell Theatre, Auburn, N. Y., HAS REALLY SAVED THE HOUSE. They had a home-made curtain, on which it was impossible to project a bright, clear picture. The trouble was laid to the films, although it really was the curtain. This house has a ground floor seating capacity of 1,200 and contains four aisles. The side aisles are 20 feet wide, and on several occasions they have had an audience of 2,600. This is one of the largest ground floor theatres in the state.

Since installing your Mirroroide Curtain this house is playing to capacity every night, WHERE FORMERLY IT BARELY AND SOMETIMES DID NOT MAKE EXPENSES. Thanking you, we beg to remain,

THE AUBURN FILM CO.,
F. W. Spreter, Mgr.

Mr. Spreter sent us a testimonial over two years ago, claiming MIRROROIDE was the peer of all. Thousands of exhibitors say the same.

MIRROROIDE is sold under a positive five-year guarantee against turning black, cracking or peeling. Ask any other screen manufacturer to give you a like guarantee.

First Cost—Only Cost.

You never need to have MIRROROIDE recoated. Our large samples free. Let us show MIRROROIDE patents pending.

This May Happen to You Tonight We Insure You. Why Take Chances?

FLAMES RAGE

The theater was crowded, when a film caught fire suddenly. It is supposed that the operator stopped the film or ran it too slowly and the heat set fire to it. Suddenly there was a flash, the pictures stopped and a small blaze appeared in the operator's box, above the front entrance.

OPERATOR IS BURNED

Meanwhile Frank Starks, the operator, was waging a losing fight in an effort to extinguish the blaze. He used hand fire extinguishers, but just when the fire seemed almost conquered, other films caught and soon the whole box was roaring. The operator fled after he had been burned severely about the hands. No one else was injured.

The blaze was extinguished finally by the fire department. The loss will exceed $1,000. Four films, ranging in value from $100 to $200, and two machines, valued at $175 each, were destroyed.

THE PROPER INSTRUMENT

The Great Bohemian Violinist, Ian Kubelik, frequently earned THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS PER HOUR while on his last trip through this country; yet,

Over here in Indiana the other day a FINE, BIG, HUSKY YOUTH played a "HORSE FIDDLE" the whole forenoon at a FOX CHASE BUT HE DID NOT EARN so much as A PLEASANT LOOK.

Of course, KUBELIK paid a great deal more for his VIOLIN than the YOUTH paid for the "HORSE FIDDLE," but KUBELIK KNEW THE ART of HIS GAME and he PLAYED ON the PROPER INSTRUMENT TO EXPRESS IT. Incidentally, he "took down" the "good money."

Certainly, as an Intelligent Exhibitor, you know the ART of the PHOTOPLAY GAME; but,

Are you PLAYING on THE PROPER INSTRUMENT to EXPRESS IT?

The Mirror Screen

THE HOUSE OF

SELIG

TRADE S MARK

The Name of Selig is to Motion Pictures what the Mark of Sterling is to Silver

BOOK THESE WINNERS

Feb. 24th — THE COLLEGE CHAPERONE
An uproarious college comedy written by Maibelle Heiks Justice. A story of two college boys and their girls, who were invited to attend the annual Promenade. The absence of the regular chaperone causes a necessary impersonation. Very funny farce.

Feb. 25th — THE FLAMING FORGE
The story of the cobbler's son and the smithy's daughter made famous by Longfellow. A quaint, picturesque tale of early New England days. Beautiful settings and excellent action.

Feb. 26th — YANKEE DOODLE DIXIE
A delightful comedy which depicts the troubles that arose over an attempt to secure harmony between two old soldier musicians. One is a Federal—the other a Confederate. The result is obvious. Clever theme and laughable situations.

Feb. 27th — THE BANK'S MESSENGER
A virile drama of the west and the dangers that used to confront the bank riders. Exciting plot and thrilling situations mark this picture as unusual. William Duncan, Myrtle Stedman and Lester Cunio are seen in leading roles.

Feb. 28th — THE UNDERSTUDY
An unusually interesting and fascinating story of the stage, depicting the struggles of an ambitious actress who finally "gets her chance." Exceedingly atmospheric, and cleverly acted.

On the Way. Soon to be Released. Watch for it. "ALONE IN THE JUNGLE" The Never-to-be Equalled Wild Animal Sensation.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1-100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theaters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior quality of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

Sunday, February 23

The Ghost in Uniform

With the erection of a new police headquarters, the city force abandoned the old. One night two tramps, seeking quarters, entered the old building and would have closed their eyes in sweet slumber, had they not seen a headless spectre in police uniform. They rushed out. Returning with police aid, they found the ghostly inhabitant to be—well, SEE THE PICTURE.

Tuesday, February 25

Sherlock Holmes Solves the Sign of the 4

In two reels, a mystery masterpiece. "Perfect Publicity," of course—two one-sheets, a three sheet, Standard cuts, Novelty slides, Kraus photos, Hennegan heralds—if you don't know the price, write us. The story is the famous one about the jewels of fabulous value found in the home of Major Sholto after his mysterious death. A pretty girl is told in an anonymous letter that she is entitled to a share in the treasure; the letter naturally perplexes her; she goes to Sherlock Holmes about it— and that's as much as we can tell you here.

Friday, February 28

When Dreams Come True

That true-to-life Thanhouser touch is heavy in this. The idea of the story is perfectly natural. A man and his wife on a California orange grove have the natural dreams of the ONLY happy life that is lived in a big city. The loneliness of the groves was naturally the inspiration. They get the chance to come to the city. And they live its life, as they had long prayed to. In a natural way, you see it bore them. Then you see them back on the orange grove.

Coming! Sunday, March 2: A California Comedy: "The Way To A Man's Heart"

A STATE RIGHT FEATURE FILM

Does it interest you that among other states, New York, parts of the South, and Ohio are now open on this and other Gaumont Feature Films? How long they will remain unsold is a matter of dollars and cents to you.

"Soft and Sinister were the kisses of the waters on the cold stones. Clear rang out the voice of the distraught singer, her accents echoing back from the rocks in dissonance dolorosa. Under the waves slept her husband and there only could be the union eternal. And thus, over the sullen tide, she strew the flowers of her triumph, strewed them upon the grave of her husband lover—upon her grave to be."

Haven't space here to tell you all about this film and others. Write! Inquire! Don't experience the self-disgust of feature film men who have let others walk away with the profits resultant upon handling Gaumont Films.

WOW!!
WOW!!
WOW!!
WOW!!
WOW!!
WOW!!

When you see the animated cartoon entitled "The Newlyweds," just finished by the American Eclair people, you will be astounded. Then you will yell with laughter and you will wonder how on earth this picture was ever made. So will the people who pack your house to the doors. Watch for the release date.

Greatest Novelty Ever Shown On the Screen!

This animated cartoon is only half a reel in length. You'd be glad to have it six times as long. But it takes two weeks to make half a reel. The other half of the reel will consist of some of the American Eclair's marvelous scientific pictures or hand colored pictures. Begin to demand them right now!

Now "Demand That Universal Program"

REX

"THE STOOL PIGEON" (Drama).

Thursday, March 6th.

The former convict reforms to insure his sister's happiness. She jeopardizes her love in proving an alibi for him when he is falsely accused of murder. An exciting emotional that will cause the right kind of comment.

"TROUBLED WATERS" (Drama).

Sunday, March 9th.

An unusual plot in an unusual picture. Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber execute some surprisingly clever work. A real human interest story.

101 BISON

"HIS BROTHER" (Two-Reel War Drama).

Tuesday, March 4th.

What's the use? Words can't describe it. If you're a real human you will shout yourself hoarse over this. Manhood sublime, sacrifice unstintingly, love supreme, heroism paramount. It's all there. Don't make yourself miserable for a month by missing it.

"AT MAD MOLE CANYON"
(Two-Reel Drama).

Saturday, March 8th.

A splendid Western picture tingling with life and action. Loaded with prairie atmosphere and vivid scenes.

ECLAIR

"THE CRIMSON CROSS"
(Religious Drama).

Wednesday, March 5th.

Sublime in detail and reverence, it will pack your theater to the roof. Absolutely the greatest and most wonderful religious masterpiece ever made in America. It is the "Passion Play of The Independents."

"THE TESTER TESTED" AND "THE COCOA INDUSTRY" (Split).

Sunday, March 9th.

Urged on by his jealous married friend to entice the latter's wife, a bachelor finally confesses the plot to the woman. Her method of cure is the acme of originality and guaranteed humor. With it a memorable educational.

IMP

"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP" (Drama).
Monday March 3rd.

A beautiful story by distinguished masters of silent drama—It demonstrates the wonderful power of prayer and the life long influence of mother love.

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" (Two-Reel Drama).
Thursday, March 6th.

The most awe inspiring translation of Stevenson's famous story ever made. King Baggot in the title role acts with an intensity of sensationalism that will live long in the memories of your patrons.

"BINKS THE BLACK HAND" AND "IN OLD PANAMA" (Split Comedy).
Saturday, March 8th.

Binks has done some awfully funny things. He excels himself in this one in a side splitting series of experiences as an imitation bad man. With it a splendid educational of great historic value.

NESTOR

"WHEN HE JUMPED AT CONCLUSIONS" AND "THE GIRL SLEUTHS (Split Comedy).
Monday, March 3rd.

His jealousy causes domestic troubles. The mixup will leave a trail of aching sides. A rib tickler by girl detectives completes a thousand feet of howling mirth.

"BIG BOB" (Comedy).
Wednesday, March 5th.

Bob, big, gruff and good natured, supplies 2,000 giggles in his efforts to whip the father of the girl who elopes with his rival. A winner for originality and fun.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE IS CHARITY" (Drama).
Friday, March 7th.

A young minister marries an outlaw's daughter to quiet a scandal-loving congregation. His love and sacrifice furnish a marvelously gripping theme that will bring deafening applause.

CRYSTAL

"KNIGHTS AND LADIES" "MA AND THE BOYS" (Split Comedy).
Sunday, March 9th.

Laugh! Say, you're going to groan when you get your eyes on these. They'll cure the worst case of blues imaginable. Pearl White's the star.

GEM

"CONSCIENCE" (Drama).
Tuesday, March 4th.

A conscience is both a blessing and a curse. In this instance it works two ways. A wonderfully strong story of human nature ungarbed. The moral will outdistance any police force for results.

VICTOR

"THE PRIMA DONNA" (Drama).
Friday, March 7th.

The kind that will keep them pounding until the orchestra is swamped. They'll hate to draw a breath, so strong will it grip them.

CHAMPION

"THE BUM'S HALLOWEEN" (Comedy).
Monday, March 3rd.

Those who saw this at a private exhibition are still laughing. Honest, it's a scream. Get in line on this one and contract the giggle habit.

THE ANIMATED WEEKLY

A newspaper on film. Its reporters never miss an item. They're always on the job. Don't miss a great feature of the Universal Program.

POWERS

EPH'S DREAM" AND "INDIANS" (Split Comedy).

Wednesday, March 5th.

Eph loses on the "bones." Sleep silences his grief. His dreams lead him through a maze of shriekingly humorous situations. Indian life and pastimes on the same reel.

"IN A ROMAN GARDEN" (Drama).
Friday, March 7th.

The Roman soldier seeks a Catholic girl who wields over his determination and wilfulness a strange power. His conversion to the cross results from genuine experiences of unbounded interest.

FRONTIER

"A RACE FOR LIFE" (Drama).
Thursday, March 6th.

A girl's bravery and her sweetheart's ingenuity combine to make a truly sensational and breath stopping picture. Brimming with action and thrills.

MECCA

"THE BLIND SHALL SEE" (Drama).
Saturday, March 8th.

A picture that will put in the closing touch to a splendid program. With it, your stock will jump twenty per cent. among your patrons.

Photography That's Perfect

A wonderful company of artists present the pitiful penalty paid by a family through three generations, from the first giving of liquor to a child down through a graphic depiction of the devastating desolation of the Demon of Drink. A temperance tale, telling the tragic trail of torment which terrified children and grandchildren following the fatal foolishness of a fond father. Heartrending in its pitiful pathos. Here is a

Underwriters' Type "B"

Are your profits being eaten up week after week by the cost of repairing your moving picture machine? If so you might as well make up your mind right now to do one of two things—either go out of business or get the machine that is built to last—the Edison Kinetoscope.

The Edison Kinetoscope stands up to the work day in and day out, month after month. It soon saves its cost over a cheap machine by the saving in repair bills alone. And it operates easily, simply and economically—projects pictures that are clear and rock-steady. If you want to go the easiest, quickest road to prosperity, go with the Edison Kinetoscope. Send today for Catalog 500 and a copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

Facts and Comments

A NEW YORK Alderman has introduced an ordinance providing that no moving picture theater be allowed to open within two hundred feet of a school or a church. This ordinance would put the motion picture theater in the same class with saloons, which are restricted in that manner. We do not believe that this ordinance will ever be reported out of the committee to which it has been referred. The motion picture has been found to be the best antidote against the saloon, and it is wrong to class it with places where liquor is sold. The nearer to either church or school the motion picture is, the better. The New York Alderman is out of joint with the times.

A PROMINENT exhibitor identified in an active way with the New Jersey State organization has called attention to the necessity of preventing rather than repealing legislation hostile to the motion picture interests. We quite agree with him, and have repeatedly urged the necessity of keeping a careful watch on all proposed legislation which tends to affect the welfare of exhibitors. Our friend suggests that it will be a wise thing to raise funds for dealing with hostile legislation. He tells us that he has assessed himself a certain sum of money in proportion to the number of theaters he owns. If all exhibitors in the State of New Jersey, or for the matter of that in any of the States, were to follow his example there would never be any lack of the sinews of war. Even legitimate agitation costs money.

ONE way of judging the taste and the demands of the public is to keep an eye on the statistics given out by the librarians. According to these statistics it appears that in the city of New York the demand for fiction is but forty-three per cent. The other fifty-seven per cent. are distributed among history, biography, social science and literature. A searching examination of these statistics fails to reveal the slightest trace of any demand for dime novels in general and Wild West horrors in particular. In spite of this the old procession of husky sheriffs, wicked half-breeds, virtuous cowboys, converted and unconverted outlaws, impossible Indians and crooked gamblers, fresh from their dens, drags its weary length across the screen. Is there really no remedy, and must we endure this by decree of fate like the weather or sickness?

INSTEAD of seeking to impose the Sabbath of pre-Christian times upon the people of the twentieth century, the ministers in a small city in Maine have united in arranging an excellent Sunday program of motion pictures and lectures. The programs are run off in the opera house of the city. So far there have been four of these Sunday exhibitions. Each one of them has been tremendously successful. One of the leaders and organizers of the movement, the Reverend Sydney S. Booth, writes to The Moving Picture World that the committee in charge of these progressive Sunday entertainments "have received such hearty co-operation from the various musical bodies that it did not have to spend a penny on music. Last Sunday the leading orchestra of the city gave their services and played for a solid hour to everyone's delight. Next Sunday there is to be a chorus of over sixty voices rendering selections." As Mr. Booth puts it: "The experiment is being watched all over the country." Only ignorance or prejudice will bar the door to the proper motion picture on Sunday. Wherever exhibitors have approached this question in the right way and have made a conservative and judicious appeal to the intelligence of the community, backed up by the showing of the right sort of pictures, victory has been with them.

IN Montclair, N. J., the Chief of Police has stopped an exhibition of the Passion Play on the ground that such a performance could not be tolerated in the Lenten season. We congratulate the chief on his rare powers of discrimination. The Passion Play in the Lenten season, indeed. We cannot imagine anything more incongruous. "Deadwood Dick" or "Broncho Billy" are the proper films for Lent. This police censorship of motion pictures is becoming the wonder of the age. With Baker of Detroit holding the stop watch on kisses and Montclair protesting against the Passion Play in Lent, we may in time develop a new species of imbecility.

WHEREVER exhibitors battle for a liberal Sunday their experiences are worth recording, because they fight in a cause which must interest exhibitors everywhere. In Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, the exhibitors took the aggressive. Without plunging into any controversy they started in to get petitions signed in favor of an ordinance allowing motion picture exhibitions on Sunday under certain restrictions. It appears that in less than three days the exhibitors had obtained the signatures of more than two-thirds of the voters in favor of their petition. One of the editors in the city, when approached by the exhibitors and requested to sign the petition, refused on the ground "that the picture shows did not give him any of their advertising." If this editor cannot be commended for his public spirit and broadmindedness he is surely entitled to a reward of merit for his candor and plain speaking.

WE cannot know or even guess what bugle blast has done it, but there is no doubt that the New York dailies have been aroused to the importance of the motion picture as a rich field for news of general interest. Manufacturers are receiving invitations from newspapers and news syndicates to send in their best in the way of reading matter and pictures. This is a step in the right direction, for the motion picture cannot get enough of this friendly sort of publicity. Here is a golden opportunity for the able press agent. Let us hope that he will improve it to the uttermost.

---

The Municipal Council of Lausanne in French Switzerland has passed a resolution declaring the motion pictures to be one of the causes of the high cost of living. "Ciné Journal" ridicules these claims and point out that the motion picture reduces rather than increases the cost of living, because it affords the pleasure and recreation necessary to the working classes at but a fraction of the price which must be paid for admission to the theaters.

Lines of Cleavage

By W. Stephen Bush

TO what extent has the exhibitor helped the motion picture of a distinctly educational character? The question might be answered with another question, surely not less pertinent: To what extent has the motion picture of a distinctly educational character helped the exhibitor? Knowing from practical experience just what the daily difficulties of the average exhibitor are, I am inclined to say that the exhibitor has helped the cause of the educational picture to the fullest extent of his ability. In many cases he has undertaken that most thankless of all tasks: the educating of his public to an appreciation of an educational picture. There are exhibitors who eagerly welcome every picture of a distinctly educational nature, but let us be frank about it and admit that such exhibitors are in a decided minority. Such exhibitors in the very nature of things always will be in the minority. It is the average audience which furnishes both exhibitor and producer with their bread and butter with an occasional hot meal and dividends for the latter as shown by recent statistics published by the urgent request of the Attorney General of the United States. The average audience is not averse to seeing an educational picture and may be trained to care for more. The average audience, however, dearly loves a play. They come to gaze, to be delighted, to be moved, to be stirred either to laughter or to tears, or perhaps to both.

The educational picture, however, has been the staunch friend of the exhibitor too. It has redeemed many a weak or ill-balanced program and kept many a patron who took hope for better things from the educational picture he saw on the screen. The educational picture helped the exhibitor to secure the moral support of the best classes of the community and saved him from many an official frown, caused by melodramatic horrors and an unreal "Wild West." Above all things the educational picture helped the exhibitor in his fight for a more liberal Sunday. The Sunday program with the educational film in the ascendant is a sure winner every time.

I am glad to say that some of our great producers at least realize two things: First that there is a growing demand for more educational pictures and second that this demand is coming from men and women who see the psychic force of the motion picture as a teacher. These men and women are not exhibitors and want nothing but educational pictures. The day has come when the educational picture is beginning to carve out a kingdom of its own. Every day the lines of cleavage in the future development of motion pictures are becoming plainer. There will be the picture designed chiefly for amusement, and there will be another picture designed chiefly for education, using the word education in the narrower sense of the term, for in the wider sense of the word, as we have pointed out repeatedly, every film almost has an educational value.

Recently THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD sent a circular letter to very nearly every producer of motion pictures asking for a list of educational releases. The answers that came were the best possible commentary on the actual conditions of educational kinematography as it stands at the present day. Almost every producer favored us with a reply, and from some, notably from Gaumont and Pathe, we received splendid catalogues of their educational releases. The need of the hour is the bringing about of direct communication between the school and the producer or his agent.

There is an educational exchange presided over by an able and energetic woman and she is doing much to open the channels for more direct communication. The work, however, is beyond the power of one individual. More than that, the work needs, as we have often pointed out, systematizing. By this I mean that the systematizing must begin in the office of the producer. Everywhere pedagogues of great renown dwell on the teaching facility of the motion pictures and cheerfully lecture thereon upon the slightest provocation. These pedagogues need to face the practical side of things and get into personal communication with the producers. Theorizing is one of the most delightful and all too popular of intellectual sports, but it is only the applied theory that counts. I have heard learned professors discourse with no mean eloquence on the advantages of introducing the picture into the schools, but when it came to taking practical steps, though it may have been only the task of writing, addressing and stamping an envelope, inertia, the hated enemy of mankind, got in its deadly work and the theory remained a theory, making a pleasant humming sound in and about the gray matter of the professor's or pedagogue's head. I am not prepared to say that the pedagogues are under obligation of taking the initiative, perhaps they need to be spurred on to wakeful action by the producers who are better used to the activities of the strenuous life. We feel, that such catalogues as we have seen ought to be spread broadcast. It seems to us that right here in New York there are educators who might be asked to share the expense of bringing these catalogues into every educational institute in the country from the smallest business college to the oldest classic universities in the land. Once the schools begin to take up the practical application of kinematographic aids to education the demand for the educational picture will be upon us with cyclonic insistence and we may not be able to supply the demand.

The Folly of the Cigarette Scheme

MIGHTY little sympathy will be bestowed on the two exhibitors who were fined in the Special Sessions. Technically their offence was admitting minors in violation of law, but their real guilt consisted in helping the American Tobacco Company to sell its cigarettes by accepting cigarette coupons from these minors. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD had warned all exhibitors against going into this sort of bargain with the cigarette sellers. We pointed out that the proposition was unsound in morals and unsound in business. All over the country exhibitors came forward upholding and praising our action as a step in the right direction. It is highly gratifying to us to read in the report from the Court of Special Sessions that the investigating agent of a civic society had only found two or three exhibitors foolish enough to listen to the lure of the American Tobacco Company.

A suggestion was made by the Court to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children that the action of the American Tobacco Company ought to be made the subject of an investigation by the prosecuting authorities of the county. One of the justices aptly characterized the plan of the American Tobacco Company as a scheme "tending to corrupt children." He accused the company of tempting the exhibitors to "violate the law." We do not know whether the statement of the investigator, that "the practise of accepting these coupons for admissions is increasing in the city," but we are inclined to doubt it. In any event do we hope that the example of the two offending exhibitors will be regarded as a warning by any exhibitor who may hereafter be approached by the hirelings of the cigarette people.

Kalem Picture Great Success.

Exhibitors Showing "From Manger to the Cross" Report Record Results.

STATE rights men who have been fortunate and foresighted enough to secure territory for the great Kalem picture, "From the Manger to the Cross," will be interested to know that this subject promises to yield large returns upon the investment. At the present time of writing, few returns have been made, and only one report has given figures. But this is sufficient to satisfy the trade that this particular picture has all the elements of a big attraction.

The first public exhibition was given at Jacksonville, Fla., by the Montgomery Amusement Company. This company has secured the picture for Georgia and Florida and opened in its Jacksonville house. On February 10th, Mr. Montgomery wired this message to New York: "We are turning hundreds away at every performance of 'Manger to Cross' picture. If we had enough seats we could have shown to 10,000 people to-day. Everyone loud in praise of the picture. Will pack them in tomorrow. Wish you could see the crowd."

This picture was shown for three days in Jacksonville in a theater seating about 400, at twenty-five cents admission price, and the receipts for the three days approximated $2,000. Hundreds of people were unable to gain admission to the theater at any time and probably $2,000 more were lost to the Montgomery Amusement Company through its inability to accommodate everybody. An effort had been made to secure a larger auditorium for this picture, but all available places of amusement in Jacksonville were booked far in advance. It is confidently expected that a return date for this picture will produce equally large returns. The Montgomery Amusement Company is enthusiastic and will have equally glowing reports to make from its other cities.

Vice-Consul Heck Sees the Picture.

When the Kalem Company went to Jerusalem to enact the scenes shown in "From the Manger to the Cross" they carried a letter to the U. S. Consular Representative at that point, Mr. Louis Heck, then vice-consul. With his assistance the company was able to expedite its business and many of the rough places were smoothed over by his official hand. Recently Mr. Heck stopped over in New York on his way to Washington, and an opportunity was given him to see the picture in which he had assisted. An exhibition was held especially for his benefit at the Motion Picture Patents Company's offices. Mr. Heck was deeply interested in the various scenes and commented from time to time upon the excellence of views as he recognized localities familiar to him through his long residence in Jerusalem. He paid a very high compliment to the Kalem Company and its then director, Mr. Sidney Olcott.

To Mr. Heck the work of the picture players was quite a revelation, for while he saw some of the scenes taken he had no idea of the magnitude of the finished work and was deeply impressed. He spoke of some of the difficulties with which the company met and of the diplomatic manner in which they overcame them. Their manner of entering Jerusalem by the way of Joffa and going quietly about their work he considered to be the cleverest bit of business stratagem that had come to his notice in some time. "Had they gone by way of Constantinople and laid the proposition before the Turkish government, it is doubtful if they would have completed the picture by this time. As it was they managed to secure the scenes and get away before anything like serious interference could be organized," said Mr. Heck.

As a whole Mr. Heck considered the effort one of great magnitude and was high in his praise of the results. We publish herewith a picture of the assembled official household of the Governor of Jerusalem with Vice-Consul Heck and the Kalem players.

KATHLYN WILLIAMS, RIVAL OF VENUS.

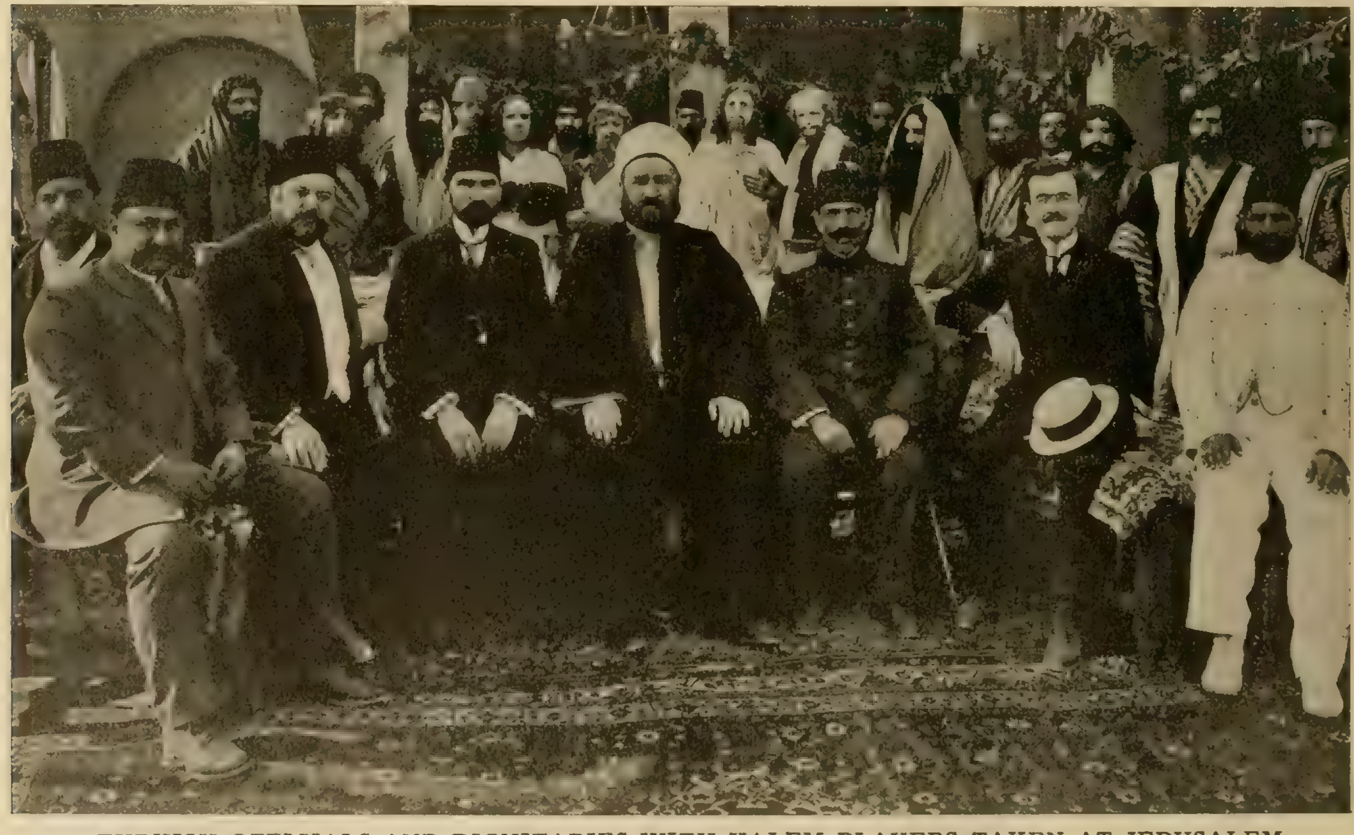
It has become popular for well formed young ladies to enter into the lists as rivals of the famous Venus de Milo. Kathlyn Williams, leading woman of the Selig Western company, comes to the front with a substantial claim for consideration. Miss Williams' physical dimensions are given as follows: weight, 145 pounds; height, 5 feet 7 inches; chest measurement, 38 inches; waist, 24 inches; hips, 41 inches.



TURKISH OFFICIALS AND DIGNITARIES WITH KALEM PLAYERS TAKEN AT JERUSALEM.

From left to right in front—Issa Effendi El Kandousi, Chief Clerk of the Correspondence Department of the Government of Jerusalem; Yussef Zia Effendi, Correspondence Secretary of the Government of Jerusalem; Bechara Effendi Habib, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, of the Government of Jerusalem; Abdun Nafe'h Effendi, Director of the Police of Jerusalem; His Eminence, Nouri Effendi, Religious Judge of Jerusalem; His Excellency, General Abdul Hamid Pasha, Military Commander and Governor per interim of Palestine; Vice and Deputy Consul Lewis Heck; Bechara Effendi Halish; Kalem players standing in rear.

"The Story of Lavinia" (Selig).

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

MISS MARJORIE BENTON COOKE, a talented Chicago woman, widely known throughout the country as a novelist, playlet writer and essayist, is the author of an excellent scenario which has been produced by one of Selig's Western companies under the title, "The Story of Lavinia."

Miss Cooke finished her post graduate course in the University of Chicago some four or five years ago, and during the course she wrote all the plays and playets for the annual entertainments of the Cap and Gown Club. Among her best known dramatic efforts are "When Knights Were Bold," "A Springtime Fantasy," "The Roll Call of Honor," "Tit For Tat," "The Christmas Banquet," "The Case of Sophronia," "The Fairy Ring," etc. Her chief work is a novel entitled "Dr. David." She has also written a book of modern monologues and another on dramatic episodes. Her contributions, written in New York for the Chicago Evening Post, under the heading, "The Cliff Dwellers," were eagerly read at the time and increased her reputation in literary circles.

Scenes from "The Story of Lavinia" (Selig).

As far as I know, "The Story of Lavinia" is Miss Cooke's first entrance in the moving picture field, and the strength and wholesomeness of the story excite the sincere hope that she will devote more of her time to the creation of dramas for photoplays. Without wishing to deprive Colin Campbell of any of the praise that he well merits for this fine production, one must congratulate Miss Cooke on her art in writing a story that is told so convincingly and connectedly by pictures. She has also skilfully introduced a vein of comedy that is most consistent with the atmosphere of the playlet, and, at times, during the presentation, one finds himself smiling through a mist of tears.

The cast has been very happily made throughout. Miss Bessie Eyton, in the title role, impersonates the little country maiden to the life. She is homesick Lavinia in the midst of an aristocratic bevy of college girls, who refuse to recognize her as an equal; and she is brave little Lavinia when she writes home to the dear old mother telling her how happy she is and how kind the girls are to her; and she is still braver when she risks her life to save one of the girls who has been most persistent in scorning her. By the way this fire scene and the rescue form a thrilling climax.

Wheeler Oakman furnishes the comedy in the part of Willie Johnson, the awkward village boob, who loves Lavinia. He excites both sympathy and laughter. Willie's father, old Lem, is another comical character, and the little that the part affords is well done by Frank Clark. Mrs. Brown, Lavinia's mother, is well sustained by Miss Lillian Hayward.

Lavinia Brown is the brightest pupil of the High School in a country town. She is as lovable as she is bright in the eyes of all who know her in the home town, and she is the pearl of her widowed mother's heart. On her graduation, she is presented with a scholarship in Freshwater College by the school trustees, for high standing in her studies.

Tender-hearted Lavinia is subjected to much humiliation by the aristocratic girls at Freshwater, because of her rural manners and plain attire. She is heartlessly snubbed and overlooked by her more wealthy college mates, but keeps up a bold front and makes her mother believe that she is happy.

One night the Freshwater girls hold a sheet-and-pillow-slip party in the room of Betty, the leader of the fashionable set. Lavinia, who has not been invited, thinks, in the simplicity of her heart, that the slight has been unintentional. She joins the girls, who are engaged in cooking something toothsome in a chafing dish. They receive her with ironical politeness.

While engaged in a pillow fight, one of the girls overturns the alcohol lamp beneath the chafing dish, and the room is in flames immediately. The girls rush out and down the stairs, pell mell, Lavinia among them. On getting outside the building, they discover one of their number at the window of the burning room. All are in despair save Lavinia, who climbs up the water standpipe and enters the window through a cloud of smoke. Soon she re-appears and lowers her companion to safety by means of knotted sheets and blankets.

When Lavinia attempts to descend by means of the standpipe, it falls outward, leaving her clinging to the window sill. Soon she loses her hold and falls backward to the ground. She is carried unconscious to her room by her tearful companions, who now mourn their former attitude with deep remorse. Lavinia's mother is at once brought to the scene by the girls and is accompanied by Lavinia's village lover, Willie Johnson. Needless to say that Lavinia, on her recovery, is the respected and much-loved queen of the Freshwater belles.

This film will be released March 5.

Col. Roosevelt Speaks for Kearton

Statesman and Big Game Hunter Introduces Animal Photographer to Enthusiastic Audience at Playhouse.

A SELECT audience gathered in the Playhouse, in Forty-eighth Street, New York, on the afternoon of Monday, February 17, witnessed the unusual sight of an ex-President of the United States introducing a photographer of wild animals and birds—Cherry Kearton. Colonel Roosevelt arrived at the cosey little theater after the audience were in their seats. In spite of the fact that the temperature was at the freezing point, the former President showed his "vulgarly healthy condition," as he described it at Montauk Point in 1898 on his return from the Spanish-American War, by appearing sans overcoat. Mr. Roosevelt lost no time in going to the center of the stage. His entrance was the signal for a burst of hearty applause, prolonged. He checked it by a vigorous wave of the black fedora hat crumpled in his right hand, at the same time bestowing on the audience his characteristic and famous smile.

"A number of years ago," said Colonel Roosevelt when he secured quiet, "my attention was attracted to some very remarkable work that was being done in taking moving pictures of live birds and animals by the Kearton brothers. I was so much impressed by it that I got Mr. Kearton's brother to come over and give an exhibition in the White House. At that time I spoke to him and asked if it were possible to get moving pictures of big game. I had seen pictures taken in Colorado, some of them by myself more or less successfully, and had come to think that the time had arrived when killing by the rifle was of entirely secondary importance to preserving a record of how the animals looked and how they acted in a state of nature, which record could only be obtained by moving photographs.

"A little experience also showed me this—that the temptation was great, and that the sharpest discrimination had to be employed to tell the genuine photographs of nature from the fake. Anything you see in Captain Kearton's pictures you can guarantee is straight. If you see the spearing of a lion you will know he was there and saw the lion speared. I met him in Africa myself."

Colonel Roosevelt here related an incident that came under his observation in Africa when Mr. Kearton was trying to photograph a rhinoceros that was being "rumbled" for his benefit. "I can't photograph him if you take him into the camera," Captain Kearton was represented as complaining. "If you have ever seen a real live rhinoceros charging at you you know it is rather a lively business," chuckled the Colonel.

"Mr. Kearton intends to go to Africa shortly, crossing the continent and passing through the Congo forest. If you come back," laughed the Colonel as he turned to Mr. Kearton, "I will come back and introduce you again."

The occasion marked the first public appearance in America of Cherry Kearton. The famous photographer appeared under the direction of Adolph Zukor, who will shortly present the films to the New York public, probably in a Broadway theater. Mr. Kearton showed approximately a half dozen reels of bird and animal life. Those pictures which showed Colonel Roosevelt at different stages of his African trip were heartily applauded. The Colonel had taken a seat in the orchestra at the close of his introductory address and had the unusual experience of hearing the applause bestowed upon the photographed representation of himself.

The first of the pictures shown were of bird life in Great Britain, some of the views being taken by Mr. Kearton as he was swung by a rope over the side of great cliffs, and of scenes in the National Park in the United States. One of the best was of a herd of buffalo. There were many views of hunting from the back of an elephant in India. The photographer also spent much time in Borneo. The best of the pictures, however, were taken in British East Africa, where Mr. Kearton journeyed in 1909. It was on this trip that he met Colonel Roosevelt.

Some of the more remarkable individual pictures shown were of a thirty-foot python, at close range; an ourang outang; a haw-haw monkey, with arms that reached to the ground; of rhinoceri in their haunts; but of all the many pictures of wild animals the best was the last, the spearing and killing of a lion within fifteen yards of the camera. Lending interest to this thrilling scene was the exhibition by Mr. Kearton of a spear of soft iron and a shield of hide such as are used by the natives in killing the king of beasts. The pictures as a whole are deeply interesting and of marked educational value. The photography is weak in spots, as is bound to be the case where every condition is against the photographer. On the other hand, there was remarkable quality in some pictures in most unexpected places. The audience on Monday was particularly demonstrative, many times showing its appreciation of the pictures by applause.

Reinhardt's Miracle.

By W. Stephen Bush.

"THE MIRACLE," as filmed by Mr. Joseph Menchen, was presented at the Park Theater, New York City, Monday evening, Feb. 17, to a large and splendid audience. Prices ranged from twenty-five cents to one dollar and a half and most of the seats sold were of the higher priced variety. The audience received the pictures with evident admiration and was generous in its applause.

"The Miracle" at the Park is based, so it is said, on the Wordless Mystery Play which, under the direction of the famous Professor Max Reinhardt, had a wonderful run at the Olympia in London. The possibilities of a revival of pantomime, as conceived and staged by Mr. Reinhardt, had been pointed out in these columns more than a year ago. No one, however, could have realized the effect of filming the new pantomime until "The Miracle" was displayed on the screen.

The Menchen Miracle is not a moving picture drama, but filmed pantomime. Such pantomime, however, as Professor Reinhardt's looks exceedingly well in films, and accompanied by music and singing it grew into the proportions of a unique and magnificent spectacle. A critic, who had probably never seen any but the cheapest of motion pictures, speaking of "The Miracle" in one of the great dailies is moved to remark apropos of "The Miracle":—"What was seen and heard last night went far to emphasize that the moving picture under certain conditions, conditions like those that prevailed last night, may be capable of providing entertainment to be taken seriously by audiences which have never seen the inside of an electric theater."

The accessories to the pictures were splendid music composed by Engelbert Humperdinck and good singing. Nevertheless the pictures were the substance of the entertainment and the pictures were magnificent. From the grand procession in the first act to the final scene of repentance every inch of film spoke of rich color, scenic beauty and impressive settings. The attempt to have the moving pantomime made more life-like by voices behind the screen did not meet with notable success. The idea itself is very good but to be effective there must be considerable skill in the execution. When the Nun danced before the Robber Baron the voices behind the screen sounded more like an animated quarrel in an East Side saloon than the rumblings of a licentious mob. Numerous other defects could be pointed out such as the wearing of high heels by one of the leading and sacred characters of the piece, the persistence with which the knight wore his full armor even while courting the sister, the all too sudden death of the robber baron; but these defects disappear in the splendor and magnificence of the whole.

"The Miracle" is a credit to kinematography and both versions, that of Mr. Menchen and that of the German Art Film Company have many points of excellence. There has been a fierce rivalry between these versions in England, until a judge advised the agents of the German Art Film production to adopt the name Sister Beatrix instead of "The Miracle."

The story of "The Miracle" as pointed out by the moving Picture World is a very old one, current as a Catholic tradition long before the movable type was invented. All the versions that I have seen whether on the stage or in motion pictures closely follow this ancient tradition. Dr. Vollmoeller's version, which was used by Professor Reinhardt, is no more original than any of the dozen varying versions—all the novelists and playwrights who have used the story have been indebted to one and the same source.

The passionate conviction of our low-brow friends that "you can't get a dollar and a half for a moving picture" has once more been rudely shattered.

U. S. VS. MOTION PICTURE PATENTS CO. ET AL.

Hearings in the suit of the United States against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others will be resumed on Thursday, Feb. 27, at the Hotel McAlpin. The statement of a hearing set for February 15 as published in the moving picture section of a daily newspaper was without any foundation in fact.

The Retreat from Moscow

Two-Reel Pathe Masterpiece.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

I RANK this production as superior to most of its kind for excellent reasons. A historic event of tremendous interest and significance is reconstructed; it is not belittled by some petty intrigue having no bearing on the real issue; the scenes depicted are veritable pictures, based on the conceptions of a famous Russian battle-painter; the scenes are laid on the exact locations where the events occurred; every detail is so carefully worked out that the production will some day be ranked among the classics of moving pictures; and the final effect is a powerful one, the story ending as did the selfish and useless campaign.

Russia was the only unconquered country of importance on the continent when Napoleon assembled such an army as never before in his history and moved on Moscow with confidence that he would soon be dictating terms of peace in the old Russian capital as in Berlin and Vienna; but he encountered for the first time a man who had taken a lesson from our own Washington in tactics, those of conducting a masterly retreat before a superior force to draw the enemy away from their source of supplies and stretch their line of communication to the serious detriment of the main body. Just as Washington avoided risking the fate of our cause upon a battle where the chances were all against him, so Alexander retreated. He closely followed the policy of Washington in letting the enemy win battles of no import while constantly retiring from intrenched positions. An army gaining nothing by advancing through a devastated country, where there is no noble principle involved, where only the glory of a selfish leader is concerned, becomes ripe for discouragement at a crisis.

Scenes from "The Retreat from Moscow" (Pathe).

The Pathe production is very impressive from the great bodies of troops—they number many hundreds, many from the present Russian Imperial Army—used in manoeuvres, but the big object lessons it presents are of far superior importance. The French people, then in the midst of enlightenment and progress, delighting in philosophy, art and general culture, were less in favor of a war for mere conquest and spoliation than any others in Europe, but Napoleon was supreme and his vanity was not satisfied. Success had brought in its path self-conceit, intolerence and that reckless inflation which is quite as destructive in the mistakes it causes as mere waste of energy. France needed a tonic and got a big dose of it in the Retreat from Moscow.

Some extraordinary acting, where Napoleon watches the burning city from the balcony of the Kremlin, stimulates the imagination. The disastrous incursion of his grand army seemed to be at an end. He was now told that Moscow had been abandoned. He made ready for his customary ostentation as a triumphant conqueror, when the mortifying news came that stragglers and fugitives were burning the city. We are given a view of the Napoleon looking through his glass and the lurid spectacle that was brought within his range of vision, the destruction of what he had come so far and fought so bitterly to capture. The Russians handed Moscow to him in derision, a heap of ashes. Napoleon loses his self-control, trembles, looks fierce, fidgets, repeats a lot of nervous gestures—he is beaten.

Not Napoleon, but Opportunity and Circumstance were the masters of human destiny. Circumstance and Opportunity had placed him at the head of a splendid nation, one throbbing with vigor and high capability, and he had attained all the glory one individual need ask for his personal efforts. Now he was reminded that he had tasked the patience of Destiny. He had not made the men of courage and brains and brawn who fought the battles of France—they had made him. Not for the glory of France, but for his own selfish purposes, in no lofty spirit, he was destroying them by countless thousands, and the end was a burning city beyond which he could not proceed.

Vain all the pomp of arms and men! Vain the destruction of homes and families! Looting of the town began. Greedy soldiers disregarded discipline, left their posts and fought with the rabble for the spoils, mere looters with military license to pilfer. Was it for that Napoleon had marched over two thousand miles with his grandest army? When the fire reached the hospitals thousands of helpless creatures were consumed amid scenes of unmitigated horror to the everlasting disgrace of the invader. Napoleon did nothing for the helpless, not even for French residents of the city. He only thought to complete the destruction, walls, towers, churches, hospitals, convents, homes, and laid vast mines of powder for this purpose before beginning his retreat.

He became the sport of Nature. A timely rain put out the fires and wet the powder of his mines. Snow fell and decimated the ranks of his army until it is estimated that only seventy thousand out of a half million troops of his Grand Army returned in evidence of his incomparable military genius. The suffering of that seventy thousand is tragically depicted in the Pathe production, and the end of it all conveys a lesson never to be forgotten.

Napoleon burned his flags that they might not be captured by the Russians. What of it? They captured hundreds of his guns, and these pieces are still on exhibition at Moscow, his "N" engraved on the breech of each one. Imagine Washington burning our flags in his masterly retreat! Imagine Washington deserting his army in the bitter cold of Valley Forge and hunting up a place of security and solid comfort for himself. The end of the Pathe production is one of bitter truth. Napoleon left his army perishing with hunger and cold and slipped away like a thief in the night, a cowardly ending to the greatest campaign he had ever planned. The Pathe production is a historical gem.

WHAT THE PICTURE WAS.

In a story the World printed last week under the heading: "The Ever Important Picture," it was narrated how Lloyd F. Lonergan, of Thanhouser, held up a police parade in New Rochelle for fifteen minutes because his cameraman wasn't ready and "the sun wasn't up." It was a fact story, too, as Chief Timmons, of the New Rochelle police department, and the police force as a whole, will attest. But the item failed to tell what the excitement was about—what kind of a picture demanded that so important a procession be so long delayed. It was a story about a ghost in a deserted police station, says Bert Adler, humbly begging the World's pardon for omitting the information originally. The Thanhouser Kid plays the ghost. The title is "The Ghost in Uniform" and the release day, Sunday, Feb. 23rd.

"The Artist's Great Madonna"

A Beautiful Two-Reel Vitagraph by Katherine Van Dyke.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A FRENCH Master of Painting, impersonated by Roger Lytton, is seen in small scope, studying one after another devotional pictures of the Mother and Babe. The scope is so small that the engravings he is examining are plainly visible. He becomes infatuated with the subject, like millions of others, and it requires no great mental grasp to discover the reason for his interest. The Madonna, as the type of universal motherhood, has always appealed to the sympathies of people in all walks of life, and the greatest of artists have vied with one another in seeking to depict Her charm.

Lytton becomes so absorbed that he is seized with an impulse more urgent than any he has ever known to put his own conception of the Virgin and Child on canvas. He dreams about it in the solitude of his studio until one after another treatment of the subject is apparently materialized before his eyes only to fade away, an intangible vision. This is beautifully done in double exposure, showing type after type of countenances of models whom the Master knows in his quarter of Paris. The conceptions of his mind, so adjusted as to suit each model, are thus portrayed. The secret workings of his imagination are laid bare.

The impulse becomes a purpose so fixed that nothing can alter it, and the painter goes out among the bright lights of the gay French capital to search for a woman whose face shall closely correspond to his own ideal. He goes to the students' ball, known in Paris as the Bal Bullier. This affords opportunity for a brilliant ensemble, in which many well known members of the Vitagraph Company appear in fancy dress among the revelers of an adjoining cabaret. One after another of the models is hurried to his studio for a trial—one of the most amusing is Lillian Walker—but the Master's ideals are far from being realized. Lillian is especially and delightfully material. He rejects them all only to be suddenly impressed by the suitability of Julia Swayne Gordon.

Scenes from the Vitagraph's Two Part Feature, "The Artist's Great Madonna."

Mistake? Such was my off-hand impression. Julia Swayne had effected a marvelous transformation and was no longer the red-rose adventuress she plays so well. She was not at all my own ideal of the Madonna, but she gained every moment she impersonated the difficult part until she gave it a subtle strength highly creditable to her intelligence and ability as an actress. Her self-abnegation was superb, and her occasional flashes of intensity were a relief to a role of tremendous self-suppression.

Lytton, a veritable master of any role he assumes, exhibits a vast amount of interest in the model he has chosen. He favors her above all the others—she is a modest and unassuming creature—but there is something lacking in her face. She has not known the joys and sorrows of motherhood. She poses sweetly and well with the Babe in her arms; her figure is well proportioned; her face is pure and handsome, but there is not written there the lessons of sorrow, anxiety and maternal longing. He takes her to the cabaret for refreshment and is astounded to find that the gay life of Paris is practically unknown to her.

She attracts the envy of unsuccessful aspirants and Lytton becomes the center of many purposive attentions because of his prominence as a painter. They are joined by an American artist, in proper person Robert Gaillord, and Lillian Walker draws near the group with malice prepense distorting her pretty face. She waits her chance to even up matters according to her own code of adjustment and stabs Lytton at a moment when he is the center of a promiscuous gathering. The frightened revelers flee in all directions until there is only Mlle. Gordon and Gaillord to care for the dangerously wounded Master Artist.

Julia attends to the injured man while he lies unconscious in his studio, and her fidelity to him during convalescence opens the eyes of Gaillord to the fact that she has fallen in love with the man who has idealized her beauty. He leaves them together with the inevitable result. The Master Artist finds that his model's sympathetic interest has grown indispensable to him, and he leads her to become his wife. A period of disillusionation follows, and the hungry soul of the artist returns to its first longing. The picture he has painted of the woman who is now his wife is not satisfying, and he leaves her to renew his search for the type of his dreams.

All this is very natural. There is no straining for effect. The painter goes forth on his quest as unaware as most men are that it is universal. Nearly every manly and intelligent brother of his in Christendom is searching for an unformed ideal among the women he meets, only to endow some one of them with attributes that are largely created by his own fancy. That is a wise provision of Dame Nature, the only trouble being that other dames are not so wise when they cast aside the veil of illusion and come to breakfast in curl papers, and a wrapper that has seen better days.

The artist's search is like that of the children in Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird," when they wander afar and find not what they seek, for he comes back home in despair. His wife, meanwhile, has given birth to a child and is installed in a cottage given to her by Gaillord from purest friendship. There Gaillord leads despondent Lytton and leaves husband and wife together. Julia has attained a new and more spiritual beauty in responding to the quickened sympathies of motherhood, and the unerring eye of the artist notes this with delight. He has wandered far for his "blue Bird" and found it at home. He kneels to the God-given replica of the Supreme Mother for a moment of reverence, then rises to compare her face with the one he painted. He now understands what was lacking. He stands gazing in constructive rapture at his work; the mother looks tenderly down at hers, and the scene fades in an ending that is truly artistic.

HORACE G. PLIMPTON GOES ABROAD.

Mr. Horace G. Plimpton, general manager of the Edison studios in the Bronx, sailed on the S. S. Campania, Wednesday morning, February 19th, for London and a well-earned vacation. It is Mr. Plimpton's intention to remain abroad two weeks, during which time he will make some study of trade conditions in England and on the continent.

"The Prisoner of Zenda."

Remarkable Four Part Production by the Famous Players Film Company.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

WITH this four-act film drama the producers have leaped to the pinnacle of moving picture fame at one gigantic bound. "The Prisoner of Zenda," as shown at the private exhibition in the Lyceum Theater, bears a message of hope and cheer to every friend of the motion picture and vindicates, beyond all cavil, American supremacy in the world of films. We have seen a new standard in dramatic architecture for screen purposes and we have witnessed an ensemble of American artists, in whom their debut in the new art called forth the very best that was in them. Indeed, before I go any further, let me state right here, that the function of the critic now resolves itself into the difficult if pleasing task of a proper and orderly distribution of credits and tributes.

The direction of "The Prisoner of Zenda," I believe, was largely a work of intelligent and enthusiastic co-operation. The skill of a talented, experienced and ardent master of the silent drama is apparent at every turn. Mr. Porter knew the possibilities of his instrument and made the camera's conquest quite complete. He has disarmed and delighted the most captious of critics by the daring but entirely successful use of all those advantages which are peculiar to the motion picture and which the conventional stage can never hope to share. Take but one example. The judicious employment of outdoor scenes knitted the splendid story into a rapid and continuous whole, of which neither novel nor stage can give us even the shadow of a conception. The audience, mostly composed of theatrical people and perhaps somewhat inexpert in moving picture work, was quick to appreciate these advantages of the new invention and broke into applause whenever the action of the drama was carried on in the theater of Nature. To be sure all the outdoor settings were happily chosen, but the ordinary motion picture audience is well used to such settings and takes even the best of them as a matter of course.

Let it be made plain that "the new standard" applies to this production from every angle. In the matter of interior settings I can recall nothing finer and more painstakingly finished. To Mr. Richard Murphy is due much of the credit for this novel and charming feature of the production. A hundred pairs of critical eyes swept up and down the screen and gathered nothing but delight. Everything was perfect, the scenes of The Coronation, the appeals to the populace in the streets of Strelsau by Black Michael and the pseudo-King, the procession to the Hall of State; no detail had escaped the watchful eye of the directors.

The marvel of the performance was the acting.

No such cast ever showed its varied skill and power on the screen before. Of Mr. Hackett in the leading role it seems scarcely possible to speak with becoming praise. He knew he was acting for posterity and he acted with an enthusiasm born of a very great and sincere love for his novel task. Superbly fitted for the task by generous nature he gave us an ideal portrayal of the difficult dual role of King Rudolf and plain Mr. Rassendyl. Though it was his first attempt on the silent stage he was in thorough accord with the camera and the mind that directed the camera from the first turn to the last. The love of honor and of justice, the English readiness for sport and perilous adventure, the absorbing devotion of a true man to a true woman, the turmoil and intrigue in the mythical kingdom, the loyalty of faithful retainers—all the qualities that account for the response of the popular heart to the appeal in Hope's novel are found in convincing realism on the screen. The fatal American defect of neglecting the cast to make the star shine all the brighter is here conspicuous by its total absence. The ensemble was in every way worthy of the star. It seemed to me that Miss Beatrice Beckley had solved better than most artists who are new on the silent stage the problem of maintaining poise in pantomine. Without that poise, directed by superior art and intelligence, the pantomime is either too mechanical or overacted. Mr. Torrence as Black Michael acquitted himself in a clever manner. Seeing himself he will realize that acting before the camera gains little from over-emphasis in speaking and shouting. Miss Haines was fully equal to the somewht thankless part of Antoinette. Mr. Hale gave the camera a fine impersonation of Rupert of Hentzau, while the Messrs. Coulter and Randall got all the rich humor and the touches of pathos out of Sapt and Fritz.

We owe much of the excellence of this production to the harmonious working of masters on the speaking and on the silent stage. There never was any just enmity between them and what enmity there was must be characterized as strictly one-sided and confined to the prejudices of some lights on the speaking stage. Perhaps I should say managers instead of lights. The motion picture will help the dramatic stage and vice versa. Drama is of the motion picture but a part, but it is the stage's whole existence.

"The Prisoner of Zenda" has, I think, another mission than the mere making of money. It merits particular praise because it is an appeal to the finer feelings and the better taste. No one can deny that the large quantities of trash that have with painful consistency been poured forth from certain studios too numerous to mention had begun to vitiate public taste and even to debauch it. Here is the counter-current which, let us hope, will crowd the cheap and the incompetent far into the rear of the procession.

Frightful monstrosities have been committed in the sacred name of kinematography and such atonements as this wonderful production are needed to blot out the transgressions. I believe the public will flock to the newer, better, higher, cleaner and more artistic standards.

The higher ideals of these producers shine out even in some of the minor things and of the latter the program given out deserves most honorable mention. Typographically and from a literary viewpoint it harmonizes with the supreme merits of the production itself. The faults of projection in a house hitherto a stranger to motion pictures may readily be forgiven, but what was the matter with the music?

Observed in the Audience.

By George Blaisdell.

As THE last scene of "The Prisoner of Zenda"—with James K. Hackett as Rassendyl gazing into the flames of a fireplace—faded at the Lyceum Theater on Tuesday, a man with a tear on each cheek turned to his companion. The house lights had been turned on. "Isn't it a pity," he said, "that the story of the love of Rudolph and Flavia has been so minimized in this picture? That it has been subordinated to the spectacular—to the essentially masculine phase of the story?"

"Oh, I don't know that is has been entirely," replied his companion, as he noted the two telltale streaks on the face of the first speaker; "there seems to have been enough of it to get to you."

Just before the beginning of the performance of "Zenda" the writer met Mr. Hackett in the lobby of the theater.

"Well, how does it seem? Almost as bad as a first night, eh?"

"Worse!" replied the star with emphasis. "You can't change anything now."

Mr. Hackett's frame of mind may better be imagined when it is explained that up to that time he had not seen the picture projected.

There has been much debate among stage folk as to the effect upon his future "drawing power" of a screen portrayal by a prominent actor. Up to this time, of course, there has been no precedent by which an opinion might be formed. We'll soon know, however. Right here's a guess: That next year Mr. Hackett will have one of the most successful seasons he has known.

Just before the performance a friend asked the star where he was going to sit.

"In the last row, in the seat nearest the door," was the prompt reply. This later proved to be the fact, but there was no occasion for a hasty exit. Mr. Hackett was well content to sit out the show.

One unusual aspect of the afternoon—at least unusual to a more or less hardened picture-goer—was the frequent applause. It was one of the rare occasions when one could applaud a fine bit of acting on the screen and know that the applause would reach the ears of the person whom it was intended to compliment.

Daniel Frohman, the veteran theatrical manager and managing director of the company, made a brief talk to the audience before the pictures were shown:

"I am not Mr. Hackett, ladies and gentlemen," jocularly remarked Mr. Frohman to a gathering as well acquainted with his identity as it was with the star's, "but the occasion today is so unusual in this theater that I want to say just a word or two about the play, more for the benefit of the younger members of the profession." He spoke of the first presentation of "The Prisoner of Zenda" with Mr. Sothern as Rudolph about eighteen years before in the old Lyceum Theater. He told how shortly after this Mr. Hackett appeared in the same role.

"A great deal of the popularity of this play," he continued, "has been due to his picturesque work in this part. I am not among the few who think that the speaking stage will be ever replaced. The power of the actor and of the drama will be permanent. As a continued element of interest to millions, and by reason of it in this new form of entertainment—motion pictures—fiction and the drama and the classics can be produced in the most out-of-the-way places. This will constitute a factor so great that it is almost incalculable.

"I want to say that Mr. Hackett and his company who have been working in these pictures are present to-day in this audience. I hope you will enjoy this as much as I am sure they will in witnessing themselves on the screen."

WAR PICTURES INTEREST GREEKS.

Each of the two daily Greek newspapers of New York City has recently published an editorial urging every Greek in the city and its suburbs to make a point of seeing the Kinemacolor representation of "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War" at the Carnegie Lyceum, New York City, where these pictures are being exhibited twice daily in conjunction with "The Making of the Panama Canal." The stand taken by the editors of Atlantis and The Pan-Hellenic, the papers in question, is that the Greek army and its feats so splendidly portrayed in Kinemacolor gives all Americans who see the pictures a better idea of what a great country is Greece. These pictures have already run for two months at the Carnegie Lyceum, drawing large houses at prices of from 25c to $1.50, and promise to run indefinitely, with an occasional change of the war program as new reels arrive from the front.

FEATURE—BUSY THANHOUSER!

"Sherlock Holmes Solves the Sign of the Four," "Carmen," and "Cymbeline" are the next Thanhouser two-reelers. The detective film is released first. on Tuesday, Feb. 25th. It is an Eastern production, with Harry Benham as Holmes, and Mr. Hite says there is publicity matter galore. Marguerite Snow will play "Carmen" in the production of that title. This feature, and "Cymbeline," are by the California Thanhouser organizations. The new all-glass studio for the Eastern company, at New Rochelle, will be ready for use in three weeks and will have four stages. The new laboratories, which adjoin the studio that is building, will be turning out their first work within a week.

The Making of a Feature

Madame Blache, of the Solax Company, is Producing The Story of Dick Whittington and his Cat.

IT was our singular good fortune this week to drop in at the Solax studio at Fort Lee. The bright sunny building, its atmosphere of cheerfulness and good fellowship, which even the least important employees seem to feel and take part in, and the courtesy of Madame Blache herself, leave in the visitor's mind at all times, a pleasant memory. Every one who goes out to Fort Lee comes back enthusiastic and full of admiration. It is not only the agreeableness of the place and of the people one meets there that one notices, but the smoothness and the order with which the work is carried on. There is no litter about and seemingly no hurry; it is the best kind of a place for good work and very clearly shows a strong personality behind it. Just at present, to any eye that can weave a story from small suggestions and foresee a fine picture from one or two perfect scenes, it is full of the romance of long ago. For Madame Blache is working on a three-reel picture that will tell the grand old story of Dick Whittington and his cat. We were shown the bells—they are of good size—that will sing out encouragement to the footsore lad, "Turn again Whittington, Lord Mayor of London." And we were also shown other things that made us eager to see the finished picture in all its three reels.

It will be a better offering even, so Madame Blache says, than the Solax "Fra Diavalo." If she is not mistaken in this, it will indeed be something very fine. For our part, judging by two scenes that we saw being turned, by a reel of what has already been made and by the absolutely perfect sets and furniture prepared for the other scenes, we are sure that it will make a stir on its artistic merits. It was by no means an easy picture to plan and prepare for, since every one of its important scenes had to be constructed; the times of Dick Whittington have passed away. Madame Blache is not one who is content, in producing this story, to get backgrounds that are something like those among which this hero of at least every English speaking school boy lived; she has aimed at giving an illusion of reality and it is plain that she has spared no pains or money in her determination to get this illusion. In the reels already taken she has reached it in a most remarkable way. We saw a picture of a big kitchen in the house of an English merchant, where Dick has obtained a job as scullion. He had hoped to find gold and be a great merchant at once. But he has at least found a home though he has to work; blow the fires with the bellows and polish up the brass work and pans and pots, all old style, of which the kitchen is full. The suggestion that this scene gives is helped much by the acting, but all together, it is full of reminiscence of old prints and makes us think that we have seen just such a kitchen and know that the scene is what it ought to be.

Some of the scenes will need an old time English galleon, the ship on which the cat makes the voyage that is to prove so profitable to Dick. This is so well done that we took pleasure looking it over and noticing its details; it looks like the real thing and will make a picture worth seeing. Then there is a picture of the gate of the city at the time Dick reaches it and where he is stopped by the "Beef Eater" on guard. This will make one wonder where it was found, for it has been made to seem massive and looks like stone. To make these sets, study and research were called for. Before she began the production, Madame Blache spent a good many days looking up old prints and studying the times. Knowing what was needed, she has gone ahead to obtain it without regard to expense in reason. That this is so is not only claimed, but quite apparent. And because of it the offering will be not only entertaining, but valuable for its instruction.

A poor picture in the best setting possible would be like a beautiful cup to a thirsty traveler. He might admire it, but unless it held something to quench his thirst he would hardly take deep interest in it. This picture will be full of the truest humanity, as clear as sparkling water. Those scenes that we saw being played were acted in a thoroughly sincere and natural way. One comes to realize, while watching Madame Blache at work with her players, what alertness and care for smallest things at every instant of a scene is needed in the making of really good pictures. Standing behind this gifted producer and listening to her quietly given admonitions to her players, one gets a vivid impression of what her mind is drawing in its imagination. It seems magical, the closeness of the understanding between her and the player who happens to be the center of the story at any seemingly small part of an instant and it is marvelous that the effect she desires is obtained so easily. It is the power of quiet direction attaining its ends. That one feels this influence while watching Madame Blache at work shows how sharp and clear-cut is her visualizing power and how thoroughly she knows just what she wants.

While a scene is being turned the studio seems as still as a mill pond at sunset; and yet, if anything humorous happens, Madame Blache is the first to see its fun and the first to laugh. When things happen that spoil the scene even, and such sometimes bob up anywhere, she is apt to catch the humor of it. Such an attitude toward life saves much nervous strain and wear and tear. There were no signs of nerves in the Solax studio; but we did notice a good deal of modulated fun and laughter which never interfered with the work. The admiration and sincere loyalty of all Madame Blache's artistic household, is apparent everywhere. Fun is not choked down and orderly work certainly flourishes. In one of the picture's scenes a mule is needed to draw an old English cart. He is just an ordinary mule such as can stand on his front legs alone for the time a steel spring might snap and need no hind support at all. One of the players wanted to make friends with his muleship and made overtures to scratch his back. It looked as though a knife blade had shut and opened and the friendly man got a cue for his exit after a scene in which there was no faking.

Scene from "Dick Whittington and His Cat" (Solax).

No estimate of what the players are going to give us would be fair at this time. There is a large cast and we have seen only a few of them; but those few have our admiration. Vinnie Byrnes is Dick at the time he comes to London and we are sure that she, in those scenes we saw, will score a big success, she deserves it anyway. Mrs. Hurley's work is too well known to need more than a passing notice that it is equal to the best we have seen from her. That is saying a good deal in the way of high commendation. Every other player whose work we noticed seemed to feel the romantic atmosphere of the story and all filled their parts in perfection or something very near to it.

KLEINE'S CINES AND ECLIPSE.

George Kleine's releases for the week ending February 19th, 1913, consist of two excellent comedies and a powerful drama, making up a well balanced program, which should meet with the approval of all exhibitors.

For the Tuesday Cines, "The Conjurers" describes the ludicrous adventures of Mr. Stout and Mr. Thynne, who, advertising themselves as sleight-of-hand performers, attempt to entertain a large and enthusiastic audience. Stout poses as the "wizard," while Thynne, hidden under the table, attends to most of the "magic." The scheme works well until Thynne, taking a fancy to a chicken which is used in one of the tricks, quietly disappears through the door with it. Of course, this starts a row, and it all ends in the two impostors being handed over to the police.

On the same reel is the "Views of Narni and Lake Trasimeno," a charming scenic which spreads before us unusually interesting panoramic views of Narni and scenes along the river Nersa and the famous Lake Trasimeno.

For the Wednesday Eclipse, "Getting Even," is a unique story which should call forth many laughs from the audience. It tells of two young people who attempt to play rather practical jokes upon each other but both are found out, and although they are somewhat angry at first, everything ends happily, and their acquaintance begun this way develops into a lasting friendship.

An interesting nature study subject entitled "Snakes and Frogs," is on the same reel. It shows us how snakes are captured, and the venom extracted, and many rare specimens of snakes and frogs.

"His Redemption" is the title of the Saturday Cines. It relates of two young people who are engaged to be married, and are as happy as any pair of lovers can be until one day the young fellow learns that the brother of his sweetheart is a thief. Greatly shocked, he relates what he has heard to his fiancee, and then insists upon breaking off the engagement. The girl is heartbroken, but close surveillance of her brother's actions convinces her of the truth of the accusation, and she resolves to reform him. By a clever plan, she accomplishes her object, but he is heartbroken at the exposure of his true character and leaves the town. Later, however, he is discovered by friends and after making a full confession of his crime, promises to lead an honest life in the future. A complete reconciliation is then effected, and the old love is restored.

On the date of March 3rd, 1913, will be released the two-reel Kleine-Eclipse Special, entitled "Shylock," which is an adaptation from Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice." It is a production of unusual merit, containing the most gorgeous settings, faultless costuming, and skillful acting. The part of Shylock is ably portrayed by Mr. Harry Baur of the Athenee Theater of Paris. Mr. Joube takes the part of the unfortunate merchant. Miss Pepa Bonafe makes a beautiful and bewitching Portia. Mr. Harve of the Odeon Theater, whose remarkable work in the Eclipse production "The Taming of the Shrew" will be remembered by all who saw it, portrays a gallant Bassanio.

Exhibitors will do well to feature this film to the utmost, for it deals with a subject that is well known to everybody, and should prove of universal interest as a photo-drama. The advertising value of this film can hardly be over-estimated.

"THE BOND OF BROTHERHOOD" (Gaumont).

Here we have the story of a divorcee, who, not content with her bright prospects as the future wife of a prosperous artist, engages his brother in a dangerous flirtation. The result is obvious. The brothers become estranged and it is only by an accident to the delinquent brother that it is proved that blood is thicker than water and the divorcee is turned out of the house by the mother of the two men as being unworthy of being the wife of either.

The delicate situations are adroitly handled by the company and the role of the brother who, after having been aided by the artist's brother, then carries on an "affair" with the artist's fiance, is admirably acted, as is also that of the cause of all the trouble—the adventuress. There is a strong scene, when after the accident in the erring brother's laboratory, after he has been denounced by the artist as being the one to break up his happiness, when the adventuress discovers her latest flame on the floor unconscious. She accuses the artist of killing his brother in revenge for his attentions to her. It is circumstantial evidence for the time being, of the strongest kind.

Scene from "The Bond of Brotherhood" (Gaumont).

In the subject there is the usual Gaumont photography, par excellent, and the appropriate scenes and furnishings. The ball-room scene is particularly good.

Doings at Los Angeles

World Correspondent Has a Busy Week—Many Items of Interest Gathered in the Western Picture Center.

THE Utah Moving Picture Company's new five-reel production "100 Years of Mormonism" was given its first public exhibition at Salt Lake City February 3. Telegrams from the traveling manager to the home office in this city announced that on the opening day the picture took in $723 and the second day the box office receipts were $1,050. This latter is said to be the largest single day's earning for a motion picture in the state. In order to get $1,050 into the house it was necessary to accommodate about 400 spectators on the stage behind the screen. They were given a left-handed view of the pictures and the titles, which appeared backward, were read to them by William T. Nuttall, a prominent layman of the Mormon church.

The picture was scheduled to open in Los Angeles and San Francisco simultaneously February 9. In this city it will be shown at the Majestic Theater for one week with Norval McGregor, the director who staged it, as lecturer. William G. Colvin will deliver the lectures in San Francisco and Prof. Levi Young, of the University of Utah, is lecturing in Salt Lake City.

The Los Angeles copy will be shown following its run in this city in all the principal cities of southern California and possibly in several Arizona cities. The San Francisco copy will go from there to Portland and Seattle and through western Canada. The Salt Lake copy will probably go to Denver and further east. All the arrangements for the exhibition of the films are being made by the Five Continents Exchange & Sales Co. which holds the world rights of the picture. Representatives of the Five Continents company have been sent to New York and London with copies of the picture and power to negotiate for state and foreign rights.

A recent cablegram from London brought news of the sudden death of Frederick Tillisch in that city. Mr. Tillisch was European traveling representative of the Five Continents company. His widow, who is well known in theatrical circles under her professional name of Eva Stirling, is on her way to Chicago with the body. Mr. and Mrs. Tillisch formerly lived in Chicago before they went abroad.

New Bison Company.

Announcement of the formation of a new Bison company and, in consequence, of one additional weekly release by the Universal company, was made in Los Angeles last week. The company has already been formed, all except the director, who will be chosen in a few days. This makes the fourteenth producing company now working for the Universal forces in Los Angeles, and the new release will increase the output from twenty-two to twenty-six reels a week. There are now two Bison companies producing four reels a week, and the third Bison will also turn out two-reel subjects. There are three Rex companies making two, one and one reels respectively; three Powers, making two, one and one; three Nestors, making two, one and one; a Honolulu company making single reels, and the Lincoln J. Carter company making releases of from two to four reels, each depending upon the subjects.

David Horsley, treasurer and member of the board of directors of the Universal company, who is visiting here, says that within another year the Universal will certainly have not less than 21 companies operating in Los Angeles.

A huge production of great historical as well as mere pictorial value will be undertaken by the Universal studios within the next ten days. It is to be "The Coming of the Francescans," a picture showing how the Spanish Fathers of the Order of St. Frances came as missionaries to California when it was unexplored, and how they converted the natives to Christianity and established an early civilization. The subject is full of dramatic and spectacular opportunities. There are few adventures in history so full of romance.

This production has been in preparation for many weeks. Special scenery has been painted, hundreds of costumes have been made and for three solid weeks one of the members of the editorial department carried on a course of study at the Los Angeles Public Library, where the best collection of books and documents on early California in the world is kept.

Frank E. Montgomery will produce the four reels. His company will be greatly augmented for the occasion and one or two scenes will require the services of the maximum number of "extra people" possible to engage in Southern California. There will be a great deal of traveling in connection with the picture, for there are scenes located at every one of the chain of Missions which marked the highway from San Diego to San Francisco. For this reason, as well as because of the extraordinary pains which will be taken with it, the making of the picture will probably consume several weeks. For one of the ocean scenes a Spanish galleon is being reconstructed according to exact measurements taken from historical documents. Curio stores and private collections have been drawn upon in the interests of historical accuracy. Another interesting feature will be the appearance in the picture, as actors, of several of the descendants of the Indians who were converted to Christianity by the missionaries.

Marion Paul Emmons, seven years old, who plays juvenile leads in the childrens' pictures under the Powers brand, finished his 360th picture this week. He claims to be the youngest leading man in the business. In the same company is "Pop" Manley, who will soon attain four-score and ten and who without any doubt is the oldest actor in the pictures. In consideration of his age, his standing and the esteem in which everyone connected with motion pictures holds him, The Photoplayers, by unanimous vote, at their last business meeting, elected him as the first honorary life member of the new organization.

Cost of Censor Board Falls on Exchanges.

After a series of conferences between the members of the local Motion Picture Censor Board and representatives of the several film exchanges a practical agreement has finally been reached on the question of the amount of license the exchanges shall pay the city. An ordinance which originated with the Censor Board and which has been pending before the council's legislation committee provided that the license tax should be one-tenth of a cent a linear foot or approximately $1 a reel. Through a misunderstanding the ordinance was so worded that it was left open to a possible construction which would have required the exchanges to pay this dollar tax every time they rented a reel, although the Censor Board only intended that a reel should be taxed once. However, the exchanges protested that the tax of $1 was exorbitant and unreasonable. A friendly conference brought out the fact that the only purpose of the board was to obtain from the exchanges an amount of revenue sufficient to support the board and to relieve the taxpayers of any expense on that score. The board took the position that it is maintained solely because of the existence of the motion picture business and that the business ought to defray the expense to which it puts the city. All of the exchange men agreed that it is not unreasonable to ask them to assume this expense and they have agreed to do it. There still remains to be worked out a plan for assessing the cost among the exchanges. That matter the city authorities have practically agreed to leave to the exchange men to settle among themselves.

All of the members of the Censor Board serve without pay except the secretary, who receives $75 a month for devoting six hours a day to the work six days a week. This and the cost of rent and projection are the board's principal expenses. The exchanges are not opposed to censorship as it exists in Los Angeles or to the board. In the first place they realize that the very existence of the board has an effect on public opinion which is beneficial to them, for it gives the public confidence that the motion picture shows of the city are safe to patronize. This without reference to whether the board's work is actually valuable or not. A more important consideration is that as long as the board exists there is no likelihood of police censorship and regulation, a thing always to be dreaded. Again, the relations between the board and the industry have always been pleasant and harmonious. The board has been extremely moderate and sympathetic in all its dealings with the exhibitors and exchanges and has shown more of a disposition to co-operate with them than arbitrarily to regulate them.

New License Schedule.

An amendment to that section of the license ordinance which relates to the licenses of motion picture theaters has been recommended to the city council by the Motion Picture Censor Board and there is every probability that it will be passed within the next two weeks. At the present time every exhibitor is forced to pay a license of $20 a month without respect to the size of his theater or the amount of business he does. It costs the big downtown houses, seating 1,000 persons or more, no more for license than it does the small theater in the suburbs accommodating only 250 or 300. The Censor Board's ordinance places the licenses on a graduated sliding scale, ranging from $5 a month for theaters of 300 capacity or less, to $20 a month for theaters having a capacity in excess of 1,000. Notwithstanding that all but about five theaters will save money if this ordinance becomes effective there was a considerable sentiment against the ordinance among the exhibitors. A meeting of the exhibitors' association was held this week at which it was resolved that the picture men do not want a graduated scale, but favor instead a flat rate of $10 a month. The only argument the Censor Board had for reducing the license was that the flat rate was manifestly unfair and unscientific, and even on this showing the council was very reluctant to adopt an amendment which would reduce the city's revenue. The action of the exhibitors so disgusted the council that the Censor Board's sliding scale came near being rejected. As it is it will probably pull through. The sole reason for the exhibitors' objection to the plan was that some who stood to save only from $5 to $10 a month by the change objected to seeing others get a reduction of $15.

Vitagraph Company Busy.

Two of the absentee members of the Western Vitagraph company are back at the Santa Monica and working in the pictures again. Miss Mary Charleson took a vacation and went to San Francisco, and Miss Florence Weil returned from the hospital with a missing appendix, but otherwise as well as ever. Arthur Rosslyn, a member of the Eastern Vitagraph company, has been visiting in Los Angeles and made a formal call at the Santa Monica studio—a hazardous proceeding inasmuch as Rollin Sturgeon, the director, has a habit of making use of any actor who is so careless as to show up around the studio when he is supposed to be taking a day off. That was how "Choo Choo" broke into the business. "As long as we have that blamed cat around here we might as well teach it to act," Sturgeon observed one day. A few weeks later the cat graduated from "Sturgeon's Dramatic School For Animal Actors" and worked in a picture. He made such a hit with the Vitagraph fans that one of the duties of W. Hanson Durham, the tame scenario writer of the Western studio, is to think up roles for "Choo Choo." Another one is reported to be cooking in his brain. Another interesting picture which Sturgeon has in preparation will introduce some new and striking electrical effects.

News Briefs.

Members of the Censor Board, clergymen, educators and newspaper people, were the guests of William H. Clune at his Broadway theater January 31 when Kalem's "From the Manger to the Cross" was exhibited for the first time in this city. Two performances were given, with a lecture and incidental music.

The first public exhibition of the picture will be at Temple Auditorium, where it will open a week's engagement February 10. After that it will tour southern California and possibly will play a return engagement in this city before being taken to San Francisco and the northern part of the state.

A big and costly railroad drama is to be started next week by Wilfred Melville, producing manager of the Southern California Lubin company. It will probably be a two-reel subject. Melville arranged to hire a special train for two days and since he needed a couple of depot scenes and a steam road passes the back of his studio, he has had the station built on his own property. There are not many motion picture companies that can boast a railroad depot among their regular "props."

The Arizona business of the Golden Gate film exchange of this city and San Francisco has lately assumed so much importance that it was announced this week that a branch will be located at once in Phoenix, Ariz.

Fred Mace, Keystone comedian and president of The Photoplayers, has just purchased 10,000 beautiful postcard photographs of himself. They are worth framing. A request directed to him at 305 South Union Avenue, Los Angeles, if accompanied by a two-cent stamp, will bring one.

Charley Klopot, manager of the Pacific Feature Exchange, has just taken on a side line. He has bought out the Hidalgo theater on North Main Street and will hire a manager to run it. The theater is an established business and has been profitable in the past. Under the direction of Klopot, who is an experienced exhibitor and a shrewd business man, it should become a gold mine.

A second Lubin company, headed by Director Grandon, arrived in town this week and is temporarily located at Glendale. The other Lubin company, of which Wilbert Melville is producing manager, is now thoroughly established in Los Angeles and is turning out its release a week.

The Los Angeles Times has instituted a daily department under the heading of "Among the Photoplayers." A. G. Waddell, of the sporting staff, is editor of the department.

C. O. Baumann, vice-president of the Kaybee, Keystone and Broncho companies, is in town on his annual visit to look over the plants of the three companies. He achieved lasting fame before he had been here 24 hours by becoming a life member of The Photoplayers. There is also a rumor that the real reason for his visit is to get pointers from The Photoplayers' ball for the benefit of the Screen Club.

* * *

J. J. Allen, of Calgary, Canada, owner of the Canadian Film Exchange, has been in Los Angeles this week, primarily for the purpose of visiting the Universal plant. Mrs. Allen accompanied him. He operates twelve exchanges and 35 theaters and holds the sole rights for the sale of Universal films in Canada. At the present time he is building two new theaters which will cost a quarter of a million dollars each, one at Calgary and the other at Winnipeg. He is now buying 100 reels a week for his exchanges.

Two motion picture features in five reels each are running at the two leading theaters of Los Angeles this week and both are playing to profitable business. At the Majestic theater "One Hundred Years of Mormonism" is having its Los Angeles premier, and at Temple Auditorium, W. H. Clune is exhibiting Kalem's "From the Manger to the Cross."

The legislature of Belgium has had its attention called to the prosperity of the motion picture theater and has adopted measures for increasing the license fees for motion picture exhibitions. In one case it was claimed a tax of but fifty francs per year was levied on an electric theater, which made $40,000 in the same year. It is proposed to increase the license to an uniform rate of $400.

TOM CARRIGAN AGAIN WITH SELIG.

T. J. Carrigan has returned to the Chicago studios of the Selig Company and will shortly be seen in a series of pictures well adapted to his talents. Carrigan will be best remembered for his creditable acting in the role of Prince Charming in "Cinderella," which the Selig Company released last winter.

S. Lubin, Philosopher

Pen Picture of the Philadelphia Pioneer.

WHO will dispute the title of Siegmund Lubin to a prominent place in the Album of Moving Picture Notables? The world likes pioneers, likes them when they work and likes them not a whit less when they tell their stories after their work is done. Lubin? All through the Keystone State and through all the country, which is tributary to the Pennsy and the Reading, Lubin and motion pictures have long been convertible terms. Now his fame extends far beyond that dear old Philadelphia and is known wherever there are pictures and screens to throw them on. Whatever we may think of the Lubin pictures, there can be no doubt about the success of the Lubin personality.

Lubin is a philosopher, one of those rare lovers of wisdom who follow the precepts of Montaigne and practice what they preach. Whether it was a natal gift or whether it is the result of a long residence in the old city of the Quakers, Lubin is essentially a man of peace, an advocate of the Hague arbitration idea and averse to strife of any kind.

Siegmund Lubin.

"I don't want to fight," said the fine old veteran as he sat an honored visitor in the offices of the Moving Picture World. "When Mr. Edison started in to fight me I told my lawyer I wanted nothing to do with that man. My lawyers say to me: 'Well, Mr. Lubin, you may want to have nothing to do with that man, but he wants to have something to do with you.' Of course, now, Edison and I are the best of friends."

For a pioneer, who may justly boast that he made motion pictures when a length of one hundred feet was considered sensational, Mr. Lubin carries his years lightly, almost gracefully. You never think of counting them all. Tall, erect, firm of carriage with a plain old-fashioned, but quite engaging manner, this champion of the olden days is most pleasant to look at. His philosophy shines in his eyes before in quaint but clever words it leaves his lips.

"What sort of pictures do they expect from us in Detroit?" asked the veteran quizzically. "Why they won't allow even long kisses any more, they say there must be short kisses. I like to go into the picture houses and watch the people. I tell you they come to cry as well as to laugh. The other day a workingman and his wife were on their way into the theater, when the wife stopped suddenly as if she realized that she had forgotten something. She had forgotten her handkerchief. Yes, yes, they do bring the handkerchiefs along for a cry. Don't they laugh, too, at the most silly things that have no sense to them? One laughs and then another; they don't know why, but in a little while the whole house roars. . . . People that have worked for me seldom want to leave me; I want them to feel we are all one family. I have many innovations in my studio for the benefit of my employees, all except the actors; I have no sympathy for the actors. The business has grown to such vast proportions, I feel sometimes as if it was getting beyond me."

Mr. Lubin is proud of Betzwood, the baronial estate of the late brewer Betz, of Philadelphia. It is located on the Schuylkill and adjoins the historic Valley Forge Park. It includes a great variety of woods, hills, dales, ponds, roads, huts, cottages and pretentious buildings. It covers five hundred acres and is wonderfully adapted for the requirements of the camera.

"I tell you," said he, "it is fine to see the leading lady getting familiar with the chickens and the poultry generally. The chickens know it when a stranger feeds them and don't act their very best. When the same party feeds them all the time they act more naturally and it lends a fine touch of realism to the picture. As a farmer I am passing rapidly into the advanced grade. I try to be at home in every branch of farming. The other day they asked me about the kind of potatoes I wanted to have planted. I said, 'I like the big ones.' 'Ah,' said the potato man, 'you mean the blue ones.' 'Yes, yes'; I said, 'the blue ones.' I hope it will all turn out right."

Mr. Lubin, who had just returned from the old country, had gathered much interesting knowledge of conditions abroad, especially in the land of the Kaiser.

"Films over there," said the young old man, "live longer than here. There is not much doing in this country with films over thirty days old. It's different over there. A good film lives a long time. There are no continuous performance houses the way we have them here. The motion picture theater is conducted more like a real theater. Yes, there is plenty of censorship over there, but it's intelligent as a rule. Why, they show pictures over there that the police would stop here in a minute."

Mr. Lubin believes in going through life with the least friction possible. Those that have followed his career will bear witness that he is forbearing, considerate and yielding. Himself of a happy disposition, even now buoyant with or without the "u" he likes to see others around him in a similar frame of mind and it delights him to think that he is the cause of others being cheerful and contented. People may and do differ about the merits of the Lubin pictures, but there can be no two opinions about the Lubin philosophy. Let us sum it up in the charming words of the poet:

"Grow old along with me
"The Best is yet to be
"The last of life, for which the first was made
. . . ."

HIGH SCHOOL WITH PICTURE THEATER.

In New York a new high school has just opened which cost a quarter of a million dollars and is said to be the finest school building in the world. A leading journal asks: "Will it do the best work in the world, and turn out the best high school graduates in the world? If so, it will be worth the cost. If not, why not? Looking over a description of this building we find it has a theater attachment, with all modern appliances and conveniences (including a moving picture machine, without which it could not be spoken of as complete). It is reasonable to expect great things from scholars upon whom the authorities have lavished so much besides their courses kinematographically easier, more explicit, and more thorough. These highly favored scholars have a great, but not a burdensome responsibility resting upon them, and no one will take a keener interest in their success than The Moving Picture World, which sees in this building the realization of many hopes, and a great example for other authorities to follow.

SIMPLEX FOR UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI.

The University of Missouri, of Columbia, Mo., has just purchased a Simplex projector, through the Kansas City Machine & Supply Company, 813 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo. The number of high-class educational institutions and theatrical houses which have recently purchased the Simplex projector speaks very well for that make of machine.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E SINN

FROM Albany Oregon: "In the issue of Jan. 25th, of the Moving Picture World I read your opinion of drummers and their effects for the picture. You seem to regard them as of not much consequence in the making of a picture realistic.

"I have seen photo-plays in the Eastern houses, and the way they are worked—usually with an orchestra; also in the West where they are worked with a picture pianist and a good drummer with an air cabinet costing all the way from three hundred to two thousand dollars.

"Until recently the West was far ahead of the East even in regard to photo-play houses devoted exclusively to pictures. Here in the West the pianist plays to and with the picture, improvising, "faking" and playing from memory. The drummer has a compressed air outfit that makes trains, auto's, motor boats, in fact here they make any effect in the picture—not loud and blaring but modulated according to the size of the house. In Portland, Oregon, there is one air outfit that I know of owned (as they always are) by the drummer, which is insured for $1800. In this small town there are three houses, two of them using drummers and paying out (both houses for drummers and pianists) about one hundred dollars per week for their music and not working matinees.

"You may not think much of the drummer and his effects, but if you could step into the People's Theater, Portland (Oregon) and hear one show played and compare it with an orchestra playing pictures I think you would agree with me.

"As for effects not making the picture, you've got to show me. I've been to Sedalia Missouri and acquired the habit. Thanking you for at least reading this I beg to remain, Sincerely; A Drummer with an air cabinet."

Well, I've read your letter; now honestly, did you read mine. You say you did, but did you? My comments were upon a letter from a Massachusetts correspondent criticising some Boston picture houses. You are evidently in favor of using correct sound effects. Are you finding fault with me for opposing those which are "noisy, silly and incorrect?" Do you uphold the fellow who imitates a horse "trotting on asphalt pavement when it is plain the horses are on soft or sandy soil?" I don't believe you do, else why buy an expensive outfit including an "air cabinet." I still maintain that, generally speaking, the sound effect man has not advanced in the same ratio with his co-adjutor the picture pianist; there are not so many good or even careful players among the drummers as among the pianists. If all the sound effect men in your part of the country are above criticism they are to be congratulated, but in the east and middle west they are made up of good, bad and indifferent. I repeat "the sound effect idea, with many is practically the same now as it was in its crude beginning." And so it is.

Speaking of the "air cabinet," the first compressed air machine as applied to sound effects was invented and perfected by Wm. E. King of Chicago, some seven or eight years ago and has been in use at the Orpheum Theater (Chicago) since that house has been a picture theater. "Billy" King should have patented his idea; it would have brought him as much fame as has his popular "three-in-one" drum and bell rack.

There are a number of picture theaters in Chicago where the sound effects are rendered in a careful manner. Mr. King and Mr. Provan at the Orpheum have long made this branch a feature of the orchestral accompaniment to their pictures.

There are some pianists who are not yet out of the wilderness. One of them had "The Resurrection" to maltreat, slander and otherwise disfigure. For the two scenes of Russian Dancers he played "Every Body's Doing It" and "Every Body Two-step," and at the meeting in the prison, "When You Waltz With Me." Can you beat it?

Fred Bergh, leading operator of the Star Theater, St. Charles, Ill., called at The World office last week and purchased the latest Motion Picture Handbook, which is in great demand at the Chicago office. There are four employees at the Star who are able to operate the machine. They also serve in other capacities. Mr. Bergh and John Oleson are the regular operators. Peter Allenman is the owner and manager of the Star, which is showing to fine business. The admission is 10 cents, and three or four reels are used daily, according to whether an act of vaudeville is used or not. Licensed service, furnished by the G. F. Company's branch at 429 South Wabash, is used.

That Fire Scare.

F. M. McCLINTIC, of the Park Row Theater, New York City, has sent to Mayor Gaynor a letter apropos of the recent panic in a Houston Street theater in which two persons were killed and others injured in a senseless rush for the main entrance while the fire exits were ignored. Mr. McClintic points out that the papers have a pleasant habit of referring to film fires as "explosions," thus engendering in the minds of the audience a feeling of fear. To offset this he suggests to the already troubled city magistrate an announcement reproduced below:

PATRONS
SHOULD REMEMBER THAT NO PLACE OF AMUSEMENT IS FOOL PROOF.
Your safety depends greatly on
YOUR OWN COOLNESS AND GOOD SENSE, no matter how much we may safeguard you.
NOTE THE EXITS
on entering any place of amusement and REMEMBER
FILMS DO NOT EXPLODE.
They FLASH and BURN RAPIDLY, but are no more dangerous than so much burning paper.
EVERY MOTION PICTURE THEATER IN NEW YORK CITY
is provided with a
SOLID ASBESTOS FIREPROOF BOOTH
from which pictures are projected.
Every opening to these booths is covered by an asbestos shutter, fit in a groove and while pictures are being shown these shutters are suspended above the openings by a thin cord.
ANY BLAZE WITHIN THE BOOTH MUST SEVER THIS THIN TWINE BEFORE ANY FIRE COULD REACH OUTSIDE. WHEN THE CORD IS PARTED THE SHUTTERS DROP AUTOMATICALLY, CONFINING THE CONFLAGRATION WITHIN, POSITIVELY.
CONSEQUENTLY THERE IS NO DANGER to the public from film fires through EXPLOSIONS
as they have been led to believe through erroneous newspaper reports.
The Exits from this Theater are
ON PARK ROW
and
THEATER ALLEY,
indicated by Red Lights.
ALL DOORS OPEN OUT, and THERE IS ABSOLUTELY NOTHING TO IMPEDE YOUR PROGRESS IN REACHING THE OPEN STREETS.
Make up your minds, therefore, not to become excited under any circumstances.
KEEP COOL. THEREIN IS SAFETY.

Too Long.

We think that this lecture is too long. For a long time past Mr. Richardson has offered in his Department the only, absolutely the only solution of the fire panic problem, in so far as it concerns an actual fire. His solution is simple in the extreme. He advocates the employment of a competent operator and the connection of the operating room (do you notice we did not say "booth?"—F. R.) with the open air by means of an air duct large enough to carry off the products of combustion. Up in Maine, not so awfully long ago, four thousand feet of film went up in smoke and the first thing the audience knew about it was when the manager announced that as the film was all burned up he could not complete the performance. The operator used to run the film on the floor because the take-up was working badly. When he had the four reels through he would rewind and run again. This time he threw a carbon stump on the floor before he started to rewind and so the audience for the last show had to go home.

The large duct beats the announcement a thousand miles in preventing a panic. If four reels can be completely consumed—also part of the operator's trousers—and the audience know nothing, there is no chance for a panic, and no announcement is needed, but if you do make an announcement keep it shorter than Mr. McClintic's by 90 per cent.

Make It Brief.

It should be remembered that the Houston Street panic occurred in a district where the audience is composed largely of Italians, Hebrews, Hungarians and Poles, many of whom are but recently landed. No announcements can make them fool proof no matter how fireproof the house may be nor how commodious the exits. But where announcements can serve, keep them short. Make ten slides rather than one or two long ones. That long announcement is all right for a program, but for the slides keep it short. We suggest some lines that may serve:

"Film doesn't explode. It burns. It's the only thing in the projection room that can burn."

"If someone yells fire, don't run. Laugh! The fire can't hurt you. It's in a fireproof room."

"You don't have to be afraid of fire, but of the fool who yells 'Fire.' He makes the trouble."

"You're not afraid of a fire in a stove. Our projection room is safer than a stove. Iron and asbestos lined."

Run one of these, or something like it between each reel every day and you'll have the audience used to it. If you can talk get up and tell the audience about it now and then. Print it on your program, tell it to the people you talk to as they enter or pass out, but always treat the problem as a joke. Make light of it. If you have the right sort of room it is a joke to you—except when you have to settle for the film.

Jacksonville Knows How.

The best room we've seen is in the Prince Theater, Jacksonville. There the room is very large, iron lined and provided with a fire escape well. At the time of our visit there was an iron ladder, but O. P. Hall, the manager, told us he was installing a brass sliding pole instead. In the event of a fire the operator trips the shutters, hits the pole and goes into the office to tell Mr. Hall how it happened while the fire burns out and the audience wonders why the picture stopped.

A Good Suggestion.

Mr. McClintic's last suggestion is the best. He suggests that the Fire Prevention Bureau get in touch with some real film men and formulate regulations. That's what counts; the combination of practical knowledge of fire fighting and practical knowledge of picture conditions. The trouble with most of these fire regulation ordinances is that it is theory on one side or the other.

Given a trained fireman and an experienced showman or two and the whole matter could be settled in a week and settled for the whole country, but if a fireman makes the rules the exhibitors have a justifiable kick and if the exhibitors frame the regulations the firemen can find flaws.

Coming Edisons.

Every now and then the Edison studios turn out something exceptional in the way of a comedy idea in comedy action. "After a Welsh Rabbit" is one of these. It's the old Rarebit Fiend idea, but it's something wholly novel. Northrup eats the melted cheese and puts his feet on the fender. Then he dreams that he dies and goes to Heaven. He does not pass the pearly gates but goes below where he meets his friends and finally has his feet warmed up. He wakes to find that his feet are done through, so he takes them down from the fender and tells his wife of the dream. It came out the 19th. "The Minister's Temptation," dated for the 22nd, tells of a minister who applies to his own family's wants the money given him for charity. His conscience prompts him to make public confession and he is absolved from blame. If you remember "The New Church Carpet," you can get an idea of the effectiveness of this. It is a real sermon on charity and you don't realize the sermon part in your interest in the story.

"A Will and a Way" is the "What Happened to Mary" story for this month. A "real" fire and a fight on a sixty-foot ladder give sensation to the narrative which is one of the most exciting of the series. The date is February 28th. "The Ranch Owner's Love Making," released the 25th, is a mixed East and West story with a new plot. One of the early products of the Western section, it gives an idea of what that company will do. It also offers a variant from the usual Western stuff, though with a Western locale for most of the scenes.

Must Be Japanese.

M. Whitmoyer must have the Japanese idea of things in his letter of recent date. Whitmoyer and Geer have houses in Glendale and Upland, and Mr. Whitmoyer writes:

> After months of hesitation I have, at last, gotten together sufficient courage to send in a few specimens of the very unpretentious program which I get out weekly. I know full well that it will be open to considerable adverse comment, but that is exactly what I (and incidentally the printer) want. But please do not jump on me too hard in the matter of outside advertising, for you know us little fellows have to pick up every cent in sight.

On top of that he sends in a trio of very presentable programs. He must know that they are pretty well done for their size and he should know that this department always has stood in favor of the self-supporting program if the outside advertising does not eat up the space the house really needs for itself.

The program is a four-pager with pages 5½ x 9½. One-third of each page is given the house, the first carrying the line

THINGS WORTH WHILE.
What they are and when to see them.

The name of the house with city and state follows and then the announcement of the feature reel of the week. Inside the advertisments run two to the page, top and bottom, but the programs for the week, three in number, are run straight across the two pages, making a marked distinction between the program and the advertising. The back page carries another advertisement top and bottom with a fuller announcement of the big subject in the center. The composition and display are good and about the only suggestion we can offer in this line would be a fuller type for the word "program" over each section of the bill. A bolder, plainer letter would be better.

Chatty Chats.

Three reels are run for two days each and plenty of space is allowed in which to chat intimately about their points. It seems to be adapted from the press material, but it does not read like a quotation. The back page talks are distinctly good. We reproduce two:

> Have you ever stopped to figure out that you were getting pretty good value for your money when you could see such a play as Shakespeare's "As You Like It," with several of the country's brightest stars in the leading roles, for ten cents? Rose Coghlan, alone, has been for years one of the best known and most featured leading women in the legitimate drama, playing nothing but the largest cities, and certainly never appearing at ten cent prices.
> There's no reason why the picture should not be fully as enjoyable as the stage production, for to make up for the human voice—the only thing lost—the picture makers have the immense advantage of using real natural backgrounds—geting entirely away from the artificiality of the stage, and setting the action among the natural scenic views most to be desired. "As You Like It" will surely prove a great treat to anyone who enjoys Shakespeare, for to say that it is well produced is putting it mildly, indeed.
> "DOPE ON THE GOOD ONES."
> They say that "Variety is the spice of life"—and everyone agrees. Surely, then, this week's bill is well seasoned, for it contains everything from crazy, ridiculous comedies, like "A Well Washed House" to such a masterpiece as "The Lady of the Lake." Surely there's something in the list that will please any kind or condition of taste, and the best of it is that each program is greatly diversified in itself. You won't see a program that hasn't one or more pictures on it of some kind that you like.
> "The Escape from Bondage" was so well liked by everyone who expressed an opinion to us that we're going to run the entire series, just as fast as we can—probably one a week. You'll find each one of them is more interesting than the one preceding, and if their success in other places—Los Angeles particularly—is any criterion, you'll all be mighty interested in them before long. It seems as though everyone in Los Angeles is crazy about "Mary"—every picture theater that shows the series is packed to the doors each time it announces one; and the news stands can't supply the demand for the papers in which the story appears. Must be something good about them, eh?
> "The Count of Monte Cristo"—in three reels—Monday and Tuesday, February 3 and 4.

Mr. Whitmoyer writes that he finds it pays him best to cut out the blood and thunder stuff and the cheap vaudeville and stick to good reels. We think it would pay most houses best to do the same thing. Sensation doesn't pay in the long run.

Had a Surprise.

Here's a characteristic letter from S. E. Wall, of the Opera House, West Jefferson, Ohio. He says:

> In starting this letter I hesitated and came near consigning it to the waste basket after filling in the date line, fearing that you might think I wanted to obtain a corner on The Advertising for Exhibitors Department, but after reading Brother Bunnel's experience, of Toppenish, Wash., February 1st, page 457, I felt that a little stunt that I pulled off last week might be of some value to small town managers.
> Last week, on Thursday night I ran "When Uncle Sam Was Young" (you will note that's no first run or second run either), but on Tuesday I went to the Superintendent of Schools and told him of this two-reel subject depicting the Revolutionary period, explaining that I thought it would be of more than ordinary interest to the school children, especially those in history and told him that I extended an invitation through him and his teachers to all pupils in the history classes to witness this production, free, as my specially invited guests, no tickets being required of them, but so far as possible to have them accompany their parents or some grown person in charge and let each child state what grade he or she is in at school as they pass in at the door.
> Well, I rather expected quite a bunch, but I never dreamed that a town of 1,200 could produce so many historians as hauled their parents, big brothers, uncles, etc., in to see how our Uncle Samuel looked when a youngster.
> The announcement made by the teachers had just the effect that I figured it would have—it got the kids' curiosity aroused, whether he was in history or not, and they talked about it at home and got the parents in such a state of enthusiasm that they were more than anxious to "take the children" and the final result was, in spite of all the free admissions, the receipts were about double what they usually are on Thursday night, and every body, the kids in particular, loud in their praise of the program.
> The enclosed newspaper clipping taken from the local paper is a sample of my method of newspaper advertising. I prepare the copy and it is usually given space on the "local news" page, for which I extend the courtesy of the house to the editor and his family.

We think that the informality of the rules was one of the causes of success. The children were not given tickets. They simply told their school and grade. They were not required to bring their parents. They were merely invited to come and went home full of the fact that they did not have to have a ticket to go to the theater. There is a lot in a free pass, but a lot more in not even needing a pass.

Keeping Going.

When the Park Photoplay House opened in Nutley, N. J., we spoke of their copper plate invitations to the opening, but Arthur P. Dickinson isn't trusting to an engraved card. He's doing all he can to get the very best people and hold them. We find his letter so interesting that we are running it in full even if he did commit the unpardonable newspaper crime of writing on both sides of the paper. He says:

> I have been an exhibitor only seven weeks and was absolutely green at the business at that time. I feel pretty nearly as green yet, but have had some of the rough bark rubbed off. I am doing very nicely and thanks to The World in general and your Department in particular, we are increasing our regular patronage and getting more on our specials.
> We are opposite the school Auditorium where the Board of Education has a series of lectures on Friday nights, once a month—excellent lectures and free. Last week they had Mr. Avis, "The Bird Man," with his violin reproductions of bird notes and fine slides. I watched for Mr. Avis' coming, met him on his arrival in town, took him to the Photoplay House and showed him Wild Birds in their Haunts and Sea Birds in their Haunts, which I had secured for my program that night. I also told him that we had used an announcement slide for his lecture for the past three evenings. As a result of all this he told Mr. Kinsley, of the Board of Education, about it and Mr. Kinsley gave a splendid announcement of our exhibition after the lecture. A large crowd came over after the lecture to see the pictures in motion and—best of all—these people were the very ones we are trying to get into our house. Some of them stated that they had never been in a motion picture theater before. Many of them have become regular patrons.
> I am sending a copy of each of the town papers. The Bulletin man says that our program is news, as it is read every week. The Sun does not print our program but has given us write-ups several times and I think that they will soon "see the light," for several persons have told me that they take the Bulletin instead of the Sun now to get the news about our house.
> Arthur Breese Proal will lecture on The Panama Canal, February 7th, on which night we shall have both the Edison and Pathe pictures of the Panama Canal (1911 and 1912). This fact the Board of Education is voluntarily announcing on their hand bills, besides which Mr. Proal has himself suggested that he add to his lecture a few remarks on the films in our house. I have been careful not to exploit Mr. Proal by too much or too lurid advertising, but he knows the sort of crowd I shall have that night and how intensely all people are interested in this great engineering feat. I feel that we are particularly fortunate in being able to help the Board of Education in this work and appreciate greatly the high favor in which we are held by the Board.

Not So Green.

The two papers carry reports of a lecture on Tokio and the announcement of the coming lecture on the Canal. Both papers carry as part of this story the fact that the Photoplay House will have the Panama Canal pictures the same night. The Bulletin also gives the last column of the front page and a turn to the last page to the full weekly program of the house in a well-written running story.

We do not think that Mr. Dickinson is as green as he says he is. He's only seven weeks old as a manager, in fact, but some men are born managers, some have management thrust upon them and others never will attain management. Mr. Dickinson belongs to the former class, a first class manager, in fact. We know some men who would have fought the Board of Education lectures with sensational features, but that is no way to do things. Get in line with the Board. Be a part of their show. Then you won't have to fight them, but merely wait until the lecture is over to get the same people in your house.

Mr. Dickinson also sends a new wrinkle in a weekly program. It is a plain one-sheet 6¼ x 15 inches. The program itself is 4½ inches wide, but six small advertisements run down the left hand side at right angles to the paper. We'll bet Mr. Dickinson is publishing a magazine with colored inserts this time next year if he keeps up the pace.

An Australian Souvenir.

Out in Australia, where they do film matters very well indeed, J. D. Williams gave each of his kiddie patrons a gift book for Christmas. It is 24 pages and cover, well illustrated and contains a specially written story about a little girl who became a film star. We cannot imagine anything more appropriate for a gift for a film theater. It is an interesting story from a child's point of view, inculcates an interest in the films and inculcates also the right sort of interest. There is no advertising beyond a modest presentation notice and in every way it is typical of "J. D.," who does things right.

Of course having a circuit he can order in large quantities and so cut down the price, but even at that it was a generous souvenir; something that any child would be permitted to keep, and this, in its turn, makes it a lasting advertisement. Figuring that the average life of these books will be six months, it may be seen that even a reasonably high cost will yield a profit in returns.

Cameraphonelets.

We borrow from the various Cameraphone programs these items which should be of use to others. It would be a courtesy to credit the source:

> Motion Pictures created a new class of theater-goers, a new type of theater, and a new kind of acting and a new species of dramatic writing.
>
> Sympathetic old lady—"Tell me, little boy, what are you crying about?"
> Sniveling kid—"One of de Riley twins borrowed de nickel dat me mudder gave to pay me way into de Movie, and I don't know which one it was."
> Motion Pictures created a new class of theater-goers, a new type of theater, and a new kind of acting and a new species of dramatic writing.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

The Dinner.

DON'T hold back until the last minute on that Photoplay Dinner at the Taverne Louis Saturday, March 1. There is going to be a crowd of good people and you will want to be one of them. Here is about what the dinner will be like:

Deep Sea Oysters
Hors d'Oeuvre Varies
Consummé Lyonnaise
Stuffed Develed Crab
Broiled Chicken Sevillamine
Potatoes Saratoga
Salade Chiffoinade
Biscuit Glacé, Taverne
Petits fours Cheese
Coffee

That's a pretty big two dollar's worth in these days of the high cost of living, and you cannot afford to overlook such a bargain. Be there with your best girl, whether she is your wife or your sweetheart. It's going to be a regular time.

And please remember to send a stamped and addressed envelope with your remittance or in case you want to ask questions.

P. S. Do it now.

Marc Edmund Jones, head of our Chicago Circle, is coming on for the dinner.

That List.

Requests for the list of addresses in the past couple of weeks have not been filled as we have been waiting to get complete lists. We hope to have the lists go out by the time this is in print and apologize to those who have been kept waiting.

Talking Pictures.

Mr. Horace G. Plimpton Manager of Negative Production for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., answering our inquiry as to the market for scripts for the new talking pictures, is good enough to reply very fully and to the point. He writes:

> Answering your card, we are open for plots for Kinetophone work, this being the name used for the talking motion picture. I am enclosing a copy of a form letter which we are sending out and which indicates in a general way the requirements. I would suggest that in anything which you may see fit to print on this subject you do not in any way minimize the difficulties. We are beginning to be flooded with plots and I am sure in a short time it will be just as bad as it is now with the regular picture scenarios. Therefore it occurs to me that it would be just as well to let the public understand that on the whole it is pretty hard work.

In talking pictures all of the dialogue and all of the leading business should be indicated and carefully timed. The requirement that the length shall not exceed six minutes and that the action shall be held to one scene will operate against the novice and, speaking more plainly than Mr. Plimpton has, we would suggest to the beginner to keep out. The talking pictures at present are for the trained writer. These are the rules laid down by the Edison company:

> The following information will guide those who wish to submit plays for the Edison Kinetophone (talking-motion pictures):
> 1. Each play should be figured to run six minutes, making due allowance for the time taken in movement or incidental business.
> 2. The characters should be few and the action laid in one set.
> 3. Either dramas or comedies will be considered for acceptance provided they are clean and free from offense. Great care should be exercised to avoid infringement upon any copyrighted work, either story or play.
> 4. A stamped and self-addressed envelope should accompany each plot.
> 5. The Company will exercise due care in handling and returning plots, but distinctly disclaims any liability for their safe keeping or return. If sent they are entirely at the author's risk.
> 6. Prices vary in accordance to the Company's estimate of the value of the plot. The author may, if he wishes, affix his own price, in which case it will be considered on that basis.
> 7. Address all plots to the Edison Studio, Bedford Park, Bronx, New York City.

Writing for Lubin.

The Lubin Manufacturing Company announces that Emmett Campbell Hall is now writing exclusively for that company. The Lubin company put on many of Mr. Hall's earliest efforts, but he also found favor with other companies, particularly Biograph and Selig, one of his earliest Biograph hits being The House With the Closed Shutters. In future he will give all of his work to the Lubin company.

Keep Off the Hobby.

We saw a script the other day that was written by a suffragette lady, and she rode her hobby so hard and fast that she foundered the story instead of the horse. Now and then we get a moralization from a minister and we can imagine the sort of author who sends out the temperance plays.

When you get to be rich, so rich that you can start your own company, you can write some sorts of plays with the certainty that they will be put on. Meantime, there is perhaps a small market for temperance plays attractively done and the various sermonizings, but they must be right. Don't put the sugar coating of the pill on the inside and use that to smear the bad tasting medicine on. Follow the usual practice and make the story so attractive that the reader (and so the spectator) will forget that there is mandrake and aloes and blue mass under the sugary coating. You'll get your argument over better and it will stick, but if you throw off all disguise and write a frankly temperance, suffragette, anti-kissing or other story you'll bear down so hard on your theories that the story does not get half a chance.

First of all you must have a story, a vital, gripping story. If, after that, you can add your preachment, well and good. But if you are so obsessed by your pet fad that you must drag it out and shake it all over the script, do not try to sell that sort of script.

Write the sort of script that will sell or do not try to sell it. Do not waste your time and stamps sending around a story that is nine parts theory and one part story.

Punch.

A correspondent suggests that we write a story about putting in the punch—the much-talked-of punch—using a recent film as an object lesson. We've said a lot about punches, and we don't know any particular release that a decent percentage of the readers of this department are likely to have seen. We'd rather take another example.

Let's suppose a story of a dog that saves its master's child. Later on there are some small puppies. The master drowns the puppies. That's a story of every-day life—a canine tragedy that hourly occurs. It is sad, but necessary. It lacks punch. Let's put in the punch.

The dog has saved the child. Later on there are puppies. The dog is permitted to keep two. On these she lavishes an affection that was intended by nature for the whole litter. Her master is a surgeon, and, more or less in the interest of humanity, he vivisects one of the puppies. Day by day the poor brute watches in vain for the puppy, until it digs the poor, mangled body from the hurried grave into which it had been thrown when it had served its usefulness to science. She risked her life to save her master's child, and in return her own puppy is cruelly slaughtered.

If you do not believe the punch is there, read the story—one of the most appealing in the English language. The punch lies in the contrasts in treatment and the cruelty of the little dog's death.

Any librarian will locate the story for you. It is a classic.

Punch, in a word, is the taking of a commonplace incident and lifting it out of the ordinary.

A clown performs in the circus ring. That is his usual occupation. The idea lacks punch. His grandchild lies dying in the dressing room. He plays his part because he must. The idea has some punch. But suppose that the child is dangerously ill and crying for him. Suppose that in capering about the ring he comes face to face with a man in the audience—the man who married his daughter—a worthless, dissipated chap, whose desertion of the mistreated woman practically wrought her death. The clown has sworn to kill the man on sight. The man does not recognize him under the layer of white. Here is the situation: If he kills the man he will avenge his daughter's wrongs and go to jail. He is willing to suffer the extreme penalty if he can win his revenge. But if he kills and is taken to jail, he cannot go to the little child whose constant cry is for him. It may—it very probably will—mean her death. Shall he take his revenge, and kill the child, or shall he bury his hatred for the sake of the little one? That is Punch with a capital initial.

You've explained the abandonment. You've shown the man whom the clown has sworn to kill. You set him aside for a moment. You show the illness of the child, the anxiety of the grandfather. You have been told in a leader that his failure to come at her cry may mean her death. Then you show the ring and you see the clown working. You show the man coming. The suspense starts. You tell your story in such a way that the audience wonders which will win, revenge or love of the child. You keep them guessing as long as you can keep hold of the situation. The clown moves about the ring. He picks up some property that will serve as a club. He drops it again. There is an impalement act on. The knives and battle axes tempt him again. He catches up a knife. You flash back to the child. She has reached the crisis of the disease. In a moment the balance between life and death will be turned for good or evil. You flash back to the ring. The clown has the knife and is stealing across the space between himself and his victim. In the dressing tent the child cries his name. In the ring he is almost ready to strike. The child wins. He throws down the knife and rushes out of the ring. The child is fretful, feverish. The physician looks grave. The clown rushes in to answer the call. He takes her in his arms and she sinks into a peaceful sleep. The fever has broken. She will recover. A life has been saved, another spared and a victory won.

The clown performing his daily task is commonplace. The clown and the sick child is more or less commonplace, because done often. The new situation, if written with proper tensity and played the same way, has added the punch.

Perhaps H. A. B. can get from this some idea of what the punch is. If he cannot we do not think that his suggestion of the dissection of four or five photoplays will help much.

Punch, in a word, is the taking of a commonplace incident and adding to it such dramatic or comedy factors as will render it extraordinary.

Subjects.

Suppose that you went into a bakery where on the counter were piles of bread, crisp, clean loaves, delicately browned and still fresh from the ovens. And suppose that beside these tempting piles were other piles of bread, sodden, sour loaves, tombs for a small army of weevils, dark with the dirt of an unwholesome oven floor and bearing the traces of innumerable flies.

Which pile would you make your selection from?

If you were in the desert with a scanty handful of flour and no help in sight, the musty dough, half baked, would seem a feast, but with good bread alongside would you pick the unwholesome loaf?

It's pretty much the same way with photoplays. Lots of times the sodden story of crime, the sour tale of vice is taken because nothing better offers in the desert of unoriginality, because an editor seeks to make a "strong" story better than none at all, but why not let the editor get a chance at the really refreshing tale of decent people and decent things. Decent lives offer no such strong contrasts as a rule as the lives of those of the underworld, but a story does not have to reek of crime and bloodshed to be interesting Write some of the other kind, not namby-pamby stuff, but wholesome, vigorous action. The story of a man who gets married, raises a family and dies is not thrilling, but take the sacrifices of the father and mother for that family they have raised. If you write with your heart you can make these little things big, you can invest them with a charm that the slaughter of a dozen desperadoes will not possess.

We think that most editors would take the decent stories if they were interesting stories in preference to those of crime and degradation, but in default of lively action, fast and hard riding, the boiling up of the elemental evil, you must make your appeal with heart interest.

It is a great thing to be able to lift the audiences out of their seats with a big, gripping melodrama, but it is a far more creditable thing to send them home with a tear in their eyes while a smile hovers about their lips.

It's a lot easier to slap in the sensation and let if cover up the fact that you are an incompetent, but an artist takes a delight in a bit of work well done and you'll find far more satisfaction in a good story than a bad one. Any trained dramatist will tell you that the strongest appeal to the emotions is mother love; not the claptrap "dear old mother" stuff of the vaudevilles and the cheap drama, but the big, quiet gripping stuff that chokes your throat and sends you away from the theater moved beyond the point of applause.

Try one sometime. If you can make good you'll know you are something more than a writer. You are an artist. You may not reach the great success in a day, but when that day does come you'll be far more proud of your achievement than of a record strewn with cowboy murders and Indian butcheries.

Spacing.

Here it comes again! A correspondent wants to know whether single or double spacing is required in photoplay. One book he has advocates single spacing and another the double space. To repeat what we have repeatedly repeated, most editors like double spacing and most directors like single spacing. Some editors like single spacing and some directors like double spacing.

It does not matter a particle in the long run. It is the one and only essential that this single or double spacing carry a real story. If this be done it could even be written in triple spacing and find a sale. These minor details are important, but they should not be made so big as to obscure the need of a really good story to start the spacing with.

Not Much.

Miss Helen Merritt offers flatly the unique suggestion that editors cut out those who are hopeless from the ranks of the photoplaywrights. She says:

> I have been listening in silence to the plaints of the photoplaywrights regarding the sowing broadcast of worthless scripts, and its probable consequent reaction on the free lances. Now that I have earned a right to be heard, I want to suggest that the editors have it in their own hands to protect themselves. It will call for a sacrifice of the inherent editorial politeness to be sure, but in the interests of all concerned, it might pay. If any editor, or all editors would be better, could be brought to give a frank opinion of any submitted script which was absolutely worthless, some of the would, but can't be, writers of scenarios might be so discouraged that they would find other outlet for their talents. Personally, if I sent out any scenario which was so bad that it could not possibly find a place, I should be grateful to the editor who would point out to me its utter worthlessness, and I should immediately destroy the MS. because I am pretty sure the scenario editors know what they are talking about, else they would not be holding their jobs. There may be writers who would resent this frank treatment, but it is the only way to purge the profession of deadwood, and the sooner it is adopted the better. If you went to a surgeon to have a limb cut off, would you not prefer that he do the job quickly and conclusively, rather than that he should make dainty little cuts with frequent intervals between them, on the plea that he hated to hurt you?

Miss Merritt may not know it, but she echoes the suggestions of scores of others who have written more or less to the same effect, though not so completely. There are several reasons why the idea is not feasible.

In the first place no editor will wholly condemn a script, because he does not know when a writer may work out his own salvation. We have seen several writers grow from absolute incompetence to certainty with practice, and though their number is pitifully few as compared with those who never make progress, there is always the thought that perhaps the writer of the moment may be among those worth saving. Most editors remember the time when their own scripts were none too good.

In the second place the editor is not hired to conduct any part of a correspondence school. He willingly gives help to those who seem to be deserving of help, but he knows very well that any effort to educate a certain type of writer is useless. We have seen letters from men who should know better in which the editor was scored because he gave one or two hints. We have our own vivid recollections of certain letters that followed our well meant advice to give up writing.

The only way is to let the incompeten die a violent death of literary old age. They get tired after a time and drop out. It is the only way to get rid of them.

But no editor is going to do the surgical act and worry over ten page letters to himself, to say nothing of those the boss gets. Not much!

Inquiries.

NOTE—Replies cannot be sent by mail. State name of character. Do not ask for "leads" or "that man." Addresses cannot be given here, but a list of studio addresses will be sent for a stamped and self-addressed envelope. Only questions of general interest will be answered. Replies cannot be repeated.

J. A. M.—The Kay-Bee Identifier writes "If J. A. M. would be a little more exact it would help a lot. There was no colonel in When Lincoln Paid, nor any Confederate soldier outside the crowd of Confederates in the battle scenes. Probably he means Charles Elder, who was cast as General Porter, a Confederate officer. William Raymond Myers is with Universal (Bison-101), and had a leading part in Sheridan's Ride, released January 28th." Miss Victory Bateman was the boy's mother in The Psychology of Fear. Other answers later.

BUBBLES.—A company can "play anything, as stage companies do," for they are the same players, but all players hold more or less to one specialty and a "character old man" does not generally double with "juvenile leads." Dramatic players specialize in comedy or dramatic work as do the photoplayers. Different companies have different rules applying to the length of leaders. Some allow more film than others.

UNIVERSAL JIMMY.—It would take three clerks and a staff of detectives to keep track of all the players. Read this paper regularly and you'll know about all we know on the subject.

I. N. P.—Pathe reply in a later issue. Miss Dorothy Davenport, Al Ernest Garcia and Herbert Rawlinson were respectively Anita, Vincent and Andreas in Our Lady of the Pearls. You do not correctly name the character in Prompted by Jealousy.Miss Lillian Leighton was the detective's wife, if that is what you mean. Resurrection is outlawed.

A. M. T.—Miss Ormi Hawley has not left Lubin. We do not know the other Miss Hawley. The cast sheet for the release is not yet in.

M. P.—If your characters are named Jones and Smith keep calling them Jones and Smith all through the play. The director casts a man to play Jones and another to play Smith. He will call them such all through the play. They are Jones and Smith all through the play. Why call them anything else? Tell in a leader about the assumed names, but they are still Jones and Smith and not Brown and Green.

A. A. B.—If you would read the Moving Picture World you would know that Karl Coolidge is in California. And why do you send scripts one day and write two days later to ask if they got there? He cannot look over several hundred letters just to satisfy your request. Send a return postal with the scripts and request that that be returned at once.

M. E.—Miss Marian Lee Patterson sends word that Selig used three camels in Three Wise Men.

COPE.—Vitagraph made Macbeth so long ago they want to forget it in these days of high art production. Frank Lanning was still with Pathe Western, the last we heard.

F. E. C.—The Identifier does not place the instructress in The High Cost of Reduction, but surmises that your surmise that she is a vaudeviller may be correct.

R. W. M.—It is against our practice to divulge names and addresses without permission.

H. S. M.—Sorry we can give you no information on that topical. Watch the two calendars of releases.

L. W. P.—Love Will Find a Way (Powers), Sept. 4, 1912. Their Masterpiece, Jan. 13, 1913. Other data lacking.

ORIENT.—Do not find the character cast by Lubin. E. J. Phillips was the Father in Private Smith. The Power Behind the Throne was released March 12, 1912. Through Flaming Gates, March 3, 1912. Sisters, June 24, 1912.

A. T. B.—All scripts must be submitted to the New York office. If they tell you they do not want comedies we would take their word for it. Looks from here like a polite way of telling you your stuff doesn't suit their ideas, since we know they are hustling for comedy stuff.

H. F.—Miss Marie Weirman was the blind girl in The Guiding Light. Her address is in care of the company.

C. S.—You have the cart before the horse. She was with Melies, then with Essanay. The editor courteously declines discussions as to hair. Being bald himself he remembers the adage about people in glass houses.

RICHARD ROE.—Miss Grace Lewis was the girl in The Best Man Wins. There are several feminine portraits on the "left hand side" of the Vitagraph advertisement. Mark the one you mean and send it to the Vitagraph. Miss Ethel Clayton was the girl in The Wonderful One Horse Shay. Please cultivate the habit of naming your characters instead of asking for "the girl."

N. N.—See this issue for talking pictures. It will not hurt the photoplay end if you can write good plays. List very soon.

C. A. C. S.—Miss Flo La Badie was Mary in The Star of Bethlehem.

R. L. R.—(a) Mack Sennett; (b) Ford Sterling; (c) Miss Alice Davenport.

C. A. C.—In His Sense of Duty, Charles Elder was the Colonel and his wife Miss Eugenie Forde. Their daughter was Miss Mildred Harris and Capt. Stanton was Richard Stanton. In A Bluegrass Romance, J. B. Sherry was the father, Ray Myers the son and Joe King Lieut. Burr. The Identifier does not know the private in the first named play.

D. D.—In For the Cause, Richard Stanton was Harry, Ray Myers Jack, and Miss Helen Case the fiancee. Miss Grandin has been with the Bison-101 for some months though she has not yet appeared in a release by them. Mr. Stanton is with Kay-Bee and has appeared in all recent releases. We do not know the Indians.

J. H. F.—In The Informer, most of the cast has been already given. Miss Gertrude Norman was the colored mammy and Jack Smith her son. Mrs. Edward Kimball was Susie's Mother in Susie to Susanna.

INTERESTED.—Mrs. Costello did not appear in The Vengeance of Durand.

H. F. W.—John Halliday was the leading man in The Shepherd's Flute.

ANXIOUS WRITER.—Send the script back with the proper synopsis explaining your reason for submitting a second time.

L. L.—Harold Lockwood was the husband in A Little Child Shall Lead Them. In Miss Aubrey's Love Affair, Miss Lillian Hayward and Herbert Rawlinson had the parts you name. You may have seen by now that Mr. Bushman is lecturing the pictures.

M. W.—Practically no company will read a pen-written script no matter how legible it may be. List of addresses soon.

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

OTICE: Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here ONCE PER YEAR, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will NOT be re-published. The mail address of the secretary should be included on each list, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Moving Picture and Projecting Machine Operators' Union.

Auxiliary Branch of L. U. No. 14, I. A. T. S. E., P. O. Box 564, Youngstown, Ohio, President Tod Kelty, Vice-President Albert Diana, Secretary-Treasurer, George Doelfer, Business Agent, Joseph Steadman, Sergeant-at-Arms, Frank Cook. Reports show organization in excellent financial condition and prospects for coming year good.

Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union 186, I. S. T. S. E., Springfield, Mass.

Offiers for 1913: President, Edwin B. Webber; Vice-President, Thomas Donnelly; Secretary-Treasurer, Wm. Clark; Business Agent, Harry A. Cooley; Sergeant-at-Arms, Benj. G. Hull; Executive Board, John Gateler, Samuel Small and Wm. Albert Lewis.

From Mr. Nicholas Power.

Mr. Nicholas Power, President of the Nicholas Power Company, and one of the best known men in the business writes as follows:

> Mr. F. H. Richardson,
> Dear Sir: Beg to acknowledge receipt of your handbook which reached me several days since. After carefully perusing same I feel called upon to commend you upon its publication. The information contained within its pages will not only be found very valuable to the operator, no matter how proficient he may consider himself, but there are also so very many pointers and excellent suggestions to the M. P. theater manager, or owner, that a copy of the book ought always to be kept on hand, that they may profit by the years of study and close attention you have given to the projection of motion pictures. May the demand for your present edition far exceed that of the first, which, in itself, was a very complete book of instruction and information. Wishing you all the success your efforts to improve projection, and the conditions of things pertaining thereto, so justly deserve, I am,
> Yours very truly,
> NICHOLAS POWER.

My only comment on this letter is that Mr. Power is one of our earliest pioneers in projection machine construction and designing, as well as one of the foremost inventors in projection machines and appliances. I therefore am indeed pleased that my efforts have met with his commendation and approval.

An Official With Sound Sense.

Mr. N. W. Reed, Inspecting Engineer Board of Fire Underwriters of the Pacific, who drafted the underwriter's rules recently criticised, and to whom I sent a copy of the new handbook at the request of an operator in southern California (Los Banos, I think it was), writes as follows:

> Book just received and am now reading different sections of it. I find it far the best I have seen anywhere. It expresses my own ideas on the subject much better than I myslf could have done. When I was writing our own pamphlet of rules on the picture machine I gave only those parts which could be complied with and, of course, would not object to a construction which is better than the one I suggested. In fact where the building is to be permanent, as a Class A theater building, we recommend a concrete operating room. I have also suggested, at times, that the operator's observation port be built so that it may be raised and lowered, but no one has, as yet, done so. Builders seem to stick to the same old methods, which makes it very inconvenient for the operator. Nothing would please me more than to have managers of moving picture theaters read your book. I also would like city inspectors to read it, for I find a great many of them are very narrow minded (amen)!!—Ed.) and do not seem to understand the fact that an operating room is built for a certain, definite purpose and if it does not fulfill that purpose it is worse than no operating room at all. If you are ever anywhere near where I am, do not fail to let me know as I certainly would like to meet you personally.

Aside from the satisfaction of knowing that Mr. Reed, who holds a very responsible position, approves of my work, I am more than pleased to be able to say that here is at least one official who is broad minded enough to admit that perhaps he can still learn some things. The average official, particularly the public official (servant) takes the position that what he does not know is not in the books. Usually, too, the less he really does know the more apt he is to take that position. The result is, insofar as applies to matters pertaining to operating room appliances and construction, that we have, on the various city and state law books, a jumbled hotch-potch of disconnected "laws" which for the most part but serve to set forth a deplorable lack of knowledge on the part of the lawmakers or the officials charged with formulating rules to govern such matters in their various cities or states. Bad as this state of affairs is, it has been greatly aggravated by the work of a committee of the National Board of Fire Underwriters who, judging by the work they turned out knew practically nothing whatever about the things they presumed to speak upon with authority. The committee did not even know the proper names of the operating appliances it tried to formulate laws to govern. And this marvelous "committee" had the superlative gall to formulate what the National Board of Fire Underwriters put out as a "model ordinance" for cities and villages to copy after in drafting local laws to govern motion picture operating room construction and appliances. I make bold to say that if the National Board of Fire Underwriters had more broad minded, well informed men like Mr. Reed, we would soon have greater respect for their rulings. Mr. Reed is quite right when he says that an improperly constructed operating room is worse than none at all. I will go even further than this and say that nine operating rooms out of every ten are worse than none at all, insofar as protection to the audience be concerned. The fancied security afforded by their fireproof walls tends to make operators careless—at least more so than they would be were there no operating room at all, and when trouble comes it is found that, while the walls may confine the actual blaze, they do NOT confine the smoke and the audience promptly piles up in a heap. Result: big headlines about women and children killed or injured in a moving picture theater. I again repeat that an operating room, to be safe in the sense of protecting the audience, (a) must have thoroughly fireproof walls; (b) have wall shutters which will close within three to four seconds of the starting of a film fire; (c) have a vent flue to the open air, with not less than 188 square inches of area, so as to be able, without the assistance of a fan, which may be shut down just at the wrong time, to convey all smoke to the outer air, thus preventing knowledge on the part of the audience of the existence of a fire. I wish to again commend and compliment Mr. Reed. He is the right man in the right place. He has things to learn, as we all have, but he is willing to learn them, which is more than can truthfully be said of the average official.

From St. Louis.

Mr. Roy Chalmers, Walnut Park, St. Louis, Mo., contributes the following:

> Have seen no news of our growing little village (village is good, St. Louis.—Ed.), in the department. I therefore have decided to let the brother Ops know that St. Louis is still on the map. Am working in a small show, in which I have a half interest. Business is great. Am running an Edison Model B, which is putting up a nice picture. Pull from 220 v. a. c. lines, through a Phillipsburg Economy Coil and it certainly cuts down the current bill (as against resistance coils, I suppose you mean.—Ed.). The light company compels us to pay a minimum of $20.00 per month, but we seldom use that much. Am getting an excellent light, but wish to improve, therefore "awsk" if you will reprint that bichromate of soda and acid solution.

Glad to hear from you. St. Louis was one of my old stamping grounds in days past and gone. Used to run an engine in there on the Wabash. Now see here, neighbor, it might take me an hour to root through back numbers and dig up that formula and I simply cannot spare the time, the more especially since it was tried out and pronounced of no value. If any brother remembers when it was published will he kindly look the same up and mail copy of formula to Mr. Roy Chalmers, 2531 E. Union Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Massachusetts Requirements.

Newtonville, Mass., orders a handbook and asks what the requirements are for a first class license in Massachusetts. The requirements are simply that you understand practical projection, and all that goes with it, sufficiently well to be considered by the examiners as competent to be placed in charge of an operating room. Would advise you to serve an apprenticeship under a competent union operator. I say "union" because, while I have no positive knowledge, still I am led to believe from reports, that the Boston union admits only men who are at least fairly competent.

Power's Six Gate Bent.

Brooklyn, N. Y., writes as follows:

> Some time since, correspondent complained about his film buckling in and out of focus. In your reply you gave several possible causes for this but, I think, overlooked one. I had such a trouble on a Power's Six projector and discovered it to be due to the gate being a trifle bent on its hinges, so as to bring the tension shoes out of line with the aperture plate tracks. Kindly let me know what causes the motor on a Simplex machine to squeak at the commutator at starting. It runs quietly except at starting. I wish to submit to your consideration a few criticisms on the otherwise excellent Simplex machine, as follows: (a) The framing device > works very hard, due to Spring 105, Fig 124, P296 of the handbook, which controls shutter during framing, There is no way of removing or slacking this powerful spring to relieve the pressure on the shutter gears, which causes undue friction. (b) The fire shutter is very thick and when it expands through heat, there is not sufficient room between its guides to allow of its dropping freely. I overcame this by filing the sides of the shutter and it works fine now. Speed control box cover, snap switch and all wiring ought to be attached to the stationary part, instead of to the cover and the cover should swing on hinges, for the operator's convenience in getting at the control lever, which gets loose occasionally. If I had my way I would send you a plan of control box having greater leverage, at same size, and easier to control. Also why not have the dowser placed between the slide and lens, so as to protect the slide, in a measure, from the heat when dowser is closed? From want of a standard term for the so-called "travel ghost" why not use the word "Wake," as the wake of a ship (or the last sendoff accorded a son of the Emerald Isle.- Ed.). What do you think of the Hallberg, D. C. Economizer? Can you recommend it?

I have given publicity to these criticisms of the Simplex to the end that its makers give them consideration and, if they are real faults, remedy them. In my opinion such criticisms ought to be welcomed by machine manufacturers, provided the same be honest and are made with evident good will, as is the case here. Unfortunately, while I have Power's Six, Power's Five, Edison Model B and Exhibition Model, Motiograph and Standard No. 4 in my office, the Simplex people have not, so far seen fit to send a mechanism, therefore I am unable to personally examine and determine as to the justice of your complaints. I may say, however, that the fire shutter complaint has reached me several times, and would seem worth attention. As to the spring, I have had no complaints of the Simplex framer working hard until yours came. Don't know anything about the control box matter. I am obliged to you for the Power's gate hint. Your answers to the questions named, Brooklyn, were approximately correct. I cannot recommend the goods of various manufacturers in the department, for very obvious reasons. Have had good reports on the device named and no adverse ones. As to the motor brushes I think they have too much tension, or possibly the commutator is rough or too dry. Try moistening a cloth with just a little thin oil and holding to the commutator for a second or two.

Mr. Fly Misbehaves Shamefully.

Mr. Chas. E. Wheeler, Lebanon, Ind., writes and says he has met Mr. Fly in Champion film "Thy Will Be Done." The shameless critter appeared in a letter, walked half way up it, hoisted his legs (This is how I know it was "Mr." Fly. Mrs. Fly wouldn't behave so disgracefully), over his back, rubbed them together, shook his head, winked the off eye and promenaded off to keep a date with Miss Fly in Central Park.

Carbons Too Small.

The Gaiety Theater, Winnipeg, Canada, orders two handbooks and writes:

> Our operating room is equipped with two Simplex machines. Have Mirror screen, 114 ft. throw; use three-wing shutters. In order to get a good picture we are compelled to use 50 to 65 amps at the arc. Your handbook says use ¾-inch carbons for this amperage, but the carbon holders will not accommodate them. Our picture is now 17 ft., but will be reduced to 16 ft. when new lenses ordered arrive. With ⅝ carbons a considerable amount of light seems to be wasted in a long flame. Can you suggest remedy for this?

With high amperage there will always be, more or less flaming, but this may be greatly reduced by use of larger carbons. If Simplex people cannot supply holders for ¾-inch carbons (I think they can), then have some made of steel. Your blacksmith can do it. However, there seems to be something very much wrong when you require 60 amperes d. c. for a 17 ft. picture (I take it you are using d. c., since I have not recommended ¾-inch carbons for a. c., except where amperage exceeds 60). If you are using a. c. your carbons are large enough and flaming is possibly due to the ventilation of lamphouse being stopped up with carbon ash. See P. 197 Handbook.

Washington Local Invites Visitors.

Local Union 224, I. A. T. S. E., M. P. Machine Operators, Washington, D. C., arises to remark:

> Local 224, of Washington, D. C., extends a most cordial invitation to all operators and brother members who may visit our city during the coming inauguration, to visit our headquarters, 3rd floor, Gaiety Theater, 9th St., between E and F. Sts., N. W., and there register. Any information desired will be imparted. Members of other locals desiring accommodations reserved will please communicate with L. D. Ormes, Sec. L. U. 224, at above address. Signed B. A. Spellbring, President.

All operators intending to assist Brother Wilson in assuming office will take notice and fail not, under penalty, to visit No. 224.

Measuring Stranded Wire.

A Brooklyn brother who failed to pass examination, writes:

> I was given a wire with 37 strands, one strand measuring No. 8 wire. They wanted to know the size of the wire. I told them that it had a carrying capacity of 450 amperes, but they said that they wanted to know the size of the wires. Can you let me know the right answer as I measured the one strand and multiplied the circular mills of one strand by the number of strands? They also asked me what I would do if my fuses kept blowing out. I told them that I would fuse up again and then I would look for the trouble. If the trouble would be in the lamp I would use a magneto or battery and bell. Was that right?

It seems to me that your answer on the wire matter was correct and complete. So far as I know there is no designation for a wire that size, except its c. m. measurement or diameter. 0000 is the largest wire named. But anyhow, I hardly think the examiners use the best judgment in presenting that kind of a wire. It is one with which the operator will never have to do any practical work. There is a rough method of ascertaining the size of a cable when it is impossible to get at the inside of it, but this method presumes the cable to be made up in the standard way, which is not always to be entirely relied upon. If this is what the examiners were driving at they were, in my judgment, wrong. I would like to suggest to them that a cable more nearly within the size likely to be uesd by the operator would serve every purpose and serve it very much better. What the examiners seek is to determine the actual knowledge possessed by the applicant, and it is not well to confuse him with unfamiliar things at a time when he is naturally nervous and in the worst possible frame of mind to figure things out for himself. I may be doing examiners an injustice in this criticism, but I can only write as it appears to me. As to the other matter, you were wrong. If you were to use a bell and battery, or a magneto for testing, then you should not fuse up until the test was completed. The practical method is to use a test lamp, provided the trouble is not a short or ground of such nature as to blow the fuse again the instant it is installed.

Various Things.

Mr. A. E. Morris, proprietor The Morris Theater, Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada, writes as follows:

> I have been in the picture game a little over five years and have always used Power's machines; the first two years a No. 5 and since then a No. 6. I have only one fault to find with the Power's 6, and that is the shutter is very sensitive. If we were allowed to use a motor, I think it would eliminate the trouble, but in turning by hand, if the operator does not turn perfectly steady we get a travel ghost or white flash up or down from the sub-titles or white objects. My throw is about 65 ft. and I operate on 60 cycle, 110 volt current, using 30 amps, through a Fort Wayne Compensarc. I use a 6½ and a 7½ condenser and get a very nice clear 16 ft. picture on a plain bleached muslin curtain. Would you kindly advise me the very best way to obtain d. c. and what you think makes the best curtain. My house seats 600, and I am always doing a nice business. Have installed the indirect lighting system and think it is the only thing. I would like to say a word regarding soaked carbons. I soaked Electras for two weeks in a salt brine that would float a perfectly fresh egg and on trying them out I got a much brighter light, but found great difficulty in the carbons needling. If this could be avoided I think the soaked carbons a grand idea.

As to the best way to obtain d. c., that depends. If you are paying a big price for a. c., it might pay you to install your own lighting outfit. If you want to use electric power from the a. c. mains then you can do this by means of (a) Murcury Arc Rectifier; (b) Mr. Hallberg's motor generator set; (c) the Ft. Wayne Electric Co. motor generator set (both described in the handbook), or (d) by means of a straight d. c. generator driven by an a.c. motor. As to which is best—well that is something else again. There are other devices but, to date, their makers have not supplied this department with details as to their mechanical and electrical construction, or with proof that they are all that is claimed for them. Until that is done I do not care to name them.

Gas Outfit Trouble.

Mr. L. M. McClelland, Kellaher, Sask., Canada, sends the following:

> We are working three towns each week, using an Edison machine and an Edison gas making outfit. This outfit consumes 16 cakes of oxzone in about ¾ of an hour, and one pound of ether per night. This is too expensive. We are running according to directions, as nearly as we can judge. The light is good, but will not last. We are compelled to use two boxes of oxzone cakes, 6 cakes to the box, each night, in order to run five films. Kindly advise whether or not there is any outfit operating successfully with carbide gas. Can you tell us how to get better results with present outfit? Its makers claim 16 cakes of oxzone will run an hour and a half, but we cannot make it work that way. Have a 12 ft. picture with from 30 to 40 foot throw. Would two 6½ or one 6½ and one 7½ condensing lenses give best results?

With the Edison gas making outfit better results are had by using the cartridge cakes of oxzone in place of the small, square cakes, such as are ordinarily supplied with the Model B gas outfit. If your dealer has not got them have him order some. The Edison Company, Orange, N. J., presumably can supply them. I would also advise you to be more careful with the mixture of gases at the jet, which will, I think, result in reduced consumption of oxzone. No, I know of no carbide gas outfit suitable for M. P. projection work. Two 6½ lenses are O. K.

The Right Course.

Some months ago Winnipeg wrote concerning the organizing of the operators. I do not remember the details now, nor am I able to find the article in question, but I do remember that Winnipeg had decided to organize an association and educate the men in projection, and what pertains thereto, before applying for an I. A. T. S. E. charter. I remember, also that I congratulated them on their move at the time. Winnipeg now writes:

> In compliance with your request of several months ago for information concerning the success attending the operators of Winnipeg in forming an association for educational and social purposes, you may conceive from the following that you have been an unqualified success. The Winnipeg Moving Picture Operators Association was formed June 29th, 1912, with a membership of 15. There are now 43 on our books, one of whom is just returning from the seat of the Balkan troubles, after having taken several pictures for Pathe Freres. Another is manager of Gaumont Co.'s Vanouver branch. We carried through a very successful examination where the younger members of the Association showed to good advantage the knowledge imparted to them by the various lecturers, who were chief operators. The latter consider themselves well repaid for their efforts by the results shown. After six months > of sucessful work we have decided to apply to the I. A. T. S. E. for an Operators' Charter. Our examining board is at present working on an examination paper, the results from which will decide the charter members, as we are determined to have none but competent men in this local. As you will obsrve by the enclosed programme we held our first annual gathering, at which there were 130, inluding proprietors, managers, film exchange men, operators and musicians. We might state that this was the first trade gathering ever held in this city and it was proclaimed an unqualified success. The responder to the toast of proprietors and managers stated, in his remarks, that the Association had the hearty co-operation of the proprietors and managers of Winnipeg. We earnestly advise the course we have taken to any other body of operators contemplating the organization of a union. Now we know the qualification of every member in our ranks; also the operators are now well acquainted and are more qualified to choose leaders to attend to their interests. During the last six months, we are safe in saying, projection and conditions have greatly improved. Should an operator fall sick, or a theater require the services of an operator, the manager invariably applies to our business agent. This, we are sure, has helped us to gain the hearty co-operation of the proprietors and managers. Before it was no easy task to locate an operator at short notice. We trust that this information may be of some use to other members of our craft. You will have received an order for four copies of your new handbook which are prizes to the members obtaining highest marks in our recent examination.

I am of the opinion that the Winnipeg men took an exceedingly wise course. They are now in position to be a credit to the I. A. T. S. E. and I trust will have no trouble whatever in securing their charter. I certainly wish the "boys" success and prosperity.

Poor Film Service.

Emporia, Kansas, writes:

> Have used the Power's Five and Six, an old Lubin with no take up, a Motiograph and an Edison. Am now using an Edison with Fort Wayne 110 volt transformer, and get a first class light with no ghost. When I took charge of this machine I found the condensers with both convex sides toward the screen and the operator was puzzled because he could not get a good clear light. We have a linen screen that was covered with alabastine and is now painted over with aluminum, with a seam across the middle about an inch wide. Our films cost the manager fifty cents rental per reel, and he wants to know why I don't get better pictures. Can any brother operator help me on this? My opinion is that I am helpless. Enclosed find short sample of film we ran last night. It is good to what we generally get.

I don't see how any brother operator can aid you, Emporia. The sample of film was not enclosed, but I can imagine what you are up against. Very likely the only remedy is to quit and seek a position with a manager who understands the fact that an operator cannot produce something out of nothing—that junk film means a punk show.

Carbon Clamp.

The Sterling Novelty Co. send samples of their carbon clamp, designed especially for Power's Six lamp, and say:

> Would like you to give these clamps a thorough test. They are the same clamp described and illustrated on page 1179, September 21, 1912 issue. Although dealers admit them to be a most excellent article, we are having difficulty in inducing them to handle the clamps as the Power people seem to tie them up with a contract to handle no "phony" parts for use on their machines. Now we cannot understand how these clamps can be considered as "phony" since they are in no way an imitation of Power's No. 6 type of holder. The idea of the extension on back end of bar, to hold same parallel with main body of holder, as well as use of stud working in notch to prevent bar dropping down when clamping carbons is, so far as we know, original with us. In our opinion it should be left to the exhibitor to say when certain attachments, such as carbon holders, become broken or worn out, whether he desires to replace them with the same or with other devices which may serve the purpose better, unless otherwise restricted by special license agreement at time of purchasing, as, for instance, in the case of the Dick Mimeograph. Of course, if projection machines are sold with a restriction that only parts made by the manufacturer be used with them, then we grant them a better right to hold the purchaser to that agreement. Otherwise it looks as though they were trying to monopolize the business. Now please do not understand us as meaning it to be right to make parts for machines and sell them as the original made by the machine manufacturer. We do not believe in that any more than do you. It is dishonest and pernicious. We refer only to attachments differing, or with distinctly different features from the original. What I am trying to bring out in all this is the fact that if inventors are to be shut off from the chance to market their inventions, there will then be no use in their attempting to work out improvements on projection machinery. It will also give machine manufacturers the opportunity to charge any price they see fit for attachments, as well as limit improvements to the scope of the manufacturers' own ideas. We had purposed making these holders for all lamps but understand all machine nmaufacturers either have or purpose to tie dealers down with a contract the same as Power's has done. Of course their prime object is to shut off the sale of dupe parts and with that we have no quarrel. We would very much appreciate your opinion on the situation thus created, either through the Department, of which we are constant readers, or by mail. If the latter we will gladly send check to cover your time and trouble.

I can thoroughly appreciate just how the Sterling Novelty Co. feel in this matter and it is one of the exceedingly unpleasant things I have to do, as editor of this department, to tell them that they are wrong and the machine manufacturers are right. The thing must be looked at from a broad standpoint. An exceedingly great evil has grown up in the making and selling of dupe parts for projection machines. These parts have been made in exact imitation of those made by the machine manufacturer, even being, in some cases, stamped with the machine manufacturer's name. In almost every instance these parts were inferior and in every case their sale as originals constituted a downright swindle, in which the dealer as well as the duper took part. But, laying that all aside, let us take up the proposition presented by the Sterling Novelty Company. Here is a carbon clamp that is a good article—granted. That it is better than Power's Six clamp would probably be strenuously disputed by that company but into that argument I, having due regard for my scalp, do not purpose to enter. But, also, laying that aside, let us look at the whole proposition, taking Power's machine as an example. Here is a projection machine which represents, as a whole, years of careful study, experiment and labor, as well as many thousands of dollars in special tools and many thousands of other dollars in shop equipment, etc. Now the returns on all this enormous outlay depend absolutely on the excellence of performance of Power's machine, taken as a whole. Have the Power people the right to defend this performance in every possible way? Most certainly they have. No sane man would deny that. All right! Now here comes a man who has invented some part for Power's machine, designed to take the place of a part supplied by Power's Company. It may actually be an improvement, also it may be exactly the opposite. If the latter it will probably injure the performance of the machine and thus injure Power's projection machine by injuring its performance. The thing may be offered at a less price than the original Power's part and thus appeal to a certain class of "Manager" to whom a part is a part, so long as it can be gotten on the machine, the same as a "picture is a picture" so long as it does not climb clear off the screen. Usually this type of manager has a cheap operator who knows no more than the law allows, and neither he nor the manager attributes the lowered performance of the projection machine to the parts they have installed, but presently you will hear them telling around the exchange that Power's machine is no good. With the Sterling clamp this would not hold good but how is the Power (or any other company) to examine and determine upon every one of the legion of such things offered to dealers? How are they to protect their enormous investment except by prohibiting, so far as possible, all parts being used on their machines, except their own? As to the raising of prices through limitation, I think the competition among machine companies will take care of that matter. As to the limitation of ideas I cannot agree that there is danger there either, because the inventor can always submit his idea to the manufacturer for sale; also Power's Company, for instance (and what is true of them is true, in some degree at least, of all others), employs experts the year round to examine into such things and to seek new ideas for the improvement of their machines. Personally, my sympathies are with the "little feller." I like to see the small manufacturer get along. But in a case like this I cannot do other than set matters forth as I see them, regardless of the toes of friend and foe. My opinion is that the machine manufacturers are well within their rights, both moral and legal, though I don't know so much about the "legal" end of it, I'll admit. And now I suppose I've lost another friend.

Calculations.

New York City wants to know how to calculate the amount of energy used. If you pull 25 amperes from a 220 volt line you would pull 220 × 25 = 5,500 watts, or 5½ kw. If you use this amount of current for one hour and are paying 10 cents per kw. hour, then your bill for that hour would be 5.5 × 10 = 55 cents. If an incandescent lamp pulls 50 watts, then it would, in one hour pull 50-1000 of a kw. hour. No, there would be no difference in figuring between a.c. and d.c. if you took the reading from a meter. If you figured otherwise, then the power factor might come in. See Handbook for detailed explanation.

Malinus, N. Y., Has Trouble.

Malinus, N. Y., says he has an 8 ft. picture at 48½ ft. Uses 35 amperes, 110 volt, a.c.; two 6½ condensing lenses; ⅝ cored carbons and rheostat. Light is good for about ¼ of reel, then dies down.

(a) Examine inside of carbon clamps and clean out thoroughly with file, if dirty. File smooth if rough. Feel your feed wires when light drops and see if they get warm. If so install new No. 6 wires. Examine ends of wires inside lamphouse. If burned to a dark brown and soft and lifeless (without any spring to them), cut them off and put in fresh wire. If all this fails have light company test voltage on your feed wires. Maybe some intermittent load is on them which has the effect of overloading them at times, thus lowering voltage. You say all connections are clean and tight.

From Guthrie.

Mr. J. E. Burt, Guthrie, Okla., orders a Handbook and says all manner of kind things about the Department and our humble self. Says he has often threatened to write a letter to the Department, introducing himself, but does not feel competent to say anything which would be of particular value o our readers.

Brother Burt we thank you sincerely for the many kind things you say. I've noticed that those modest fellows quite often, once you get them started, send in the very best kind of stuff. We'll be more than glad to hear from you any time, Guthrie, even though you may have nothing for publication. I've always time to read letters from friends.

The Matter of Speed.

Montgomery, Ala., writes at length setting forth the fact that certain theaters in Atlanta, Ga., run films in from 17 to 15 minutes. Says these houses claim to have the very best of operators and that these operators claim the speeds named to be the proper, correct speed to run films. Wants to know what I think about it.

Owners of the Handbook will find the matter of speed fully discussed on pages 319 to 324. I have time and again said, in this Department, that there is no set speed for films. It is wholly and entirely a matter of the action of the figures in the film. Moreover, "running a reel in 11 minutes" means nothing at all, since a "reel" may mean anywhere from 900 to 2,000 feet. Operators who say that 15 minutes or 18 minutes or any other number of minutes is the correct speed to run a reel of film, applying their remarks to all reels, are simply advertising their ignorance of real projection and telling their hearers that they have no conception of what really good projection means. After having run any one reel two or three times, and studied its action, you may say what the "correct speed" is for that particular reel. But that speed might be totally wrong for the next reel, even though of equal length.

Bump! Zing!! Zowie!!!

Mr. R. W. Freeland, Manager Gem Theater, Harbor Springs, Mich., makes quite some few remarks. He doesn't step on the other feller's corns—nope! nothing like that in his family! He gets up on top of 'em and jumps up and down, thusly:

> At our local plant there are two dynamos. From one we receive current which makes a near perfect light. From the other the light is more than bad, it's rotten. The voltage at the plant is (so they tell us) steady. At our place it wanders all over the dial. One funny thing about the light made from this other machine is that we can not focus the picture although should they throw over on the other one the same picture would at once clear up. To thread in frame (any machine) turn crank until pin is up (on top). Place framing carriage where machine runs the best. Place and lock film under upper sprocket. Make loop so that the dividing line between pictures come even with bottom of aperture plate opening when film is engaged with lower sprocket. Then close gate. We always scrape the emulsion from dividing line so it will show a white line. Man, oh, man; how I would like to see one more picture, that was worth seeing before I die. Of all the rot. Not one subject in twenty is worthy of screen room. Not one in a thousand is even fair throughout in photography, plot, perforations, etc. Tell me if you can, where the demand for from 90 to 100 new 1,000-foot subjects per week comes from? Some of the best makers, to increase their output, have dug up old wornout perforators, cameras, printing outfits, etc. And to make a bad matter worse, they mix the results from both the new and old outfits in the same subject. They are to-day releasing subjects which two years ago they would not even consider making. "Hash" is the right word, when one has to answer with truth the question "What have you got to-day?"
> The man worthy of the name "Exhibitor of Photoplays" stands ready and willing to pay for quality, but quantity and not quality is for sale, so the exhibitor pays as little as possible, and who can blame him? There is only one way this business will make money for all and that is to stick to quality. Do you know that in 1908, the Vitagraph people produced "The Shaughraun," and it then required but 700 ft. to tell the story. Selig did the "Two Orphans" on 1,035 ft., and "Monte Cristo," on 1,000 ft. I do not claim that these were as good as those of last year but I do claim that the features of to-day are padded, and that many of the 1,000 ft. stories are also. No release shows the improvement over those of 1908 that we have every right to expect.

While it is a strange fact that frequently the current from two dynamos, with apparently the same kind of generators, will differ widely in character, as applied to the electric arc, I believe your trouble is due simply to the fact that when the generators are changed the polarity changes also. That is to say, the dynamos are attached to the mains in such a manner that the polarity of the system is changed when the generators are changed. This may be remedied at the power house or by an arrangement as per Fig. 42, page 101 of the new Handbook. Try it out and report. As to your remarks about the asininity of attempting to keep up the present enormous production of film, in my humble opinion you are right. There is no reason for it, except the fact that film production is a cow which produces milk with golden cream; hence every one able to "get into the game" has done so, regardless of the after effect on the business as a whole. Exhibitors, too, are by no means blameless. They have demanded daily changes, without rhyme, reason or common sense behind their demand. Even five cent houses have used daily changes of from four to six reels, and have thus educated their audiences to expect all that for a nickel, whereas had they stuck to three reels of good, carefully selected stuff, rightly projcted and changed two or three times a week, their audiences would have been entirely satisfied and, in the end, the exhibitor and everyone else, except about a dozen fly-by-night prouucers, would have been the gainer. The business itself certainly would have been immensely better off in every way. The legitimat stage has trouble finding a few dozen meritorious plays each year, but we moving picture folks undertake to exhibit that many every week and keep it up indefinitely. Well, there's going to be a great big explosion some of these days. Already, as Brother Freeland intimates, there is a deadly, monotonous sameness. Western subjects have been exploited until they are becoming a drug on the market, not to say a chestnut. Even now, but a few years from the beginning, we are compelled to call upon the highest talent the world has in order to stimulate the interest. We are even trading on the name of Bernhardt. Where and when is the end of this insane flood of subjects to end? Is the business to be literally choked to death by a mass of reels and reels and reels and reels and be buried under them in the end? Will everything under the sun that is worth while, be already done over and over again by the time the business is two dozen years old? It begins to look that way. It certainly does.

Resistance.

Ganado, Texas, orders a Handbook and asks;

> Have a Fairbanks-Morse 60 v. outfit. Have a 110 v. rheostat. Can I reduce it to 52 v.? Have it on 52 v. but light still sputters; also have small tips form on my soft carbon. Ought I have a 60 volt rheostat?

You can cut out as much of the resistance as you may wish. Maybe you already have too much cut-out. Do your carbons flame? If so, cut in more of the resistance. I think after reading pages 107 to 126 of the Handbook you will understand the matter fully. Tips form on carbon because you, at times at least, carry too short an arc.

Tempering Glass.

Mr. N. W. Alston, Okmulgee, Okla., writes: ??

> In January 18th issue a brother suggests boiling condensing lenses in strong salt water as a cure for breakage. We have four glass factories in our town and I have several personal friends in the glass business, so I got busy. I put the question up to several men of long experience in glass working and I learned the following about glass tempering. I leave each one to decide for himself whether or not anything can be done to a condensing lens to better its condition, after it is once made and tempered. After a glass article has been finished it must be tempered to be of any value. This is to make it as strong and tough as possible. To accomplish this it is placed in a furnace-like apparatus, called a layer, which is one hundred feet, more or less, long. This "layer" is heated at its front end to about 1,200 degrees Fahr. The article to be tempered, while still hot, just as it comes from the mould, or worker, is placed in the hot end of the layer and carried slowly through it, on traveling trays, the process consuming several hours, thus allowing the article to cool off very gradually. The time is according to the thickness of the glass. The thicker it is, the slower must be the cooling process. This constitutes the tempering of glass. Have been told, by experts, that once glass has been tempered it can only be changed by re-melting. I therefore believe N. Y. is badly in error. From all I can learn there is absolutely no process by means of which condensing lenses can be rendered unbreakable, once they have been tempered. Protection from draughts, asbestos padding, etc., all of which has been described in the Department, seem to be the only things of value. A neat announcement slide may be made by lightly smoking a cover glass and writing what you wish on it, binding up in the usual way.

I have expressed my own convictions on the condenser matter so often that I won't comment on the foregoing more than to say that the brother's description of glass tempering is correct, save that in some instances the process consumes days, instead of hours.

Some Scheme.

(With apologies to Bro. Sargent.)

Mr. Chas. H. Oldham, The Arcade, Gregory, S. D., describes what seems to me to be a most effective and unique scheme, as follows:

> Have been thinking up a scheme to draw a crowd to my Saturday matinees. Am in a small town, population 1,300. Recently I interviewed our merchants and induced them to contribute 50 cents each per week to give a free show to the farmers, Saturday afternoon only. This brings in $20 for my matinee. I give them as many tickets as they wish, to be given free to farmers and their families only. The first Saturday I had 200 tillers of the soil. The next week there were 350. By this plan I have drawn whole families of farmers into my house, introducing them to good pictures. During the past two weeks I have noticed we have had some farmers in every evening. I advertise this Saturday show in our paper, as being given by the business men, and make farmers go to a merchant for their tickets. This ought to be a good stunt for some other small-town managers.

That reads to me like a corking good scheme from every point of view, though it seems to me Mr. Merchant could afford a little more than 50 cents a week. By this scheme Brother Oldham will undoubtedly build up a valuable farmer trade for himself as well as increasing the business of the merchants. He ought to draw from as far as three miles each way, for his night shows, especially with the young folks. Then, too, he has let me put a good one over on my mortal enemy and good friend Epes Winthrop Sargent, darn 'im, and, of course, that helps some.

Stereo Trouble.

Stephens Point, Wis., writes:

> Received the new Handbook and want to remark that any operator or manager who has not invested yet had better get wised up and busy. Am using a new Power's Six and cannot get my stereo adjusted correctly. There is a dark ring around the entire picture. The curtain is 9 x 12; the picture about 11 feet. The company I trade with says I should get an 11 ft. stereo picture with the lens I have. Throw is 60 feet. Have tried everything I know as well as called in other operators, who all claim I have the wrong lens. Wrote the Power Company and they say it may lay in the condensing lens. Suggest I try one 6½ and one 7½, instead of my present two 7½. Get good results on moving picture but stereo is !"???%§;$=—!!! Can you help me?

If you have an 11 ft. moving picture and the same width stereo picture, you have approximately a 5 inch e. f. M. P. lens and a 16 e. f. stereo, therefore your two 7½ lenses ought to be O. K. However, you might try one 6½ next the light. But maybe you have what is known as a "quarter size" stereo lens. If so, that accounts for the trouble. Get a "half size." The opening of the half size is about 2¼ inches in diameter, the quarter size is much less. I think, however, all Power's Six machines are equipped with half size stereos. As to the lens being the "wrong lens," that depends on what they mean by that. You have to have the lens of focal length to project the size picture you want. That matter is automatically fixed for you and you cannot change it, without changing the size of the picture.

"A DRAMA IN THE AIR" (Pathe), Feb. 10.—A two reel picture that would have been better if made in a single thousand feet. Its features are the flight of aeroplanes, seen high up and far away; a picture of a wrecked machine from under which the hero is taken almost dead, and the proving that it was the villain who tampered with the aeroplane's motor and made it collapse. It is the hero's disinterested friend who does the sleuth work and traces the thumb prints down. The photography is good enough; but, as a whole, the offering doesn't come quite up to the usual Pathe release.

"THE CITY OF SAN FRANCISCO" (Edison), Feb. 11.—An entire reel given to a pictured description of San Francisco. Much time is given to "booming" the 1915 exposition. The pictures of the Sutro baths are interesting.

"PAPA PUTS ONE OVER" (Vitagraph), Feb. 11.—Robert McWade, Roger Lytton and Earle Williams have the principal parts in a good comedy. The late George Ober also appears as the salesman. Kate Price has the role of a Mrs. Newrich. The work of all is excellent.

"THE ELECTROTYPING PROCESS" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 11.—Rather technical, but still the picture will interest many.

"THE SALT INDUSTRY" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 11.—On the same reel is this educational film, showing the manufacture of salt in Sicily.

"THE HIGHER DUTY" (Lubin), Feb. 11.—The story does not hold. There is no particular heart interest established. The husband is represented as having committed a great sin. There may be many who will have difficulty in discovering it.

"HER ONLY SON" (Selig), February 12.—Very good photography is one of the fine points of this acceptable picture of an only son and his mother. The lad leaves the mother in the country, to make his way in the city, and falls into bad company. He has lost his job by playing crap when he should have been giving his employer's business the attention he was paid for. The old mother comes to the city to look him up, and in a few interesting closing scenes finds that he has just done a good deed and is ready to make a man of himself. Such pictures have a worthy, wholesome effect, and since the story is well told and clear, this one will be acceptable to all classes. Orma Hawley plays the old mother and makes her a character that is human and real. Harold Lockwood, as the son, and Herbert Rawlinson, as the youth who leads him astray, are also worthy of mention.

"A FATHER'S LESSON" (Biograph), February 13.—This company made another picture not long ago that showed how a good-natured father, whose one failing is drink, was cured. This seems to be more dramatic; the feeling of suspense in it is very marked. The father's carelessness when drunk lets his two little children fall into grave danger. The plight of the girl, locked in a big chest which, though the house is burning, the distracted father is unable to open, is made especially heart-rending. The action is clear, and the photography of high order. It is a fine, substantial offering.

"ORANGE GROWING" (Lubin), February 13.—A slight offering that is clearly photographed and has an interesting subject.

"THE REST CURE" (Lubin), February 13.—On the same reel is this farce that fills most of its length. It is a picture that gave a large audience a first class chance to enjoy itself, and at the end the room was full of kiss sounds, laughter and strange noises. Its story is merely a chance to picture love-making. This was just what the audience we saw it with wanted, and it was very plain that it had a good time watching it. There is nothing at all vulgar in it; it is acted pleasingly, and the photography is clear . The author is Epes W. Sargent, and it was produced by A. D. Hoteling.

"THE GIRL IN THE CASE" (Essanay), February 12.—There are three or more excellent jokes in this picture as it stands, but the story it tells is confused. It isn't the fault of author, players or, perhaps, producer, but of the one who laid out the sub-titles. We saw it twice, and the second time found a fine scenario behind it—one that was worth while making clear. The fact that we didn't sooner know, for instance, that Augustus Carney is playing the uncle of Beverly Bayne leaves the early parts of the story obscure, for this is the pivot on which the fun turns. The whole cast deserves credit. The photography is good.

"THE ARTIST'S TRICK" (Pathe), February 12.—The best point of the picture is that the spectator is also taken in by the trick of the artist, who leaves suicide letters and then comes back as his old father to sell his paintings for fabulous sums. Wilbur Crane plays the artist, and then the father, so cleverly that he deceives one into thinking he is, in the second role, a different person. The picture tells an interesting story and seemed to please the audience.

"THE BELLE OF NORTH WALES" (Kalem), February 12.—A romantic picture taken in and around Bettws-y-Coed, a village of Wales, and played by an English company. The backgrounds are, of course, new and very acceptable. The story is simple, somewhat melodramatic; but not, as shown, very dramatic, because of some confusion due to the similarity of two of the players when wearing the peculiar tall hat of the country. The camera is nearly always too far away from the action to let us see the faces, and this also seems a pity, for the players are well favored. It was watched closely.

"BUTTERCUPS" (Vitagraph), February 12.—A pretty little story of two Irish children, with a fairy background. It is set in and around a dilapidated cabin where a poor woman and the children live. An old folklore tale of how fairies make their gold leads the children to boil buttercups to get some money. We have the rough tax gatherer and the grinding landlord and, contrasting with them, the charitable passer, who sees to it that the buttercups do boil down to real gold. Mrs. Breuil, the authoress, deserves a good deal of credit. Julia S. Gordon plays the woman and puts all her art into the part. The children also are engaging. We count the offering a distinct success. Frederick Thomson produced it. The photography is only fair.

"THE PANAMA CANAL" (Vitagraph), February 12.—On the same reel is this, that surely will be welcome. It is very interesting, but the photography might have been just a bit more lifelike; it is clear enough.

" A HEROIC RESCUE" (Edison), February 12.—This comedy is laughable as a whole; it's a one-situation picture, a satire on the man who is always telling some great adventure. In this case a scrubwoman gets hurt on the street, and the man who has "butted in" tells his club friends how he rescued a beauty and how she fell in love with him. We are shown what really happened and the man's story. Just as he is finishing the woman comes into the club and serves him with papers as a witness. Charles M. Seay, author and producer, deserves credit for making an amusing offering. The bragging man is William Bechtel; the scrubwoman, Mrs. Bechtel; the beauty, Clara Adams, and these are ably supported by a large cast, among whom Mrs. Wallace Erskine and Robert Brower should be mentioned.

"DANGERS OF THE STREET" (Edison), February 12.—On the same reel is this, which will not only give useful and needed lessons, but will thrill also. These little ordinary street accidents have been arranged to be quite dramatic. It is well photographed and makes a first class offering.

"ACROSS THE GREAT DIVIDE" (Essanay), February 13.—A well-written picture that holds the interest strongly. It begins at the same time far out on the plains and in a little frontier town. The two sections at first are not connected with each other in any way, but while we are watching both places the human elements begin to overlap and people who were before strangers become closely associated in a little drama whose object is to show how two men were bad, but not all bad. The picture is full of little things that awaken sympathy; it is clear and well photographed. The audience was plainly taking great pleasure in it.

"THE THREE QUEENS" (Essanay), February 14.—The feature of this picture is the clever trick by which a hand of cards with three queens in it changes to show the man who holds it, his wife's face and those of his two little girls. The man had determined to quit gaming, but had succumbed to temptation. This dissolving scene is done perfectly and is most effective. It is the offering's one truly fresh incident, but the story is quite clear and well acted and seemed to interest a large audience. Frank Dayton and Helen Dunbar play the leads.

"BRONCHO BILLY'S WARD" (Essanay), February 15.—A simple and pleasing love story which begins as a boy and girl affair while two kids are having a good time on Broncho's ranch. When the girl has grown up her guardian himself falls in love with her, but, seeing how things are going, gives the young lovers his blessing. The best part of the offering is while the two children are romping and having fun together. In these scenes there is a delightful picture of a very true Arcadia that will please every one who has ever been young. There are also some amusing characters in the neighborhood. It's a pleasant, natural picture.

"WILD MAN FOR A DAY" (Lubin), February 17.—Broad farce. A party of stranded actors try to raise the "wherewith" by fixing up a member of the troupe as a wild man and arranging a fake escape. All goes well until the natives discover the truth. Then they turn on the hose. It will make fun.

"TRAINING A TIGHTWAD" (Lubin), February 17.—Good comedy along original lines. Mae Hotely has the role of the woman who sets out to teach her stingy husband a real lesson. She succeeds. This is on the same reel as the foregoing.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 8," February 17.—This number does not seem up to the usual mark of this interesting serial. Some sketches of "Mut and Jeff" at the end of the reel made a lot of fun.

"A CORNER IN CROOKS" (Vitagraph), February 17.—Fine comedy by the Western company—comedy of the tramp variety. Robert Thornby as Sandy and George Stanley as Shorty, two knights of the road, make the fun. Mary Charleson takes part in the chase that forms one of the features of the picture. She pushes a baby carriage. The work of Thornby puts him in the front rank of the comedy people.

"CONFIDENCE" (Edison), February 17.—Good comedy-drama. It is a story of how a young bank clerk, in love with the daughter of the bank's president, saves the bank during a run by bringing in many coin bags filled with nails. Marc MacDermott plays the role of the man who started a run on a bank because he was refused a loan. Robert Brower is the bank president. The acting of the entire cast is excellent.

"DRINK'S LURE" (Biograph), February 17.—This is a strong picture—with many of the best Biograph characteristics. The underlying theme is the taste for strong drink. Claire McDowell has the part of a neglected wife; Hector Dion, of the man who is a slave to liquor; Kate Bruce is Salvation Anne, the good angel of the family; Elmer Booth is a burglar, who leads astray the weak husband; Matt Snyder is the householder who employs the wife when her husband deserts her. An effective scene is the view of the burglar at work on the house safe; he is shown in the rays of a flash lamp with his ear at the lock listening for the fall of the tumblers. There are tense moments following the call of the householder for the police. It is an unusually good drama, finely constructed and splendidly acted.

"THE CLUTCH OF CONSCIENCE" (Pathe), February 13.—The situation of this picture rather than the way it is produced is old-fashioned. It tells a story, used more than once, and set in the West among miners and gamblers. It has a sheriff's posse that chases a bad man to the cabin of his victim's wife, whom by a locket, he finds is his long lost sister. She saves him and then "in the clutch of conscience," he releases the man whom he had bound and left to die in a cave, giving back the gold he had taken from him. It is interesting and was closely watched by a large audience. It is a clear, well-produced picture.

"UNMASKED BY A KANAKA" (Melies), February 13.—The beautiful backgrounds of this picture of the Island of Tahiti are the most commendable part of it. The story is so melodramatic that it gives little sense of realism or of true island life. We saw it in two houses and in both, the rescue of the heroine from the water made hearty laughter. It is seriously farcical. But the offering gives some delightful glimpses of the island with its plantations and its huts and for these we can be truly thankful. The photography is only fair but some scenes are very clear and nearly all are extremely beautiful.

"BILL'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT" (Selig), February 13.—A comedy over which the audience laughed heartily. The present from Bill to the ranch girl, Lottie, is a pair of pretty satin slippers, but the boys change them to a pair of Bill's boots. William Duncan, author and producer, can be relied upon to make any good situation tell whether comedy or tragedy and in this case, he has placed about this situation a sunshine atmosphere that makes a very likable offering. Myrtle Stedman is Lottie and Lester Cunio is Joe, the ringleader.

"A LITTLE HERO" (Selig), February 14.—This very human picture with its spontaneous humor and its feeling of suspense seemed to us the best offering of today. The first thing one notices about it is its homespun naturalness in picturing a frontier community, the real thing. Then the two little players act like real children. The producer, Colin Campbell, deserves much credit for this and for his scenes that are just what was wanted; but the author has woven a dandy little story that never lets the interest drop for a moment. Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton play the mother and father of the two kids whom they leave at the ranch while they go to town. The boy (Roy Clark) is told to look out for his little sister ("Baby" Lillian) and does so just as a boy of his age would. He certainly isn't going to watch beside her crib while she takes her nap. He rides down to the turn with some passing cowboys and the house gets on fire, then he heroically rescues her. That scene when the punchers stop before the house is as natural as can be. The fun comes from the kiddies; but to Bessie Eyton is due especial notice for a poignant moment when she thinks her children are in the now smoldering house. The photography is very good and the offering a sure feature

"THE WEAPON" (Vitagraph), February 13.—A melodramatic love story in which the heroine's lover is overheard threatening to strike her father who has treated him with undeserved contempt. Later, we see the old man murdered by his butler in the dark so that we can't see the weapon. The lover is accused of the deed, but in an unexpected manner the knife is discovered. The photography, the sets and the acting are almost perfect for such a story and the offering held the audience's attention strongly. Mildred Garrison, the authoress, has made a good commercial picture with some freshness of interest and her script has been clearly produced by Maurice Costello, who also plays the leading role. Rosemary Theby is convincingly romantic as the girl. Harry Northrup plays the butler rather heavily. Charles Eldridge plays the rather foolish old man with his usual intelligence. Edith Halleren and Joseph Baker are also in the cast.

"THE HEDGEHOG" (C. G. P. C.), February 14.—A picture dealing with an old friend of the country boy. The photography is not so clear in all the scenes as usual in pictures of this make, but the offering is sure to interest.

"BORNEO POTTERY" (C. G. P. C.), February 14.—On the same reel is this offering showing primitive ways of making pottery. It is also instructive. The photography is very fair.

"THE DOCTOR'S PHOTOGRAPH" (Edison), February 14.—The burglar "doing a job" finds on a stand the photograph of his friend, an East Side doctor who once saved the life of his little girl. This can be foreseen from the first and if it were all the picture showed it would be both trite and no longer dramatic; but the author (A. B. Cooper) and the producer (Walter Edwin) have worked together to fill the picture with fresh and convincingly human things and we find a rich story behind the plot that has never been told and makes the offering one worth while, one that will be liked. It is a picture full of refinement and beauty and with an unobtrusive wholesomeness. The acting is as a whole quite up to the Edison high standard. Herbert Prior is the doctor. Mabel Trunnelle, his fiancee whose house the burglar (Charles Ogle) attempts to rob. Elizabeth Miller is the burglar's wife and Helen Coughlin his child. The photography is good. The audience seemed to like the offering much.

"THE MAN HIGHER UP" (Vitagraph), February 14.—W. B. Courtney has thought out a thoroughly funny comedy to feature Bunny as a police captain and he has had no role, except Capt'n Bunce, that fitted him quite so well. Hughey Mack is a common officer and both are courting Widow Price. It is a courtship astonishingly full of unexpected ups and downs in which the wits of Officer Mack are pitted against Captain Bunny's authority, but the power to command of the man higher up wins out in the end as the sympathies of the spectator desire. It pleased the audience wholly and kept us all laughing heartily. The photography is good. Frederick Thompson produced it.

"ONE ON THEM" (Cines), February 15.—A mildly amusing comedy of society life in which two lady charmers, old style and new, agree to a contest to prove out their respective methods and induce a third man to act as referee. Both get left. There are some pretty sets and scenes well photographed. The acting is natural.

"THE MAYOR'S WATERLOO" (Lubin), February 15.—Mrs. Geo. B. Walters has been seen in political life before. In this picture she is elected to the board of aldermen. Peter Lang is the mayor and she gives him a good deal of trouble until he comes to the conclusion that he is "a poor, lonely old man" and then she marries him to (perhaps) reform him. The fun grows as the lady alderman begins to rule the city. The offering was well enjoyed.

"THE OLD MONK'S TALE" (Edison), February 15.—Laura Sawyer plays a Spanish coquette among romantic backgrounds that are clearly photographed for the most part. The picture was taken at the place of Ramona's marriage and its story is told to tourists by a monk standing before the convent. In it an infatuated youth robs the statue of the Virgin of jewels to deck the coquette, but is discovered in the act and a tragedy follows. The offering stands on its costumes, graceful acting and backgrounds. There is a double exposure temptation scene that is perfect. The audience watched the story closely.

"POLLY AT THE RANCH" (Vitagraph), February 15.—W. E. Wing has written some amusing sheer nonsense that Rollin S. Sturgeon has produced into a laughable offering. Marguerite Gibson plays a peculiar girl who visits the ranch and teases a half-wit who lives there much to the fun of two cowboys and of the audience. Fred Burns plays the bashful one. The backgrounds are freshly interesting and the picture seemed to please the audience.

"A LIFE IN THE BALANCE" (Kalem), February 15.—A villain conspires with a doctor to shorten the life of one of his patients in order that he may get her fortune. This, as shown in the opening of this picture, seems to us particularly brutal, the more as the physician is made to seem an ordinary practitioner like any other doctor. The villain gets hurt and confesses so that the doctor is brought to justice in the end. The photography has quality although it is not as bright as it might have been in all scenes. Some of the pictures are full of beauty. The acting is restrained and of fair quality for the most part. It seemed to interest.

"FROM PEN TO PICK" (Pathe), February 15.—Gwendoline I. Pates is featured in this picture as the wife of a poor but bravely humorous scenario writer. It is he who goes from pen to pick; but his wife gets a legacy. It is the leaders on the screen that make the laughs; they are exceptionally fine, being full of the richest brand of real Irish irony, and made the house roar with laughter. Miss Pates is as charming as usual, there is no one else in picturedom who looks or acts quite like her and this helps her with a large following. The photography is good.

"TWO MEN AND A WOMAN" (Selig), February 17.—Kathlyn Williams here has a real play, one that gives her an excellent opportunity for showing what she can do in straight acting. She holds the attention and the sympathy of the beholder throughout. The story is of an artist who is given a commission to paint a portrait from a photograph and falls in love with a woman he has not seen. Later he accepts an invitation to spend a vacation with an old friend. His hostess is the original of the photograph that has so obsessed him. The husband accidentally finds the picture in the artist's suitcase. A combination of circumstances leads the husband to doubt his wife. The dialogue between the enraged husband and the innocent wife is splendidly done. The husband sees the light when he comes upon the crazed artist making love to his wife and sees her spurn him. He is in the position of a man who can't apologize; he can only try to. This drama was written and produced by Lem B. Parker; he is entitled to high praise on both counts.

"THE PERIL OF THE DANCE HALL" (Kalem), February 17.—"Bob" Vignola as Pablo, an Italian emigrant, does splendid work in this picture. He is a real "wop," whole-souled, hearty; in spite of his uncouth manners you feel like shaking his hand. Alice Hollister plays the role of Pablo's daughter, enamored of a dance hall; her work, as well as that of Guy Coombs, is well done. The feature of the picture is the shooting affray in the dance hall. The lights have been put out. From out the absolute darkness you see the flash of the pistols. It is vivid, thrilling—an accomplishment in photography. The climax is strong.

"ODD KNOTS" (Essanay), Feb. 11.—Fair comedy. John Steppling and E. H. Calvert have much to do and make most of the fun.

"DON'T LET MOTHER KNOW" (Selig), Feb. 11.—Too much time is required to establish interest. The last quarter of the picture will hold, more through the work of the actors than because of any inherent value in the story. The work of Adrienne Kroell and Louise Kelley is excellent.

Independent

"HER STEPMOTHER" (Champion), February 17.—A farcical type of story, built on a familiar plot, in which the hero employs a tramp to fall in love with his would-be step-mother-in-law. There is plenty of stage money employed in this and before the film is finished three tramps have been dressed up to carry out the plot. Good photos and a fairly interesting story.

"AN 'IMP' ROMANCE" (Imp), February 20.—An unusual picture, giving behind the scenes views in the Imp studio. The two artists become jealous of each other, over a girl, and one attempts to wreck the other's prize statuette. A moving picture film ingeniously reveals the plot at the critical moment. Well acted and tells a good story.

"KITTENS" (Gaumont), March 4. A hand-colored picture of frisky kittens. It will make a hit, of this we can be assured.

"THE SCULPTOR'S STRATEGEM" (Gaumont), March 6.—A little dramatic comedy that will amuse and please. It has pretty scenes and backgrounds and there is some freshness in the means the lovers use in blackmailing Papa to give his consent. Papa is a supercilious critic of art and his daughter's lover is a sculptor. One of his "unsatisfactory" statues is buried where Papa will find it. Papa gets a great sum of money for his "antique" and later is afraid to face exposure. The acting is natural and the photography is as usual with Gaumonts, which means good.

"THE BOND OF BROTHERHOOD" (Gaumont), March 11.—A fairly dramatic picture in which the bond between two brothers proves stronger, when brought to the final test than the infatuation both have conceived for a worthless flirt who has played with both. It was taken wholly in the studio and has been very carefully staged. The acting too is of high order. We can safely count it a little higher than the ordinary offering by this company whose work keeps a high level. The photography is perfect.

"THE COWGIRL AND THE KNIGHT" (Ammex), Feb. 13.—A typical Western romance with the cowgirl heroine, the honest cowboy hero, whom at first the girl thinks is unromantic, and the outlaw whom she thinks is all that is knightly. It is a good story as such go and the offering is an advance over this company's first picture. We like the scenes in it, there seems to be a touch of newness about them. The photography is fair; it might have been a bit clearer in the saloon scene and in one or two others. We liked it pretty well.

"THE BLACKSMITH'S STORY" (Pilot), Feb. 13.—This is the first Pilot picture and we have reviewed it at length (Feb. 8, p. 557). As we have said, the story behind it is first-class and it was watched with a great deal of interest. At certain moments, good acting makes it deeply emotional. It will not disappoint the exhibitor, for among the other releases of to-day it stands up well.

"THE CALL OF MOTHER LOVE" (Mecca), February 22.—Here we are shown the wife's former friend revealing the faithless husband's weakness for another girl. The wife goes to the restaurant and learns the truth. The friend tempts her to go with him, but love for her child restrains her. The strong, white light on this picture is very vivid at times. The situations are just a trifle overdrawn and melodramatic, and the story is not entirely complete, as we do not learn what becomes of the father.

"HELLO CENTRAL, GIVE ME HEAVEN" (Imp), February 17.—An effective offering, with Jane Fearnley and Wm. T. Shay in the leads. The child of the divorced couple telephones Heaven to make the drunken father stop beating his crippled boy. The little girl's father gets the message at central office and comes to the rescue. The estranged couple is brought together very effectively. A good offering.

"BELOW STAIRS" (Rex), February 20.—This picture is a model of good direction. Many characters are shown in the servants' quarters of the English home; the chauffeur, the valet, the footman, the maid and others. Each character is firmly identified in the mind of the observer and there is no hitch in the many scenes presented. The story is interesting and nicely balanced. Good acting and attractive photos. A strong offering.

"TWO SIDES OF A STORY" (Powers), February 21.—A rather simple plot, strongly presented. Edwin August appears as the barber. He recognizes his customer as the man whom he thinks wrecked his home. He holds the man down in the chair while he tells his story. There is tragedy in the air until we hear the customer's side of the story, which shows the folly of jumping at conclusions too quickly. A memorable picture.

"QUARTZ MINING IN CALIFORNIA" (Powers), February 21.—This gives us just a brief view of the manner in which gold is extracted from ore. We should like to have seen the subject more fully treated. It is on the same reel with above.

"THE MAN FROM OUTSIDE" (Reliance), March 5.—This three-reel offering is remarkable for the ingenuity with which Irving Cummings plays the part of the twin brothers. So nicely is the dialogue and stage business timed that there is no hitch in the performance of the various scenes. The story is not a powerful one, except for the very dramatic moments in the last reel, but it carries the interest throughout. The brothers love the same girl, played by Edith Lyle. One of them, Burt, is a villain; the other, Albert, is beloved by the girl. In the forepart of the story, Burt forges his own signature and throws the blame on Albert, who is imprisoned. After Albert's release come the strongest scenes, wherein Burt dies of heart failure, and Albert assumes his place, letting no one know except the girl. A good offering.

"ROWDY STARTS SOMETHING" (Punch), February 20.—In this light offering the dog steals a stick of dynamite and creates a chase of considerable humor. The dynamite explodes and blows up a stump, but the dog escapes.

"BY PARCEL POST" (Punch), February 20.—An amusing skit on same reel with above in which an overgrown baby girl is delivered by parcel post. Little Herbert Rice and a four-year-old girl pose as the baby's parents. Later a seven-foot boy appears. A very good comedy of this particular kind.

"THE HIRED DRESS SUIT" (Majestic), February 16.—The plot of this picture, if it really has one, never comes out clearly, but there are several amusing moments. One of them is where a young man wearing a $12.50 suit gets doused with water. The suit immediately begins shrinking, with laughable effect. The following scenes concern the doings of a young man in a hired dress suit, and are only passably funny.

"THE BELLS" (Reliance), February 19.—A powerful presentation, in two reels, of the drama played by Sir Henry Irving so many years. Edward P. Sullivan gives us a forceful impersonation of Mathias, the murderer of the Polish Jew. Fifteen years after the crime, committed on the night of a great blizzard, we see him haunted by the jingling sleigh bells. He dreams that he is tried and sentenced to hang for the murder and the great fear of the rope about his neck brings on his death. The scenes are dramatic and consistent and the atmosphere of the whole is effective. Irving Cummings plays Christian and Gertrude Robinson, Annette. A powerful offering.

"THE PRETTY GIRL IN LOWER FIVE" (Thanhouser), February 18.—This is almost a picture without a plot, although it works out very prettily and is pleasant to look at. The forepart of the film shows the manner in which the young couple become acquainted on board a train and the latter part finds them on top of Mt. Lowe in California. The scenes are attractive throughout.

"HALF WAY TO RENO" (Thanhouser), February 16.—This is an amusing film, in which the young married couple quarrel and leave on the same train for Reno to get a divorce. A strange woman gives her baby to the husband while she looks for her boy. The train starts and the baby is the means of reuniting the quarreling couple. Some excellent winter views of Niagara Falls are shown.

"THE TWO SISTERS" (Thanhouser), February 21.—An interesting story of a young woman doctor and her younger sister. The younger girl is badly spoiled and runs away with the older girl's lover. Five years later, after living a fast society life, her health is wrecked. Her husband deserts her, but the older sister comes to her aid and eventually restores her health. The picture ends without showing what became of the husband. Nicely acted and well pictured.

"THE COWBOY HEIR" (American), February 20.—The young heir to the ranch accepts a place as cowboy, falls in love with the girl, and is about to marry when the father objects. Her brother disguises as a girl and she as a young man. The father is deceived and the couple elope successfully. Fair comedy.

"LOVE IS BLIND" (American), February 22.—A very good drama, in which Warren Kerrigan is seen as a young man temporarily afflicted with blindness. Lady Mayne wishes her daughter to marry him, but she loves another and they change off girls, unbeknown to him. He falls in love with the other girl, and after his eyesight is restored the love continues. An entertaining picture.

"THE BUGLER OF COMPANY B" (Bison), February 22.—This two-reel film makes a very favorable impression on the observer, in spite of certain crudities, because it tells a good story. There is something about the fall of the young hero from grace and attempted regeneration which gets hold of one. The court martial scene and the humiliation following this were well pictured; also the manner in which he really came to love the flag. We do not think he would have appeared before his sweetheart in the guise of a hobo, however, and that seemed overdrawn. His return to the fort and sounding of the call to arms when the hostile redskins threaten it, are dramatic and rouse a real thrill of patriotism. A strong offering.

"THE COWARD'S ATONEMENT" (Bison), February 26.—This two-reel offering is remarkable for some of its strenuous battle scenes, which occupy a large part of the reels. The love story is conventional, and at times entirely overshadowed by the fighting, but the offering on the whole is a strong one. Ethel Grandon as the girl heroine was very appealing and in this, as in former pictures, carries the sympathy of her audience. The work of the coward, who atones at the cost of his life, brings up a good climax. As a war drama this is excellent, though the plot is slight.

"THE LAW OF COMPENSATION" (Powers), February 28.—This picture, with Edwin August in the role of a gentleman thief, makes a strong pull on the interest of the observer. The scenes, both in the thieves' quarters and at the ball are well portrayed, and the test applied by the amateur criminologist is effective. The unexpected twist at the end is also good. An entertaining film.

"KING DANFORTH RETIRES" (Imp), February 27.—There is a strong situation at the opening of this film which takes hold of the attention. King Baggot as the gambler, has a daughter, now grown, from whom he has concealed his occupation. She lives at the country home on the Hudson. A friend of his in the gambling business appears unexpectedly at the home and later insists upon making the facts known to the girl. His motive for doing this was not made quite clear enough, but the picture closes effectively, with the father quitting his former life and the sweetheart forgiven by the girl.

"A DEAD TOWN, BEAUX, IN PROVENCE" (Imp), February 27.—This on same reel with above is effective from an artistic standpoint, as well as a historical one. It is well worth seeing.

"THE SISTERS" (Imp), February 24.—This story has melodramatic moments. It depicts the jealousy of one sister toward the other, which prompts her to attempt poisoning the unsuspecting one. The village miser sees the attempted crime and makes it known. In the end the erring sister is forgiven and both have lovers. In spite of its treatment the picture carries the interest along very well.

"THAT OTHER GIRL" (Crystal), February 23.—In which Pearl mistakes the name of a horse, Belle Archer, for a rival girl. Chester comes near losing her but she learns the truth eventually and Chester wins considerable money on the horse. Fairly amusing.

"SCHULTZ'S LOTTERY TICKET" (Crystal), February 22.—This, on same reel with the above is a lively skit concerning Lottery Ticket No. 1323. Schultz loses it and then regains it after much trouble, only to learn that it is counterfeit.

"HIGH AND LOW" (American), March 1.—A picture that is well worth while. It shows the manner in which a millionaire's son learns how to work. The scenes in the lumber yard are fresh and interesting. Warren Kerrigan acts the part of the foreman. A good offering.

"WHEN THE LIGHT FADES" (American), February 24.—An "Enoch Arden" story, in which the missing husband returns after seven years to find his wife married to another. He gives them a bag of gold, which he says was given him by the missing husband, and departs without revealing the truth. The seacoast scenes are good and the acting capable, but the lapse of seven years was not sufficiently apparent in some of the characters. This holds the interest well.

"WILLIE WANTS TO CURE HIS FATHER" (Eclair), February 23.—As a fantastic absurdity there is just enough eccentricity about this to make it amusing. The little boy, who pulls the chicken up through the chimney, and escapes in a barrel, is quite a good little comedian. An interesting novelty.

"HEINZE'S RESURRECTION" (Keystone), February 17.—People who can be made to see a funny side to a burlesque funeral, will find it here. O'Brien, in love with Heinze's wife, induces Heinze to pose as dead. They purchase a second-hand coffin and hold a real funeral procession. The horses run away and the coffin is broken open. Heinze comes to life. The manner in which the whole affair is carried out is excruciatingly funny and we think will pass muster with the average audience.

"FORCED BRAVERY" (Keystone), February 20.—A diverting comedy offering in which the tenderfoot hero, who is given to telling big stories, gets tossed in a blanket and scared by burlesque Indians. Later he gets hold of a couple of pistols and retaliates on the jokers. Light amusement.

"THE VORTEX" (Nestor), February 26.—A smoothly conducted and gracefully acted picture of the West, opening in the early sixties and carrying through to the late seventies. Belle Bennet plays the heroine in two love stories as mother and daughter, and her acting will make her friends enthusiastic. The plot used to be typical of Southern love stories before it was transplanted to Missouri and then to the mining camps. The girl affianced to "Big" Bill, runs away with a gambler and later, after a baby has come, is ill treated. Bill, in the end, when the mother dies, becomes protector and guardian of the baby who grows up as his daughter and whose love story gives another dramatic climax. There is not an inch that is vulgar or lacking in interest while at times it becomes breathless. The backgrounds are lovely and are perfectly photographed. Milton H. Fahrney is the producer and has made an offering to take pride in.

"TRICKS IN ALL TRADES" (Powers), February 26.—The picture chooses the trade of begging and shows it up in a clever, breezy way that will surely keep any normal audience laughing. It is quite fresh and funny all the way through. A good offering.

"A TRIP UP MT. LOWE, CALIFORNIA" (Powers), February 26.—On the same reel is this picture taken from the front of the trolley car that carries the traveler up to the foot of the mountain. It is fairly well photographed, but is short, and there is very little to it.

"THE TELEGRAPH OPERATORS" (Eclair), February 18.—Another of the Eclair stories set in the great north woods. Its feature is the means the hero and his wife use to get into communication with each other when outlaws have imprisoned the man in his cabin. Both know telegraphy, and when the woman understands the situation she cleverly obtains the uniform of a mounted police officer and rides to the post for help. Barbara Tennant can act—every one knows that—but some may be surprised to see how well she can ride. It makes a good offering—fresh, clear, well acted and well photographed.

"THE APPEAL" (Victor), February 21.—Fritzi Brunette and Owen Moore play a young couple who are not very well matched. They really love each other and, although they separate, make, on both parts, a sincere attempt to become reconciled, but on account of another misunderstanding over the telephone the wife kills herself. It is surely well acted and the photographs are good, but it is a bit confused, yet is effective enough to be tragic.

"A FOOL FOR LUCK" (Nestor), February 24.—A bright little comedy, thoroughly laughable; it will be enjoyed by everyone. A cop who has had a lesson comes on a real escaping convict and thinks him a moving picture actor. This both astonishes and pleases the man in stripes, but he trembles when the cop wants to go into the studio and see the rest of the picture being turned. It has been produced and acted in just about the right way. A very good offering.

"A PIG'S A PIG" (Nestor), February 24.—On the same reel is this little farce of an entirely different character, but very funny and acceptable. It will not make so many laughs as the other. It is set on a farm, and a chase of a greased pig is its feature.

"THE GIRL OF THE RANGE" (Frontier), February 19.—The freshness of the backgrounds of this picture will again accent the fact that the Frontier company is taking its pictures in places that are different. This time we are shown rocky plains covered with snow. The story is a melodrama, of a kind used before, but is well conducted and speedy, which keeps it from seeming stale. Its greatest drawback is that the two girls who play important parts look too much alike and at times confuse the action a bit. The acting is very commendable and the photography good. A fair offering.

"IN THE BLOOD" (Rex), March 2.—This is a fine drama, excellently photographed, with Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber in the leads. There is just a bit of comedy in the middle of the film; it serves to relieve the tenseness of the greater part of the picture.

"BILLY JOINS THE BAND" (Gem), February 25.—There are many laughs in this Billy Quirk comedy. It is well done.

"THE DUKE AND THE ACTOR" (Champion), February 24.—In this good comedy there is a welcome change from the backgrounds of the East or of California to those of Virginia.

"TWO THIEVES" (Rex), February 23.—A strange story; an interesting one, nevertheless. Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber have the leads, and both do excellent work.

A feature consisting of several reels and portraying the principal events in the life of Queen Louise, of Prussia, has recently been shown to the Emperor of Germany, his wife, the crown prince, and the whole imperial family. The exhibition took place by request of the Emperor in the private theater of the New Palace in Potsdam. As reported at the time in the foreign trade notes of The Moving Picture World the Emperor did everything in his power to make this production historically correct by placing the archives with many famous relics of that heroic period at the disposal of the producers of this feature.

The Edison Talking Machine.

A Studio Experience.

By Louis Reeves Harrison

BEFORE this innovation was shown in public I visited the Edison studio and saw the action of a little farce photographed by Lewis Physioc while he controlled the mechanism of a phonograph so that the latter instrument registered in delicate and exact concurrence with the camera. During the time he was engaged in the simultaneous reproduction and recording of images and sounds so that the vocalization of characters in the photoplay could be made to nicely correspond to labial movement and facial expression on a screen presentation, Allan Ramsay was under high tension as a mute director.

Imagine a voiceless director indicating by signs—if he said anything it would be faithfully reproduced by the phonograph—not only what was to be done but what was to be said or sung! Ramsay has invented a sign language that is all his own, and it is quite as effective as that conversational or megaphonic employed by directors in conducting a performance for the pictural part alone. I stood amazed, not only at the ingenious combination of camera and phonograph, but at the intelligent operations of Physioc, Ramsay and the company of talking, singing and acting performers, because the strain of the situation required mental concentration on the part of every participant. The chances of failure from accident are more than doubled—they are in some swifter progression—because of a multiplied concurrence in all the factors of action and reproduction.

I could not help thinking as I watched this marvelous unity of movement among mechanisms and men that the science of material forces and that of the mind were approaching a new and intimate relation, that physics and psychics were getting closer together than ever before. I am not referring to the invention nor to the theatrical presentation, but to the complicated act of production as it impressed me in the studio. It was profoundly interesting to me as a man who admires the act of another in breaking the way of human progress.

I shall suspend critical judgment on the presentations until they have been under way long enough to be ripened and refined in quality—their first attraction will be that of novelty—but I must instantly accord the inventor and the producers as well great credit. All difficulties seem to have been foreseen and provided for in one device which I did not study, and possibly could not understand, the sensitive instrument which adjusts the movement of swiftly flying films to the rolling cylinder in the phonograph. One thing was made certain—they work in harmony so far as the production is concerned. The presentation is another matter.

Who shall foretell results at this stage of the game, when the full meaning of moving pictures is so imperfectly understood that nearly all engaged in making them have gone only far enough to congratulate themselves on the profitable returns from present development, not grasping the idea that they promise to be one of the factors destined to dispose of our slow evolution by making wondrous transformations in human character as well as in our present political and social forms. The results may be as favorable to the silent drama as the latter has been to the regular stage. The talking pictures may be but a new and attractive form of the only art born in the Christian era.

HINTS FOR THE LENTEN SEASON.

With the beginning of the Lenten season the intelligent and progressive exhibitor varies the ordinary course of his programs and makes room for subjects of a religious or semi-religious character. Of such subjects three are pre-eminent: "The Pathe Passion Play," "Dante's Inferno," (Milano Films); and "Jerusalem Delivered, or The Crusaders." To put such features on in a proper and befitting manner is essential to success. The Chalmers Publishing Company offers to exhibitors lectures and suggestions on these features, all of which have been prepared by W. Stephen Bush. The booklet on "How To Put On the Passion Play" has run into a second edition and is well known to exhibitors the world over. "Key and Complete Lecture for Dante's Inferno" and "How To Put On the Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered" are of the same standard of usefulness. The price for any of these booklets is one dollar.

POWER'S NO. 6A INSTALLATION.

A Power's No. 6A Cameragraph has been installed in the State Hospital for the Insane at Raleigh, N. C., by the A. & B. Moving Picture Supply Company. This machine will be used for the entertainment of patients and is the first installation of its kind in the State.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

LICENSED exhibitors all over this country and Canada, for some time past, have been asking one another for a reason why this impending cloud that now settles over the distribution of the Licensed film product has arisen. They are at a loss to know why this selfsame product should be distributed by two opposing factions within the Licensed ranks, and are anxious to learn the facts, because many of them have invested large capital in numerous beautiful and costly new homes for the presentation of moving pictures, and are necessarily full of solicitude over the future outcome.

In short, they are seeking to learn, through every available channel, why the Kinetograph Company has been given birth to compete, in its cradle capacity, with the present system of Licensed distribution, which can justly claim the distinction of being the natural growth—the evolution—of moving picture renting in this country, up to the present time.

Licensed exhibitors, from my own personal knowledge, have long since testified to the great good wrought by the General Film Company on the vital point of similar programs offered by nearby, competing theaters. The policy of the General Film Company, from the outset, aimed at the elimination of the disastrous competition between such theaters as used their product, a competition which had proved ruinous to many exhibitors under the old system of Licensed exchanges, when the exchange owners sought their own profit and thought of their customers afterward.

Will Licensed exhibitors be willing to return to the old, exasperating, bankrupting order of things by taking service from the Kinetograph Company, and restore the booking of similar programe in Licensed theaters, separated by only one or a few blocks. For such competition is certain to occur, without any consideration for the exhibitor whatsoever. The Licensed exhibitors hold the keys in their own hands; and it is for them to judge between the tyro company—untried and imbued with unalloyed commercialism —and its competitor, which has shown in no uncertain manner that it stands for the uplift and progress of the business.

The Licensed exhibitor wants quality in his films. He has trained his patrons to expect it; and, having put his hand to the plough, he cannot go back. Will he, therefore, be so blind as to encourage competition that cannot result otherwise than in loss of quality?

I can see nothing but chaos in the Licensed business, if fierce competition rages between the two companies; because it means the cutting of film rentals and the consequent lowering of film quality. Luckily, the license of the Kinetograph Company can be revoked, if the safety of the general Licensed product be endangered.

How that license was secured is a sealed matter to those outside of the inner circle; but I have a hunch that it was gained in much the same manner that Johnnie got the preserves: his good mother was looking the other way, and had no suspicion. But Johnnie had a dreadful stomach-ache afterwards.

Licensed exhibitors will do well to continue their services from the General Film Company. Experience has taught us that it is wiser to "bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of."

Building Inspectors' Reports Reversed By Chief.

After a conference with David Paul Klafter, architect of the collapsed Home theater on Milwaukee avenue and of a playhouse at West 49th street and South Ashland avenue, now under construction, Building Commissioner Henry Ericsson, on February 15, announced that he would allow work on the latter theater to proceed. Mr. Ericsson made a personal investigation of the Ashland avenue theater.

He said he found many of the statements made previously by his inspectors were untrue, and that the building shows only minor violations of the building laws. Reports of the building inspectors had recommended that the structure be torn down.

Charges are now pending with the state board of examiners of architects against Mr. Klafter, charging him with "gross incompetency and recklessness" in designing the Home and Ashland avenue theaters.

Previous inspections of the Ashland avenue theater charged that there were cracks which showed the building was settling, and other defects.

Chicago Film Brevities.

M. F. Lorenz, owner of the Society theater, Seattle, was a recent caller at the World office. The Society seats 500 people, and is located in a high class neighborhood. A long row of automobiles are always to be seen lined up in the vicinity, waiting for the departure of patrons. Mr. Lorenz stated that business was excellent. The admission prices are 10 and 20 cents. Straight picture programs are used.

The Schindler Theater, which was recently closed by the building commissioner, has again been opened on condition that the ground floor shall only be used, and that the balcony be closed.

David Horsley, president of the Nestor Film Mfg. Co. and treasurer of the Universal, passed through this city on the California Flyer, on his way from Los Angeles to New York, on Wednesday, February 19.

The Chicago Press Writers' Club met in the John Crerar library, in the Marshall Field Building, on Friday evening, February 14. The chief subject of discussion was "The Moving Picture Scenario and Its Influence." G. Marion Gabe, a reporter on the Chicago American, gave a short address on the subject and answered various questions relating to scenario writing. Mr. Gabe quoted the Moving Picture World in many instances and also read extracts from Epes W. Sargent's "Technique of the Photoplay." Two of the members present (among the 40 assembled) whose scenarios have been accepted at satisfactory prices, stated that they owned Sargent's text book and had been guided by it. The Club's members, as a sine qua non, must be active newspaper reporters.

W. W. Watts, president of the Vaudette Amusement Co., Springfield, Ill., writes that he has purchased the Illinois right for Kalem's biblical masterpiece, "From the Manger to the Cross," and is now exhibiting that great subject to crowded houses throughout the state. Judging from the newspaper clippings forwarded by Mr. Watts, the press of every city is giving glowing and extended notices to the presentation. Mr. Watts has prepared a comprehensive list of press notices, which are used in advance of his appearance in every city visited. He also does extensive billing.

PROCTOR CIRCUIT TO PUT ON KINEMACOLOR.

The Kinemacolor Company of America through its President, Henry J. Brock, has just signed a contract with F. F. Proctor whereby the newest natural color photoplays, now being produced by the Kinemacolor stock company at Los Angeles,—and Western scenes in all their vivid hues,—as well as the contributions of camera experts who are filming the characteristic scenery and costumes of foreign lands from Egypt to John O'Gaunts, will be presented in all the theaters of the Proctor circuit, including four New York houses, at the close of the engagement of the talking pictures. Mr. Proctor was one of the pioneers in combining moving pictures with vaudeville, and while the popularity of his theaters has superinduced a host of invaders in the same or similar fields, this is practical proof that he proposes to keep at the head of the procession.

Exhibitions like the Balkan War and Panama Canal scenes, which have been filling Carnegie Lyceum for weeks past, and the kinemacolor pictures which form the central feature of William Morris's new "Wonderland" in the old New York theater, prove their peculiar popularity and sustained drawing power.

COLUMBIA FILM COMPANY—ITS NEW.

There is a new feature film manufacturing company starting in St. Louis which has just completed its new studio and has a stock company of well known motion picture players. It is to release nothing but three reel features and they promise to produce nothing but the best in the feature line.

They have secured the services of Ike Schlank, who was General Manager of the Atlas Manufacturing Company ever since the organization of that Company. He is to act in the same capacity for the Columbia and will no doubt make it one of the leading feature film companies of this country. His resignation takes effect on February 15th with the Atlas Company, and he is to take complete charge of the new Columbia on the same date.

POWERS NO. 6A TO THE FRONT.

The battleship "Connecticut" sailed from New York on February 18th, for the naval base at Guantanamo, Cuba, to be held in readiness regarding the Mexican situation. She carried with her a full compliment of crew and a Powers No. 6A machine, which was installed just prior to her departure.

"A Daughter of the Confederacy."

A Fine Spectacular Offering with Gene Gauntier in Her Well-known Role as Nan, the Girl Spy.

By H. C. Judson.

AN, the girl spy, is a character that Miss Gauntier created while she was with the Kalem Company. A number of thrilling war stories were written around this intrepid young woman, full of battle smoke, of hair breadth escapes, of daring exploits and or ingenious ruses to fool the watchful enemy. And they were usually, if not always, written by the gifted leading woman herself whose inventive imagination seems never to grow weary of weaving new plots or of thinking up new situations to waken emotion, amuse or thrill.

There has been a remarkable freshness about all of Miss Gauntier's war stories and what is better still they have been strangely like the real thing and as both writer and player she has never made more of this material than in this picture. The producer Sidney Olcott, is too well known to need the qualities of his work pointed out. He has shown his care for detail and his naturalness in handling human emotions as well as his ability when picturing things on a large scale, as in a battle scene, many times of late. These qualities were recognized long ago and his war pictures, especially those that featured Nan, were followed by all kinds of spectators with enthusiasm.

In this three reel feature offering of the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, which will be distributed by Warner's Features, we find all the old, good qualities with a something added that has come from a wider experience and richer acquirement. The picture gives us the old taste exactly, but is bigger in every way. The three short reels are gone too quickly; we were sorry at the end of the show and wanted to see more.

Scenes from the Gene Gauntier Feature Players' First Production, "A Daughter of the Confederacy."

As the picture opens we find Captain Allison (Jack Clark), of the Union army, out in a bit of Southern forest through which runs a telegraph line. Soon he has tapped the wire and is overhearing the communications of the Confederate commander. A glimpse of the Southern headquarters is flashed to the screen and we perceive that the operator has noticed the momentary break when the line is cut. The officers are warned and come to the conclusion that a wire tapper is at work. Nan, the girl spy, is decided upon as the best person to handle the situation without attracting too much attention and she is sent for. The remainder of the first reel is taken up with her adventure, showing how she makes a capture of the Union officer and brings him handcuffed back to headquarters. There is a great deal of suspense and it keeps the spectator on the knife edge. This is wholly due to the sharp, unexpected turns of the narrative. After the first jolt we get, we are made to sit up, expecting every moment that another surprise will be sprung on us. The scenario writer has seen to it that the next does come at the right, psychological instant and just before we realize that this is the method being followed. We never are permitted to feel anything but concern for the characters and are made to forget that it is a story.

It was to be expected that there would be times when the action would fall slightly below its highest level and it is at these places where the acting comes in to smooth them out and carry the mind across. They never are noticeable and do not harm or lessen interest in what is happening. Miss Gauntier's appearance in some of these scenes is all that is charming. The photography is of high quality throughout most of the picture, and it fortunately happens that at the moments when facial expression is most needed, at the dramatic places and at the climaxes, it is perfect.

It so happens that the nearness of the two armies makes it necessary that the girl spy reach the Confederate camp in disguise. We see an old man approaching. He has a pass and is admitted into the tent of the commander. When he snatches off his wig we see that it is Nan. At the close of the first reel the story seems for an instant practically ended; but in a flash it dawns on Nan and on the Union captain who is to die as a spy, that there is a possibility of friendship, perhaps more, between them. It is made clear during a handshake, by way of farewell. This leaves a hook as it were by which the interest is carried over to the next reel.

The escape of the spy is the chief incident of the second reel and it is made most dramatic. He climbs up a chimney, past the room where Nan is staying and she hears a scraping sound in the wall; but fortunately a rat runs out and leads her to attribute the noise to it. In the second story of the house the Confederate officers are discussing their plans and these the spy is enabled to overhear. One of them also hears the scraping sound and calls the attention of the others to it but is laughed at for his pains. These things give a ghostly feeling to the scenes as they are enacted, and the suspense is almost breathless. There is a big thrill in the spy's final getting away. The reel ends when the girl is in her turn captured by the Union men a few hours later.

The last reel has the battle scenes and their are pictures to conjure with. The Union captain has permitted the girl to escape. The armies are on the brink of an engagement. At first the girl is merely a witness of the fighting, but there comes a time when her friends are being driven back and then she herself, drest in the uniform that her friend had given to her, takes a part and rallies them to final victory. Just before the charge the captain is wounded and falls. In the midst of it Nan herself is hit and falls beside him. In the rest of the picture there is devoloped a pleasing love story whose happy ending is the picture's denouement. We see the wounded soldiers being taken to the hospitals on the flat cars drawn by the same old type of locomotive used in war days. There is a fine picture also of the war time river steamboat with a back wheel that kicks the water.

We must point out one bit of most sensational riding in which, after a chase of the girl spy by the Union Cavalry, she is caught from her horse by the captain while going at full speed. It is the grace of this incident as much as the excitement of it that will make it stay in the memories of the spectators.

"The Daughter of the Confederacy" is a true feature. It is not only full of big things in the way of thrills, but it has besides great drawing power in the beauty of most of its scenes and in the splendid acting of Gene Gauntier, of Jack Clark and of the whole cast. The cuts that we print with this review will give a taste of the picture's dignity and worth.

The campaign for spreading the knowledge of the purposes and advantages of the motion pictures through a series of articles in the daily press of Germany has been carried on with great vigor and success. Such authors as Gerard Hauptmann, Herman Sudermann and others of equal prominence have espoused the cause of kinematography and have made the work of the committee easier. The cost of this campaign is borne by voluntary contributions of the manufacturers supplying the German market.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

Ohio Divided on Censorship Law

FOLLOWING the annual convention of Ohio Exhibitors at Columbus, January 21, a bill providing for a State board of censors, was introduced in the Ohio State Legislature. From the report of the convention at which this bill was considered by the Ohio exhibitors, it was gathered that the Ohio Exhibitors were unanimously in favor of the measure. Evidently a change has come over some of the Ohio League members, or the report of that meeting was not exact, for Secretary Christenson comes out in a signed communication to the Moving Picture World, revealing quite a different state of affairs. We submit the letter without further comment:

THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA.
Office of the Secretary, 703 Euclid Avenue.

Cleveland, O., Feb. 17, 1913.

Editor Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—In a recent issue I note a paragraph in reference to the Ohio Censor Board as proposed in a bill introduced by President Neff of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. You state in this editorial that the exhibitors of Ohio are unanimously in favor of this bill. I herewith beg to inform you that the exhibitors of Ohio are not unanimously in favor of this bill, especially in its present form. Personally, I am bitterly opposed to a censor board in the state of Ohio, or any other state, and I shall make every effort possible to defeat the bill in this state.

The Cleveland local of this league has gone on record as opposing this bill very strongly, in fact, by unanimous vote at a regular meeting, and it has telegraphed the Governor of this state and its Cuyahoga County delegation asking a hearing on this bill.

I hope the exhibitors throughout the state will read the following argument which I offer against this bill, and if they look at it in the same light that I do I urge upon them that they ask their members in the state legislature to vote against this bill.

1. In the first place, this bill is not honest with the film exchanges when it exacts one dollar for every reel of film, whether it is an original reel or not. When a film has been censored, according to the true meaning of the word, it certainly is not necessary to also censor any number of duplicates of that same reel. This league asks for fair and square treatment from the film exchanges and the manufacturers. In return we should accord the same treatment.

2. The true meaning of "censor" is protection, to the public, not extortion from some one. Extortion in any one branch of any line of business means extortion in another branch of that same line. That is what will happen in this case. The fact of the matter is that the film exchanges, who, without doubt, will find this tax of one dollar per reel, covering everything in their stock, no matter how old the films may be, a severe one, will come right back at the exhibitor with an increased cost in his service. I ask you exhibitors, are you prepared to pay this extra cost? Do you feel that your business will stand for an increase of, say, anywhere from 25% to 50% in cost of film service? Bear also in mind that the brunt of this will fall most heavily on the "little" exhibitor.

3. We now have a national censor board, composed of representative American citizens. They represent every branch of industry. Do you wish to nullify that board and their judgment by creating a minor board of censorship? That is what you would do if you were to create a state censor board.

4. This proposed bill to create a censor board in the state of Ohio also provides for a National Censor Congress, which means that a similar censor board may be created in every state of the Union. What would be the result? Right here I want to say that I agree with Mr. Otto N. Raths, president of the Minnesota State Branch of this league, who says that the result of state censorship boards would result in conflict similar to that now resulting from state divorce laws.

5. To show you that the best legal minds of this country hold the view that a state censorship is in direct violation of existing laws, I refer you to President Taft's action, on Feb. 8, 1913, when he vetoed the proposed Censorship bill covering the District of Columbia. The President held that it encroached upon existing laws. In this connection I wish to bring to your attention again the decision of another great legal mind, that of the Honorable William J. Gaynor, Mayor of the city of New York, who wrote a letter to the Board of Aldermen of the city of New York, disapproving the proposed ordinance relative to censorship of motion picture theaters in that city. This letter was published in your journal on page 135 of the issue of Jan. 11, 1913. I ask every exhibitor to read that letter over again. It is comprehensive to the last degree, and is especially pertinent just at this time.

6. This bill is being promulgated by the exhibitors of this state of their own volition, as there has been no action by any state or civic authority to prompt such a bill as a protective measure. May I ask the exhibitors not only of Ohio, but all over the United States, to seriously consider this matter of state censorship of films? Think not only of the present; think of what the future may bring forth in case this bill becomes a law in any or all of the states. It is a serious menace, and now is the time to act. Therefore I feel sure that if the exhibitors of Ohio will give this matter due consideration they will ask their representatives in the state legislature to vote against the bill.

To sum it all up, this bill will mean a higher rental service to the exhibitor. An old film that is rented to the exhibitor today for one dollar will rent for two dollars after the passage of this bill. It practically means a double taxation on all exhibitors by the state of Ohio. By this I mean that exhibitors of this state are largely property owners, and are paying taxes to the commonwealth of Ohio on real estate, chattels, bonds and whatsoever property they may own, the same as any other citizen, and in almost all the cities and towns of this state there is also the license fee which the exhibitor must pay on his business. Why, then, should the state of Ohio impose something in the exhibitors' line of business which will increase the cost of the operation of their business?

Our experience with a censor board here in Cleveland, for the past thirty days, has proven the fact that a National Censor Board is sufficient.

Yours truly,
C. M. CHRISTENSON, National Secretary.

LEGISLATION IN CALIFORNIA.

The delegation sent to the state capitol at Sacramento on behalf of the motion picture exhibitors of California to oppose a bill which was recently introduced proposing to prohibit Sunday exhibitions of motion pictures, did not go in vain.

When they left the capitol last week they carried assurances that the offensive bill had been killed and that in all probability it will not be necessary for the exhibitors of the state to fight Sunday legislation again for at least two years.

California this year, for the first time in the history of the United States, is trying a new legislative device. The biennial sessions of the legislature hereafter are to be divided into two parts. During the first thirty days any member of the legislature may introduce any number of bills but no legislation can be passed, except in great emergencies. Then intervenes a period of thirty days during which the legislators return to their homes to study the bills introduced and confer with their constituents. During the second half of the session, which follows, the bills previously introduced are acted upon but no new bills can be introduced except upon a three-fourths vote in each house. This latter provision makes it almost certain that no legislation directed against Sunday picture shows will be considered during the final session which opens March 10. The bill which the motion picture exhibitors, through their committee, succeeded in having killed, was aimed at the picture shows and expressly exempted theaters, concert halls and other places of amusement.

The fact that this bill has been defeated does not, however, mean that there will be no motion picture legislation. There is still pending before the legislature a bill to create a state board of censors along lines somewhat similar to those proposed in Ohio. A rough draft of a bill was introduced by Assemblyman Frank E. Woodley, of Los Angeles, merely to hold a place for legislation on the subject. Mr. Woodley says that the bill as he drew it was not intended to be a finished product. Undoubtedly there will be many amendments to it for the administration is behind it and intends if possible to write into the statutes the best, most progressive and most workable piece of legislation of the kind ever drafted. The bill as introduced is entitled "An act to establish a State Censor Commission to censor moving picture films and to regulate the use thereof in the state of California."

Section 1 provides that the commission shall consist of three persons to be appointed by the governor and to hold office for four years except that of the first three appointees one shall go out of office July 1, 1915, the second a year later and the third still a year later. The commissioners are to be paid $3,600 a year each and all necessary expenses.

Section 2 authorizes the commission to employ a secretary and other assistants and to fix their salaries. Section 3 requires the commissioners to devote their entire time to the duties of the office, places the principal place of business at Sacramento and in general terms, defines the commission's duty which is "to thoroughly examine and censor every film or moving picture of every kind before the same is shown to the public of this state for profit, and to give its approval, which approval shall be shown by some mark or seal of the commission, which mark or seal must be shown at the time and every time the film or moving picture is so used in the state of California, provided that the commission may, in its discretion, accept the decision in any particular case of any municipal, state, national or international bureau or commission in favor of any film or moving picture and either seal the same or excuse the same from sealing." The commission is also given authority to prescribe and collect a fee for censoring films and in fixing this fee it shall be the endeavor to make such charges, in the aggregate, pay all the expenses of the commission including the salaries of the commissioners.

Section 4 makes it a misdemeanor to violate any provision of the bill, makes the first offense punishable by a fine of $50, the second offense $100 and each subsequent offense $500. All fees and all fines shall be paid into the fund established for the commission. Section 5 makes a preliminery appropriation of $5,000 for this fund to start the work of the commission. P. M. POWELL.

GREATER NEW YORK'S LICENSE NOT CANCELLED.

In view of the rumors that the Motion Picture Patents Company had cancelled the exchange license of the Greater New York Film Rental Exchange Company on the strength of the recent decision of Justice McCall, Gustavus A. Rogers, of Rogers & Rogers, counsel for the Greater New York, desires announcement made that, through the influence of the Department of Justice at Washington, a stipulation has been signed by the Motion Picture Patents Company and the individual licensed manufacturers to the effect that licensed pictures will be supplied to the Greater New York Film Rental Exchange continuously until such time as the action of the Government against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others shall have been decided.

This stipulation, Mr. Rogers assures The World, is absolute and comprehensive and provides that the Greater New York shall be served in like manner with the General Film Company and the Kinetograph Company. This stipulation was drawn and signed in Washington, Tuesday, February 18th.

JUDGE CONDEMNS TOBACCO COMPANY'S COUPON PLAN.

In passing sentence last Tuesday upon two moving picture exhibitors for admitting children under age to their theaters unaccompanied by parents or guardians, Justice Deuel, of the Court of Special Sessions, New York City, strongly criticised the policy of the American Tobacco Company in putting coupons, entitling the holder to admittance to moving picture theaters into cigarette boxes.

"A concern such as the America Tobacco Company holding out inducements like this, which naturally tend to corrupt children, encouraging them to smoke, and the proprietors of picture houses to violate the law by admitting them, should be investigated," said Justice Deuel.

Justices Salmon and Herrman not only indorsed Justice Deuel's remarks, but Justice Salmon declared that it was the duty of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children to bring the matter before the District-Attorney.

EXHIBITORS ATTEND HEARING AT ALBANY.

President Samuel H. Trigger, of the New York State Exhibitors' League, accompanied by a number of exhibitors from various parts of New York State, attended a hearing before the legislature at Albany last Wednesday on the propsed law to admit children to picture theaters under certain restrictions.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS' MEETING.

A meeting of New York exhibitors was held on February 18 at the Union Square Hotel, called for the purpose of providing ways and mean of combatting unjust legislation affecting motion picture theaters. The meeting was one of the largest gatherings of exhibitors since the organization was formed. W. B. F. Rogers, counsel for the association, advised exhibitors to obey the present laws until proper amendments could be obtained. Arrangements were made for a trade banquet, to be held at an early date, at which the attendance of city officials and department heads will be secured.

NEWMAN EQUIPS NEW THEATER.

The Newman Manufacturing Company, Cincinnati, and 101 Fourth Ave., New York City, have equipped the new North Star Amusement Company's theater, 106th st. and 5th Ave., New York, N. Y., with all the brass frame, easel and rail work. This theater is considered by authorities to be one of the finest modern picture theaters in the world. The Newman Manufacturing Company were selected to do this work and given preference on account of their reliability and the high-grade work that they turn out.

IMPORTANT TO JERSEY EXHIBITORS.

The True Feature Company has acquired the state rights of New Jersey for the famous films of "The Miracle" as presented by the German Art Film Company. The production consists of four reels and has been marvelously successful in Europe. Prologue and special music go with the pictures. Applications for booking should be addressed to The True Feature Company, Box 219 Madison Sq. Station, New York City.

"At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs."

By George Blaisdell.

At last a New York daily newspaper has awakened to the fact that many people are interested in moving pictures. It has taken many months after the established fact for some publishers to discover an obvious opportunity. For the past two weeks the Evening Sun has on Saturday devoted three pages to pictures. There are many interesting articles—containing, by the way, some amusing blunders which of course will be eliminated as the writers get better acquainted with the film game. Also there are photographs of players and still prints from forthcoming releases. Following the appearance of a picture section in the newspaper indicated and coincident with the second issue the Evening Journal put out two pages devoted to moving pictures. Aside from short interviews with four men interested in the production of pictures there was nothing of public interest in this initial issue except reproductions of still prints, unless we may so construe the autobiography of the young man who "edits" the section and who confidently proclaims that his sheet will become the "moving picture authority of the country." More power to him, anyhow!

The opening of the columns of the daily press to news of motion pictures—and it will not be long before all the papers will be making room for picture comments—means the increased importance of the manufacturer's publicity manager. Some of the "boys" are going to discover a vast difference between putting over stuff on a lenient trade paper editor and a wary daily newspaper man who weighs press "bunk" on exceeding fine scales.

So Joe Brandt is leaving the Universal! He has seemed so much a part and parcel of that company that it takes time to realize just what this means. Beginning February 24 he will assume charge of the New York interests of the Industrial Motion Picture Company of Chicago and of the Laemmle Film Service, which has offices in Chicago, Des Moines, Omaha and Minneapolis. When not otherwise engaged he will officiate as agent of the World's Best Film Company of New York and Chicago and also of the Jungle Film Company. Some of Mr. Brandt's previous alliances have been with the Ben B. Hampton Advertising Agency, the Billboard, the Dramatic Mirror and Carl Laemmle. E. J. Hudson, who has been Mr. Brandt's associate in the Universal, will succeed him. With J. B.'s experience in the film game plus his ability and his urbanity he'll get along. Here's the heartiest of good wishes to him, and to E. J. also.

Sidney Olcott, the director of the Gene Gauntier Feature Players, loves his joke. This propensity was the means of lowering him in the estimation of R. Henderson Bland, the talented English actor who portrayed the Christ in "From the Manger to the Cross." Mr. Olcott, it is fair to say, is in no measure lacking in the reverence accorded by all actors to the memory of David Garrick, that pupil of Dr. Samuel Johnson who later became so famous on the English stage and who passed to his long rest during the darker days of the American Revolution. When the Kalem company returned from Jerusalem, a few days were spent in London. Mr. Bland invited Mr. Olcott to dine with him at the Greenroom Club and gave him a card. In the course of his flying trip from Jacksonville to New York, recently, the popular director was telling some friends gathered about a table in Jack's how it came about. Mr. Olcott duly presented the card at the Greenroom and was escorted to the reception room by one of the bemedaled veterans who officiate as club servants. On Mr. Bland's arrival the two proceeded to the dining room, where dinner is served at one long table.

"Beg pahdon, Mr. Olcott, do you know whose chaar you're sitting in?" inquired the English actor.

"What's that?" in turn asked the American.

"Do you know whose chaar you're sitting in?"

"No. Whose?"

"David Garrick's," said the Englishman in his most impressive manner.

"Is that so?" responded Olcott as he glanced apprehensively toward the door. "All right. If he comes in I'll let him have it."

Bland threw up his hands. There were tears in his voice as he said: "Oh, Mr. Olcott, how could you?"

"Do you know," said "Sid," "I fear Bland has never regarded me just the same since that night!"

FILM MAN GETS IN BAD.

Mr. J. V. Bryson, manager of the Laemmle Film Service of Minneapolis, Minn., reports that Mr. H. M. McLean, formerly connected with his office, has been apprehended and is now awaiting trial in Superior, Minn., for obtaining money under false pretenses. Mr. McLean represented to moving picture men that he was in the employ of the Laemmle Film Service and succeeded in borrowing sums of money varying from $5 to $50 on the strength of his connection with that company.

"The Great Unknown" (Eclair).

By H. C. Judson.

THESE Eclair pictures giving stories of the great Northern wilds of Canada are winning favor on their own merits. The plots have been fresh and interesting and nearly all of them have shown careful planning and a clear sense of what makes an offering effectively dramatic. In this case we have a story that is somewhat more imaginative than usual. It "gets over," too, in spite of its shortcomings on which we need not dwell at length, for, though they are noticeable, the tale as told in its beautifully photographed backgrounds, carries the mind easily over them. The object of the offering is to draw the wilds themselves, how they seem and feel to the lonely adventurers who are attracted and also repelled by them. Gold is the lure and love that feels the need of gold, and the reward is loneliness, hardship and death.

Scene from "The Great Unknown" (Eclair).

The first scene opens in a saloon at the edge of the great unknown, which we are soon made to feel stretches for leagues of snowy wastes northward, a forest wilderness. An old man, unrecognized by any, enters the saloon among the merrymakers and seats himself at the piano. As his fingers touch the keys, a symbolic picture of dreary solitudes rises and we are made to understand the meaning of the minor chords he has played. The people at the tables understand and the owner of the place, a gambler and his wife, also know. Following this scene come pictures that tell us the man's story. At the beginning he is young and rich and in his own home entertaining friends, among them the girl he loves and his rival for her affection. We saw the same two as the saloon's owner and his wife. In this scene, too, the man seats himself at the piano and is playing when a telegram is handed to him telling him that his whole fortune is gone.

His hope of marrying the girl is now also gone. She loves him and is far from renouncing him, but he knows that she has been brought up among better surroundings than he can now give her and his sense of fitness forbids his permitting her to link her fate with his. After three or four beautiful scenes in which the struggle between hope, love and despair are pictured and in which the friend, who is soon to show how false he is, acts a non-committal part, like craft waiting for a chance to snatch what it wants, the three young people start for the Northwest in hope of finding gold. When the man has "struck it rich" he is going to marry the girl.

Five years pass. The gold hasn't been found; but the man and the girl have been married and are living in a neat but humble cabin. The wife has become homesick for the city and its comforts and is in a rebellious mood. At this point the character of the other man begins to be clearly shown. He is a gambler and has plenty of money. He shows it to the wife, but is repulsed by her. The man enters and sees enough to know what is in the air. He leaves her to make one desperate attempt to find a rich pocket of the precious lure and now we are given some beautiful pictures of the wintry woods. The photography in some of these forest pictures, deep in snow, with the dog-sleds, is particularly fine. There is a glimpse of a canoe shooting the tumbling rapids of a torrent and it is full of thrills.

The seeker is unsuccessful and is found lying at the point of death by his rival, who also happens to be out in the wastes. This man instead of helping him, leaves him to perish and takes from him his famous lead dog to show the woman as evidence that her husband has perished. But the man is helped by an Indian girl and recovers. She also shows him where the gold can be found and he comes back rich to find his wife married to the gambler. There is a very dramatic scene in which the acting is restrained and the incident deeply emotional. Coming back thus from so many difficulties he is filled with disgust at the love of gold and all that goes with it. He throws the bags down in contempt and goes out again to the wilds. Again he falls, almost overcome by hunger and cold, and again is saved by the same Indian girl, with whom he now lives for ten years. Perhaps they were calm years. He has found all the gold he wanted and had been comfortable in his cabin far from the trouble of the greater world. But when the Indian dies, he turns back towards home and it is he that has entered the saloon kept by his rival and his one-time wife. The end is a tragedy. The man driven insane by his brooding shoots the gambler and is shot at the same time himself. Both lie dead on the floor.

The picture's most noticeable shortcoming is in the subtitles. One of these gives a rather bad impression near the beginning of the story, for it makes the man promise the girl that he will marry her after five years, when he has found gold, if she will come with him to the North. Then it would have been better if sub-titles had made it clearer that the marriage ceremony had been performed after they had reached the North. The picture is such that these things are not really needed, but some may feel that they ought to have been there. We noticed one or two studio scenes that were a bit artificial. One of these, a picture of changing Northern lights, is a fine conception and gets over well in spite of its artificiality.

Barbara Tennent, who plays the lead, is worthy of very high commendation. She is increasing her command of expression, and because her emotional acting lights, as it were, her good looks, she seems to be growing in that way too. Fred Truesdell plays opposite to her and, at the picture's big moments, is forceful and full of meaning in his acting. J. W. Johnston takes the villain's role and plays quietly and intelligently. Helen Marten plays the Indian girl very acceptably, but doesn't look her part. Oscar Lund, the producer, deserves credit for his work.

ALDERMEN HAVE A LIVELY HEARING.

There was a lively time at the public hearing held by the Aldermanic Committee on Laws and Legislation in the New York Aldermanic Chamber, Saturday, February 15th. While this meeting was called to consider the various ordinances afforded to relieve the moving picture situation, the principal argument centered around the so-called Folks ordinance, which was prepared by a special committee appointed by Mayor Gaynor and introduced by Alderman Ralph Folks. The Aldermanic Chamber was crowded with interested and curious spectators and the discussions threatened at times to end the meeting in a riot. The Folks ordinance was well supported by Alderman Folks, Chief Wallace, of the Mayor's License Bureau, Gilbert H. Montague, of the Women's Municipal League, Michael Furst, chairman of the Mayor's committee, which drafted the ordinance, and a number of others of more or less prominence. Alderman Johnnie White was the principal objector and the chief objection made by him was that the proposed law was drafted in the interest of the motion picture trust. The discussions grew acrimonious between several aldermen and finally concluded with the predominance of opinion in favor of the Folk ordinance. And thus ended another act in the Aldermanic comedy.

FROM THE MANGER TO THE CROSS.

Mr. S. B. Leland, Montpelier, Vermont, reports capacity business in the Majestic Theater of Burlington with this feature. The Majestic is one of the finest theaters in Northern New England, with seating capacity of over seven hundred, and uses a full orchestra. Mr. Leland is arranging bookings for this Kalem feature in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont.

BRITISH NOTES.

By Our Own Correspondent.

The frequency with which English children attend picture theaters must be of interest to the American trade. Recent investigation here among a class in a London school show that of 391 boys, 258 or 66 per cent. had been to a picture show that week, 108 had been twice, 19 three times, and a few four times. Of a mixed class of 45 children between eight and ten years old, 36 had visited a moving picture show, while nearly half of their number had been twice in the same week. Similar returns are shown from other schools and it is the custom of several day school teachers here to inform the pupils which are the best pictures to see.

Mr. Paul J. Rainey's African Hunt pictures have proved such an attraction at the Holborn Empire that the proprietors of the hall have arranged with the millionaire-sportsman to run the films for an indefinite period. Mr. Reginald Carrington came over specially from New York to lecture to the pictures.

Mr. L. Solenne, British manager for Messrs. Pathe, has at last thrown the long expected bombshell into the trade here and now after March 29th next no new Pathe films will be sold outright, but will be rented direct to the exhibitor by Messrs. Pathe themselves. The Cines Company which, along with Messrs. Gaumont and Pathe, were reported to be forming a combine to achieve their purpose, declare, on the other hand, in favor of the existing system of film sale to the renter. General feeling on Messrs. Pathe's decision is not at all favorable.

A nature study picture of a humorous character is truly something of a novelty. Kineto, Ltd., have, however, succeeded in filming most naturally "The Diary of a Duckling," with its obviously grotesque and quaint subjects in many diverting moods and positions.

Mr. George Smith, the British Vitagraph agent, is more than ever convinced that self praise is no recommendation. He does not believe in advertising his subjects here by glaring announcements written up from a dictionary of superlative but unostentatiously sends his clients copies of testimonials from exhibitors of their own class.

The new color process Gaumont "Chrono-Chrome" is evidently quite as adaptable to the device agencies of the news Kinematographer as ordinary monochrome processes. Last Sunday an operator took "Chrono-Chrome" pictures at Nice, of the grand carnival of flowers there and by a supreme effort there were exhibited in London on the following Tuesday afternoon, long before the black and white films.

The two A. B. films "Iola's Promise" and "Oh Those Eyes," (I am informed by the English agents), were recently shown to the H. M. the King of Greece and the Royal Family. They were much appreciated.

Another new color process has been announced here known as "Tetoachrome." Four distinct sets of pictures are taken and projected simultaneously yet, for these, the inventor claims that they cost less than ordinary black and white pictures. I have heard that an American agency is being sought.

As I write the Non-Flam Bill is being introduced in Parliament. Its principal object is to prevent inflammable materials being labelled non-flam.

A most interesting film is that which will be shortly liberated by Messrs. Hepworth of London. It is founded upon the novel "Geo. Barnwell" and the staging of the old London street scenes is said to be most faithful.

The British Fire Prevention Committee recently made searching tests of the immunity from fire of a new non-inflammable film bare, marketed here under the name of "Cellit." The substance passed every test and is the first to receive official recognition.

Middlesex Aneina proprietors are determined to hold out for Sunday opening and a policy of "war to the end" is being adopted. It is calculated that the 236 theaters which would be open on Sundays would only employ 2,300 on the Sabbath while 20,000 are employed on that day in the liquor trade.

FOREIGN TRADE NOTES.

The family of the late Tolstoi have appealed to the Russian authorities and to the sense of decency in every country against the alleged reproduction of the life of the great Russian reformer in moving pictures. The films purporting to show scenes from the life of Tolstoi were made after his death and are put together in a cheap and sensational manner without any foundation in fact. The alleged reproduction is described as a wretched medley of melodramatic episodes, offensive to every admirer of the great friend of humanity.

Dr. Frielinghaus, a prominent writer on national economics, proposes to the German Government to take over the kinematographic industry in all its branches. He thinks this is the only way to utilize the invention for the genuine benefit of the masses. The German kinematographic papers ridicule this idea and claim that the industry will regulate itself on the principle of the survival of the fittest.

"Le Petit Marseillais" has compiled an interesting table of moving picture progress in Marseilles. The receipts of the electric theaters in Marseilles during 1911 amounted in all to 1,419,295 francs. Last year the number of electric theaters having increased to 56, the total receipts were 1,506,789 francs. This showing is all the more remarkable in view of the unprecedented persecutions to which exhibitors in Southern France were subjected in 1912.

Practical attempts to enlist the kinematograph in aid of X-Ray experiments have been made by Dr. Biesalki and Dr. Kohler of Berlin. In France interesting experiments were made by Dr. Commandon and Dr. Lemon, while in England a special apparatus was tried by Professor Stirling. In the present state of X-Ray kinematography only the motions of the hand, elbow and the foot have been successfully reproduced. The application of the X-Ray kinematography to the entire bodies of small animals, such as kittens, rabbits and monkeys has been entirely feasible and all the vital processes in the bodies of these animals can be shown on the screen.

A STUDY OF MICRO-MOTION.

Greater Efficiency, Less Energy, More Power, Economy and Profit.

MODERN business methods call for greater efficiency and expedition. To eliminate time-consuming movements on the part of workers, and to more thoroughly secure that adaptability or vocational perfection which puts the right-worker in the right place is the object of micro-motion. To secure these ends the motion-picture machine is being adopted. It has been declared by the Efficiency Society that what the telescope did for astronomy, or the microscope did for biology, or the spectroscope for chemistry; micro-motion has done for talented labor. Motion pictures are taken of a mechanic at work, various processes of constructing or assembling machinery or kindred occupations being preferred. A large clock subdivided to a sixteenth part of a second, is shown in the picture along with the workman. As the picture proceeds each minute motion of the workman is shown along with the passing of the time consumed in the making of that motion. These pictures when thrown upon the screen are studied very closely, it then becomes an easy matter to discover and eliminate useless time occupying motions, and power consuming energy. The immediate profitable results are twofold, the experience gained by the present workers, and the teaching of apprentices and others of the quickest means to accomplish certain results minus loss of time and energy.

In discussing this new and revolutionary system at the annual meeting of the Efficiency Society, Mr. Aldrich said that investigators of problems relating to management have found that progress in all arts where there were few measuring devices used was very slow, and that when devices which could make measuring inexpensive were found, there had been rapid strides made.

Micro-motion study furnishes a means of teaching the unskilled man the very best methods. Its records have effected us a great saving. It permits the creation of measurable standards of best methods. The day will soon come when we shall have a national bureau of standards of best methods. The process also provides a means which the Government can use in collecting and recording the best practices in foreign countries in such forms that workmen in our industries can learn the best methods of all lands, without individual travel and investigation.

It will thus be seen that the motion picture when used as a means of increasing efficiency is attracting a large amount of attention from efficiency engineers, and the rapid growth and expansion of these methods is confidently expected and eagerly awaited.

Applied to Child Labor the benefits of these researches in micro-motion are of interest to those who have been seeking to solve the problem of "Fatigue and Efficiency." Up to this time efficiency has meant great fatigue in child labor, especially as children are not quick to resort to many of the little labor saving tricks common to adults. It is only another credit to the kinematograph, the list of which is daily increasing. Universal in its powers, unlimited in ts applications, it seems destined to become as great a help to the artisan, as to the scholar, artist or scientist.

THE GAUMONT EDUCATIONAL CATALOGUE.

A 72-page booklet giving a classified list of educational subjects has been issued by the Gaumont Company, which should be of great assistance in the arranging of special educational programs, and which shows something of the possibility of adopting the moving picture as an educator.

Upwards of forty distinct branches of knowledge are filmed in a most useful and instructive form, making the list one which should be in the hands of every exhibitor who desires to make his exhibition "worth while" by lifting it from the monotony of "the same thing," besides interesting the educational authorities around him.

"That Educational Night" is now made more possible, and more attractive; it certainly ought to become a feature of each week's program. So that no one shall be bewildered with the elaborate and varied list of these educational subjects, the Gaumont Company wishes it to be understood that, "The educational department will gladly prepare any kind of suitable program, for either a popular entertainment, or a lecture, or any other particular course." It certainly appears now that the enterprising exhibitor has a duty to perform, in bringing the contents of this catalogue to the notice of the educational authorities in his community. It is a surprising fact that but a small percentage of the rank and file of school principals and teachers are acquainted with the educational qualities of kinematography; indeed, it seems at the present time, that clergymen are more conversant with the powers of the moving pictures than school masters. This may probably be because having met the evils which at times have followed the abuses of the pictures they were wise enough to see the good results from their proper use with proper subjects.

To the clergy also this catalogue will prove very helpful as there is a good supply of all kinds of subjects for church and institutional work. Augmenting previous lists of educational pictures which have been noticed on this page, and which are yet to be amplified by others from leading manufactures, the day is at hand when a splendid equipment will be at the service of every-one interested in the use of them.

SUBJECTS THAT AID HEALTH AUTHORITIES.

The health authorities of the city of New York are making great preparations for a "spring cleaning" of the whole city before the hot weather sets in. One of the particular things they have called to the attention of the citizens is the "fly trouble," in which they advise prevention by cleanliness, rather than the after cure of "swatting." In Jersey, also, the authorities are bringing before the people the "mosquito trouble." This is the time when preference should be given to the following subjects issued by the General Film Co.

The Mosquito: The enemy to mankind.

The War On the Mosquito: Methods employed in getting rid of this evil.

The Fly Pest: Showing the menace to health of this unclean insect.

Life in Our Ponds: Showing forms of life which populate small bodies of water and are dangerous to health.

Boil Your Water: A Microscopic examination of a drop of stagnant water.

Last year reports came in from all parts of the States as to the value of this series of pictures wherever used; there is therefore all the more reason why that same good result should be increased a hundred-fold; in some cities they were shown with great satisfaction to the children in the schools.

A RECORD IN EDUCATIONAL RELEASES.

In the last issue of the Moving Picture World the release column shows that the C. G. P. C., list for release, seventeen subjects, fifteen of which can be classed as Educationals. This is without doubt the largest number ever listed from a single company at one time, and speaks volumes for the progress being made in this class of moving picture work.

Among ten other manufacturers sixteen similar subjects are recorded, making a total of thirty-one on the "Licensed release" page.

From the "Independent releases" there are about fifteen others making in all a total of forty-six different educational subjects. It should be especially noticed that this does not include the "Weeklies" or "Animated" subjects, otherwise the grand total of about sixty would be reached.

As the manufacturers have always contended that the dearth of educational films was on account of the lack of demand for such subjects, may it now be interpreted that this large increase which has been of a noticeable growth is in corresponding proportions to an increase in the demand? If so, it must appear that the time is at hand when the educational picture is coming into its own well merited place. This will be very interesting to all advocates of educational kinematography, and without doubt will cause a general advance in the exhibiting of this class of picture. The singular coincidence of this increased listing of films, at the same time that several firms are issuing special catalogues of educational subjects, is of great importance, and means much for the immediate future of the educational picture.

"JOCULAR WINDS" (American).

A society drama, exposing some of the shadows of an apparent life of ease, has been produced by The American Company, under the title, "Jocular Winds." The principal character, Mrs. Carlton, lofty and arrogant, will not deign to acknowledge the kindly greeting of her new neighbor. Her own ill success in matters of finance and speculation have given rise to a stoicism from which only a super-natural effort could release her.

Dame Fortune having withdrawn her beaming countenance, the prospects of recuperating from her severe losses looked very poor and it seemed only a matter of time when the old adage, "Pride comes before a fall," should again be illustrated. The stranger, however, having tasted of the dregs of life's chalice, had a heart filled with "Malice toward none and charity to all," and so when by the act of providence she was placed in position to avenge herself upon her haughty neighbor, she broke her proud spirit by presenting her with the mortgage, the foreclosure of which would have been disgrace to which death itself would have been preferable. The natural beauty in the settings, the perfect dramatization of characters and the human interest feature of this picture make it a veritable gem. It is to be released March 6th.

Scene from "Jocular Winds" (American).

HELEN GARDNER'S CLEOPATRA.

The remarkable success attained by the picture drama "Cleopatra" has set the motion picture world talking. The artistic triumph scored by this picture throughout America, as well as the financial results obtained, has opened the eyes of the American exhibitors to the unlimited possibilities of American made productions. Not only in America has this splendid picture scored a signal triumph, but the crowning achievement of all is the brilliant success scored by "Cleopatra" in England and on the Continent.

The story is one that naturally lends itself to dramatic presentation and Miss Gardner's impersonation of Cleopatra will long linger in the memories of the motion picture lovers as one of the greatest performances ever shown on a screen. A great deal of credit must be given Charles L. Gaskill, the talented director, who has successfully blended together the beautiful and impelling scenes.

Harrison Fisher, the famous artist, says: "It is a most wonderful production. I have never seen a more dynamic personality, or more profound artist, than Miss Gardner. From beginning to end the picture is filled with both pictorial and dramatic beauty, and the story, by its matchless telling, grips with a degree of interest I have never observed before in a motion picture."

"THE LOST SON" (Lubin).

"The Lost Son" is a two-reel special to be released by the Lubin Company, February 17th. Director Barry O'Neill considers it to be one of his best productions. The story is written by Lawrence S. McCloskey, one of the Lubin's best dramatic writers. Harry Myers and Martin Faust play the two brothers, and Mrs. Geo. W. Walters has the very intense role of Mrs. Nolan, mother of the two boys. The atmosphere of the picture is very realistic.

John and George Nolan are brothers; John, a young man of 22, while kind-hearted, is inclined to be wild and frequents the billiard rooms. George, much younger, is quiet and devoted to his mother. One night John gets into a quarrel in the pool room, his antagonist knocks him down and John, seizing a billiard ball, hurls it at the man who drops, apparently dead. John rushes home and tells his mother that he has killed a man; she implores him to make his escape, which he does just as the police raid the house. The shock of the tragedy affects the father so that he drops dead. John races to the depot, boards a freight train and is lost to the family. Ed Jennings, the wounded man, does not die and John's mother advertises and instructs the police to find her boy, but to no purpose. John believes himself to be a murderer ,hunted by the law and dares not read a newspaper. George gets a position, he is industrious, well liked and quickly promoted; his salary takes care of the little home, but the mother continues to grieve for the lost son.

Scene from "The Lost Son" (Lubin).

Ten years pass and George is appointed to a position of trust. One day he has to visit another city on business for the firm, and is intrusted with a quantity of money. There is a fair; races are going on and he thinks it all right to take a day's enjoyment. In the crowd he is robbed or loses the wallet containing the firm's money. Terrified at the idea of what may be thought, he places the small amount of his own money on a horse hoping to win back his loss. The horse loses and in desperation he returns to the bookie and begs him to accept his watch on another bet. The bookie laughs, but after much persuasion takes the watch and opens the case. It contains the picture of a woman. He seizes George and demands "Whose picture it is." George replies that it is his mother. "It is my mother also," replies the bookie. George tells him that Ed Jennings did not die. The two brothers return to the old home. The mother is overwhelmed with joy and John makes good his brother's loss.

Gilbert M. Anderson, the world famous "Broncho Billy," has returned to Niles, California, where he will continue his splendid acting and excellent productions.

"SWAG OF DESTINY" (Essanay).

This powerful dramatic subject is gripping with intensely interesting situations. It's an audience "holder" and a positive box office attraction.

Flinty McNeal, a crook, receives a letter from his sweetheart, pleading with him to abandon his crooked life, marry her, and settle down on a little chicken farm near Dayton, her uncle having died and left her some money. McNeal is about to turn over a new leaf and start on the straight road, when he sees a man pick up a pocketbook from the sidewalk filled with money. The old desire to "get it" comes over him and he follows the man to his home. That night, while Jim Dorgan, the finder of the pocketbook, and his wife are sleeping under the influence of liquor, McNeal steals quietly into the house. His plan is interrupted for the time being by the crying of two infants. Mrs. Dorgan arises from the big arm chair, enters the sleeping chamber, and rocks the baby to sleep. She then falls into a heavy slumber. McNeal enters the room in which Mr. Dorgan is sleeping soundly, takes the pocketbook from the table, steals cautiously back into the bedroom, kidnaps one of the babies and leaves. He takes the infant to his sweetheart's home, where he promises to travel the straight and narrow path. The girl falls desperately in love with the baby, although aware of the fact that Flinty had stolen it. Some time later, McNeal discovers the home that he had robbed of the baby was nothing more or less than a baby farm, which had been raided a few days after his notable theft. Mr. and Mrs. Dorgan were sent to jail. Flinty and his sweetheart, now married, happy on the farm, leading a pure and simple life, promise themselves to make the child's future a happy one.

Scene from "Swag of Destiny" (Essanay).

Bryant Washburn as Flinty McNeal more than demonstrates his ability as a capable and impressive dramatic man. Dorothy Phillips gives her first efforts to the public in this drama. Everybody will agree with us when we say that her work is splendid. Frank Dayton as Mr. Dorgan lives up to the character in a remarkable way, as he always does.

This production is booked for release Friday, Feb. 28th.

"THE INFLUENCE ON BRONCHO BILLY" (Essanay).

A remarkable and interesting drama of the West is depicted in this exceptionally excellent example of Western photoplay.

Jim Hendricks receives a letter from his daughter in the East, stating that she is on her way, and will arrive with her little girl that day. The stage coach carrying her from the railroad station, some miles from her father's home, meets with an accident. While repairing this vehicle of ancient times, Bessie Hendricks' young daughter canters off into the woods in search of wildflowers. Bessie runs after her. Having captured the rascal and returning to the road, Bessie discovers the coach has gone on its way. Broncho Billy on horseback discovers the young woman in her unfortunate position, offers his horse to her, places her safely in the saddle with her daughter, and leads the horse miles to her father's home. This young westerner, Broncho Billy, not really the character we see him, is a desperate outlaw. Jim Hendricks and his wife welcome their daughter with open arms, and after learning of Broncho Billy's noble and generous deed, offer him the hospitality of their home. The next morning Broncho Billy, about to depart, has a long talk with Bessie. His plans for holding up the stage that day are cast to the four winds. He determines to lead a straight life, and all for a woman. "Love hath conquered an iron heart."

Mr. G. M. Anderson as "Broncho Billy" gives a splendid performance of his world-wide character creation, while Bessie Sankey, as the daughter, plays this noble and loving character in a never-to-be-forgotten manner.

This production is booked for release March 1st.

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" (Imp).

By George Blaisdell.

It is seldom that one man or one woman dominates a play or a picture. In these two reels King Baggot holds the center of attention all the way. In his portrayal of the good Dr. Jekyll and the bad Mr. Hyde, this dual identity so singularly interwoven, this strange creation of Robert Louis Stevenson's, the leading man of the Imp Company outdoes himself. It is a forceful characterization, and shows much care and study. In the periods when Mr. Baggot depicts Mr. Hyde the horror of it holds you. It may be said, and said in cold blood, that Mr. Baggot has done nothing for the screen that will rank higher as an artistic piece of work than will his exposition of Mr. Hyde—the transformation of the charitable physician into a fiend.

Scene from "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" (Imp).

There are many thrilling moments in this picture—moments that serve to make more complete the illusion. The refinements of kinematography lend material aid in the creation of this illusion. It is through the means of the dissolving process that the transformation is made peculiarly effective. You see the change from the man of good to the man of evil right before your eyes.

The story is coherently and lucidly told. It is competently staged. The photography is clear. The support is excellent. Jane Gale plays the fiancee of Dr. Jekyll. What work falls to her is splendidly done. Matt Snyder has the part of the father of the fiancee. The veteran actor does not have much chance to show what he can do, but his "bit" is finished. The portrayal of the friends of Dr. Jekyll is in skillful hands—the part of the doctor by Howard Crampton and that of the lawyer by William Sorrell. Their acting is sympathetic, workmanlike.

Bryant Washburn, one of the favorite players of the Essanay Eastern Stock company, was presented with a silver loving cup at the annual banquet of the "Gold Seal" Club, last Thursday evening.

"IN A ROMAN GARDEN" (Powers).

In this single-reel production Director MacDonald's company gives us an interesting picture. Edwin August wrote the scenario and also plays the leading part. Mr. MacDonald was particularly fortunate in his backgrounds. There are spacious terraces, the pure white of the columns standing out sharply in the excellent photography of the picture. There are winding outdoor stairways of stone and a pool with a fountain playing. Mr. August is strong in his portrayal of Marius, the Roman who tires of the monotonous life of his court, and who first falls in love with a Christian girl and later under the influence of the cross she carries. It is a tale of a man of the world whose scoffing was changed to prayer.

Scene from "In a Roman Garden" (Powers).

Marius, in walking through his grounds, comes upon the Christian girl. He tries to embrace her, but she repels him. The following day Marius sees at the other side of a small lake the same girl. The Roman goes to her, takes from her a small cross and throws it to the ground. He mocks her attitude of prayer; with his companions he goes away in great glee. Again he sees the girl at prayer. He is softened in spirit. He joins her and she explains to a willing listener the significance of the cross. The Christian girl pleads with Marius. Later two of the riotous members of the court come upon the girl at her prayers and try to embrace her. Marius sees them and rescues the girl in no gentle fashion. The two walk through the garden. Marius is now a convert. The girl departs from the grounds. Marius, with the cross before him, slowly ascends the rugged steps.

GREAT EASTERN HAS NEW PLANT.

The Great Eastern Film Mfg. Co., with offices at 218 Tremont St., Boston, Mass., capital $200,000, have purchased a four story building 30 x 200 in the town of Stoughton, Mass., where they will locate their manufacturing plant and studio. James A. Reid, treasurer and manager of the company, is now in Jacksonville, Fla., locating winter quarters for the Great Eastern Photoplayers. This company has signed up Virginia Keatinge for leading lady. Miss Keatinge opened the College Theater of Chicago and was seen in Boston for two seasons with James O'Neil. She toured the United States and Australia as Kundry in "Parsifal."

INJUNCTION ARGUMENT POSTPONED.

The motion to make permanent a temporary injunction granted against the General Film Company on behalf of one of the preferred stockholders came up for argument in Part I, Supreme Court, Special Term. By consent of counsel it went over until Tuesday, February 25th.

"THE CHEAPEST WAY" (Pathe).

"The Cheapest Way," a Pathe comedy of exceptional merit, will be released on March 1st. It is the story of a foxy father, who realizes that his daughter's marriage would rid him of the expense of supporting her and still be for her own good. He does not believe in waiting and works a very clever scheme to overcome the bashful suitor's hesitancy. This is a synopsis of the story:

Dan Cary, a crafty old farmer, known as "Foxy Dan," decided that his beautiful daughter was too much of an expense on his hands and determined that so long as she was in love she might as well be married right away. Cary, accordingly, saw to it that his daughter's bashful lover was provided with the quiet corner so necessary to the all important declaration of love. With a wise wink he gave his consent to the engagement. But the engagement of beautiful Betty was by no means a wedding. So he tried the plan of roughening the course of true love. The rube fell for the scheme and asked Betty to elope with him immediately. But he never suspected that the convenient cabman and the handy license and ring were all Dan Cary's idea of "The Cheapest Way."

Scene from "The Cheapest Way" (Pathe).

The plot provides opportunities too numerous to mention for the little businesses that bring out the big laughs, and as good comedy is the rarest of all entertainment you would do well to book it on March 1st.

BIG MIRROR SCREEN INSTALLED.

Mr. Frank Manning, Eastern representative of the Mirror Screen Company of Shelbyville, Ind., reports the installation of the largest glass screen in America at the New Eisele Theater, 80 Belleville Avenue, Newark, N. J. The size of the plate is 14 feet by 18 feet and the weight is 2635 pounds. This mammoth picture curtain is counterweighted and raised and lowered eight to ten times a day by a fourteen-year-old boy. Messrs. Pollak & Bratter, managers of the theater, are highly pleased with the results.

During the past week, Mr. Manning has sold mirror screens to the following well known exhibitors: Ben Title for his new theater in Brooklyn; Minsky's new theater, 210 East Houston Street, New York City; A. H. Morrison, Princess Theater, Hartford, Conn., and two for Thecht & Gold, Passaic, N. J.

DOBBS SELLS SOUTH AMERICAN RIGHTS.

Walter McCallum and Roger Bennett, of Medford, Ore., have bought the South American rights for Beverly B. Dobbs' "Atop of the World in Motion" pictures. They will leave for South America on February 22nd, stopping at Colon enroute. Mr. McCallum was formerly manager of the Opera House at Medford, Ore., and also was associated with Mr. Harry Hayward in the management of the Spokane Theater. Mr. Bennett has been in the motion picture business on the Pacific coast for a number of years.

AMBROSIO "SATAN" DRAWING BIG HOUSES.

The Feature Film Co., of Canada, with offices in Montreal, advise that they are playing this picture in the biggest theaters in Montreal to record business. They are being flooded with requests for bookings as a result and believe this masterpiece will meet with big success in the Provinces.

F. E. MOORE'S "HIAWATHA."

A scene in Mr. F. E. Moore's "Hiawatha," based on Longfellow's immortal epic, is shown herewith. This moving picture in four parts has been portrayed by a cast of one hundred and fifty full-blooded Indians and is, to quote the producer, a purely American drama written by an American poet and interpreted by true Americans in America.

Scene from F. E. Moore's "Hiawatha."

A press exhibition of the pictures will be given at the Berkeley Theater, 19 West 44th Street, on Tuesday evening, February 25th, at 8:30 o'clock. Press representatives, state right buyers and educators interested in moving pictures, who have not already received tickets, may obtain them by applying to Mr. F. E. Moore, 1212 Times Building, or will be admitted on presentation of their card at the door.

The Moving Picture World expects to review this picture at length in next week's issue. Mr. F. E. Moore, as an authority on the American Indian, collaborated with the Committee of Arrangements and furnished the American Indians in costume who took part in the recent Hudson-Fulton celebration.

Robert Stuart Pigott will recite the poem as the Indians enacted on the screen. An orchestrial score of Ojibway music has been especially prepared for the occasion.

It will also be of interest to the trade to learn that these pictures were taken by an Eberhardt Schneider camera, and the beautiful photographic effects obtained were largely due to that excellent device.

VITAGRAPH TO LOCATE AT SANTA BARBARA?

The presence of Mr. Albert E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company, at Santa Barbara, Cal., has given the press of that city excuse for announcing the belief that it is the intention of the Vitagraph Company to establish a producing company at Santa Barbara. Mr. Smith owns a location in the city, which is considered suitable for studio purposes, and the Vitagraph Company is said to have a lease on several acres of attractive property in the immediate vicinity. Mr. Smith is reported as expressing the opinion that there was hardly any doubt but that a studio would be established there, and that the company working at Santa Monica would be installed.

NAILING THE FILM PIRATES.

The European Feature Film Corporation of New York succeeded in capturing a film pirate who was attempting to show "Salome" at the Minerva Theater, Fifth Avenue, Pittsburgh. The European Feature Film Company has an exclusive copyrighted production of "Salome" from the Savoia Film Company, of Turin, Italy. A copy of this film was procured by Messrs. Levy & Cohn, and an attempt was made to show the picture in New York. Suit was brought and a writ issued by a New York court for the seizure of the film, but before it could be executed the infringing picture was shipped out of town. It was traced to Pittsburgh and under another writ the film was seized by the United States marshal, in whose custody it will remain until the suit is decided. Mr. H. K. Somborn, manager of the European Film Corporation, is pleased with the quick action obtained, and is advised by his attorney that the copyright law is sufficient to protect his company's interests in this matter.

"AN OLD MAID'S LOVE" (Great Northern).

While the title to this laugh provoking comedy might give the impression that an old subject was being presented on the screen in a different grab, the fact is, that it is original in its conception and is presented by several of the most prominent players of the Great Northern roster. The director who produced it, most certainly had a keen sense of the humorous and the players evidently entered into the same spirit. Nothing more funny can be imagined than the various plights which overtake the spinster in her efforts to win the attention of Jack who is visiting the home of her brother, Professor Hart. The latter has a young daughter, however, and Jack pays his attentions to her. But the spinster does not lose courage or hope and persists in using all the little artifices with which her sex are familiar in times such as are being related. She tries to play tennis and meets with disaster in the form of a fall. She presides at an outdoor luncheon and all but topples from her chair and in various other ways she causes laughter, rather than the sympathy for which she is looking. In the end, however, she bows to the decree of fate and is among the foremost to throw rice after Jack and his bride and wish them good luck.

Scene from "An Old Maid's Love" (Great Northern).

The photography is especially excellent, the outdoor scenes living up to the Great Northern standard, while the interiors are quaint and elaborate at intervals. Of the acting, it may be said that the principals are at their best.

Scene from "The Man From Outside" (Reliance).

Illustrating a scene in a Reliance three-reel feature subject, the above engraving shows Irving Cummings in the role of the twin brothers—playing both characters. All Mr. Cummings' work is of the highest character and in this dual role he is particularly good. The subject is one of the most ambitious made by the Reliance Company in some time and will be released March 5th.

"THE DOLL AND THE DEVIL" (Pilot).

This is a very fine comedy, and tells of an old toymaker of Nuremberg, who has been trying nearly all his life to make a life size doll that will walk and talk to present to the little princess. His only other ambition is to marry his daughter Gretel to a nobleman. His apprentice, Fritts, is in love with Gretel, and she with him. The elderly Baron Crosswig in visiting the toymaker to get a doll for the little princess sees the fair Gretel and wishes to marry her, but this marriage means that the old toymaker must put up a large amount of money as a dowry, which he cannot do, but he remembers the large sum of money which he has in trust for Fritts, and which Fritts is in ignorance of, and decides to appropriate this money for the dowry. He finally completes the doll, excepting that it will not walk and talk, and the old man is very downcast as he enters the room where the doll is packed in a large box ready for the Baron when he calls. While the old man has been out of the room Fritts and Gretel have been preparing for the Carnival, Fritts in a Mephistopheles costume with a stick of red fire, and Gretel has appropriated the doll's dress, as she has nothing more suitable for such an occasion. When they are about to depart they hear the old toymaker approaching. They hurriedly take the doll from the box, and Gretel assumes its place; Fritts hiding behind a chair. The old man enters, looks lovingly at the doll, and says, "I would sell my soul to the devil if it would walk and talk." At this Fritts steps from behind the chair, lights his red fire, and stepping up to the old man, says, "You said you would sell your soul to me if it would walk and talk." He then proceeds to make the supposed doll, in fact, the fair Gretel to step from the box, and they hurriedly leave for the Carnival. The old man so overcome falls asleep, and in the morning when he awakes the doll is back in the box. The Baron calls, and is so pleased with the doll, although it does not walk and talk, that he takes it; and relinquishes his suit, the old man having become conscience stricken and refused to give the dowry the Baron desires. They all join in drinking the health of Fritts and Gretel. This picture will be released February 27.

Scene from "The Doll and the Devil" (Pilot).

PROTECTING THE COPYRIGHT.

A very important case on the subject of moving picture copyrights has arisen in connection with the Gaumont Company's suit against Frank Hatch in Pittsburg for infringement of "The International Conspiracy." The infringing picture was traced to Pittsburg and the Gaumont Company in protecting the rights of its licenses in the Western District of Pennsylvania brought suit against Frank Hatch for the infringement of the copyright, and Judge Young of the United States Court in Pittsburg granted a writ of seizure to the Gaumont Company, directing the marshal to seize the copy which Hatch had in his possession and hold the copy subject to the final determination of the suit.

The marshal attempted to execute this writ and Hatch refused to give up the picture. He made various statements tending to throw the marshal off the search for the film. Attorneys for the Gaumont Company then appealed to the United States Court to adjudge Hatch in contempt of court. When Hatch saw that the Gaumont Company was in earnest in the matter he delivered the film to the marshal and it is now under lock and key in the United States Court. But the Gaumont Company did not stop here. It has pressed its charge against Hatch for contempt of court and on February 14 the matter was argued at length before Judges Buffington and Young by the Gaumont attorneys at Pittsburg.

Judge Young stated to Mr. Owens, the copyright counsel of the Gaumont Company, that he regarded the case as a very important one and that he wished to establish a precedent in this case. He, therefore, instructed Mr. Owens to present to the court an order upon Hatch to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt and Hatch will be given an opportunity to show cause why he should not be punished.

The Gaumont Company's attorney is contending that Hatch should not only be fined or imprisoned for the contempt against the court, but that he should be also required to pay over to the Gaumont Company its expenses in prosecuting the contempt case against him.

Mr. Owens, in connection with the case, said to-day upon his return from Pittsburg, "I believe that Hatch is in a very serious position. There is no question but that he is in contempt of court. There are two aspects to contempts. One is the criminal aspect with which we have nothing to do, but which the court takes up on its own motion and involves a fine or jail sentence as the case may be. The other is what is termed the civil aspect and under this doctrine I am contending that Hatch should be forced to pay the expenses and other damages of the Gaumont Company in connection with the contempt. I have no hesitancy in expressing the opinion that these contentions are well founded and I confidently expect the court to adopt our position."

HAMILTON THEATER, YONKERS, OPENS.

Mr. A. E. Hamilton of Yonkers, operating the Palace Theater there, opens his new Hamilton Theater this week. It will be devoted to high class motion pictures and vaudeville acts. Through J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," were installed two Power's No. 6-A" M. P. machines, motor driven, with Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer of 60 amp. capacity, also a full line of theater equipment and stage lighting apparatus. Mr. Hamilton had previously installed the Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer in his Palace theater and secured the light on his screen that he has been striving for ever since going in the picture business. In order to make his Hamilton Theater thoroughly up-to-date, in this direction, he installed another Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer.

LOUISVILLE.

INDICATIONS point to an early settlement of disagreement between striking musicians and operators on the one side and exhibitors on the other, both parties being willing to concede something. A meeting has been called for the near future, and it is expected that the details of the settlement will be decided at that time. The original point, that of the time limit of contracts, has already been waived. The union men have indicated their willingness to receive non-union musicians and operators into the labor organization, provided they are able to pass the examination. This means that the operators who took the place of the strikers will be retained. With the strike nearing an end, both parties are satisfied with the prospect. Only in one or two of the outlying districts has business been hurt by the walk-out, but exhibitors are anxious to do business with all concerned satisfied, and consequently they view the prospect of the termination of the trouble with gratification. This is even more marked in the case of the strikers, who have been hard pressed.

Moving pictures, which have held sway at Hopkins theater since the re-opening of that house several months ago, are to be abandoned, and replaced by six vaudeville acts. The theater has not been a paying proposition with motion pictures as the attraction, and the change will be resorted to in order to stimulate business. The theater located on Market Street, near Second, has been unprofitable for the past few years, even with vaudeville showing, and it is doubtful whether it can be made a success. A. C. Steuver, of St. Louis, announced the change of policy, following a visit to Louisville. Harry A. Bilger will remain in charge of Hopkins. Ten cents will be the admission price at matinees, while twenty-five cents will be charged at night for the lower floor.

Plans for the new Jefferson theater, which will be erected on the north side of Jefferson Street, between Third and Fourth, have been announced by the Levi-Taylor Land Company, which will erect the house. Vaudeville and moving pictures are to be utilized in the theater, which it is planned, will be ready for the public by September 1. High-class vaudeville and equally attractive motion pictures are promised by the projectors of the theater. Admission prices will range from 10 to 25 cents. Numerous new features are to be incorporated in the construction plans. One of prominence is the use of escalators, or moving stairways, now being used extensively in the east. The theater will have a main floor, balcony, gallery and mezzanine. The seating capacity will be around 2,000. Rest and smoking-rooms for men and women will be departures of note, while other equipment will be on a par. Work is to begin as soon as the present tenants have vacated the building, it is announced. J. J. Gaffney, of Louisville, is the architect in charge of plans for the house.

William L. Hibbitt is the new manager of the Olympic theater, on Market Street, near Floyd. Mr. Hibbitt is well known in moving picture and theatrical circles, having been connected with Keith's Louisville house for several years. The Olympic is controlled by the Hippodrome Amusement Company, which conducts the theater of that name at Second and Market Streets.

Musicians and operators who recently left Louisville moving picture theaters, are to be assisted financially by Local No. 17, International Alliance, Theatrical Stage Employes. This decision was reached at a recent meeting.

Evan Spires, pianist at the Gem theater, Frankfort, Ky., was the hero of a fire in the house recently. The blaze broke out near the operating booth, smoke permeating the air and throwing the audience into a near-panic. Mr. Spires rose from his seat and assured the audience that there was no danger. He then played a lively march while the patrons left the theater in orderly fashion. No one was injured, though one woman fainted from excitement after she had left the theater. J. C. Taylor, owner of the Gem, at once made preparations for resumption of business. New machines have been ordered and the Gem will reopen in the near future. The loss by fire was comparatively small, approximating $1,500. The building was insured.

The management of the Lyric theater, Cadiz, Ky., has made a concession to church folk of that town, and no performances will be given on Wednesday or Sunday nights. Residents of Cadiz are expected to attend church on the evenings mentioned. The Lyric recently gave a special performance, a part of the proceeds going to purchase a piano for one of the schools of Cadiz.

The Ministerial Association of Lexington, Ky., recently went on record as being opposed to moving picture performances on Sunday. A committee of three was appointed to wait on the Board of Commissioners and ask that the shows be closed. The Board, however, will take no action on the matter, it is believed. The subject was held over at its recent meeting. The commissioners stated that as long as the pictures shown were up to standard, there was no serious objection to their presentation. The Ministerial Association has taken the attitude that such exhibitions are "a desecration of the Sabbath; that they lower the moral tone of a community, and that they cultivate in the younger generation a spirit of profanation of the old-fashioned custom of observing Sunday as a rest day, which bodes ill for the future of American citizenship."

The People's theater, of Owensboro, Ky., has dropped vaudeville and will give its patrons straight moving pictures in the future. Alterations have been completed in the theater, which has been reopened.

The Danville, Ky., Auditorium Company has filed articles of incorporation and will conduct a moving picture theater. The capitalization is placed at $5,000, all of the stockholders being members of the Loyal Order of Moose. The property of the fraternal organization will be converted into a theater at once.

The Dolly Varden theater, on Central Avenue, near Laurel Street, Cincinnati, is to be doubled in seating capacity. This will be increased to about 500 by the Central Amusement Company, which controls the theater. Other improvements are to be made, according to present plans.

The Center Amusement Company, of Cincinnati, which will operate a motion picture house now under course of construction, has filed articles of incorporation, with a capitalization of $20,000. Joseph G. Guetle, Anthony E. Motsch and T. Motsch are interested chiefly. The house will be located at York Street and Freeman Avenue.

Joseph Goldberg, of Clarksville, Tenn., has awarded contracts for the erection of a new animated picture theater in that city. The cost will be about $11,000. The house will occupy ground 36 by 113 feet. It will be completed about April 1, according to plans. The name has not yet been selected. G. D. CRAIN, JR.

ST. LOUIS.

THE Empress, the new picture house on Olive Street a few doors west of Grand Avenue, opened to capacity houses Sunday, February 2nd. The opening of this house marks another step in the march of the picture houses in St. Louis, in the direction of Grand and Olive Streets, as with the completion of the New Grand Central on Lucas and Grand Avenue, in addition to the Princess at Grand and Olive Streets, this neighborhood will have quite a number of picture houses. The Empress is a perfect picture house. It has a seating capacity of 1800 chairs, an expansive mirror paneled lobby, and a color scheme of light drabs, blues and pinks with the chairs upholstered in green Russian leather. The lower floor carries a three-quarter inch wooden covering covered with cork carpet. Ten thousand lights are used to light the building, and back of the main auditorium is a very dainty women's rest room fully equipped with chairs and divans. The stage of the Empress is said to be the largest in the city, measuring thirty feet from stage to proscenium arch, with thirty feet above their heads for the flymen working on the bridge. From side to side the house measures forty feet with a forty-foot depth. The dressing rooms are connected by a spiral staircase with the stage, each dressing room being equipped with the latest facilities for make up and costuming. The house is under the management of Mr. C. P. Heib. The architectural work of the theater was designed by Mr. J. Dwyer a St. Louis artist.

A blaze in the operator's room of the Hippodrome, a picture house at 15 North Broadway, created a small sized panic and incidentally developed an exhibition of bravery upon the part of the attaches that created favorable comment in the daily papers, and revealed the fact that modern picture houses are capable of handling sudden fires to advantage owing to the excellent fire apparatus materials on hand. In the Hippodrome fire the blaze which originated in the operator's room was quickly stifled as the asbestos lining curtailed the spreading of the flames, and the attaches remained at their posts until the patrons were all out. The Hippodrome is under the management of Mr. Winthrop Thompson who is to be congratulated upon the excellent showing, both as to the fire prevention provided, and the bravery of his employees.

The First Christian Church of St. Louis at 3126 Locust Street, under the direction of the Reverend Dr. John L. Brandt has introduced an innovation in addition to the regular church services by installing moving pictures of "Scenes in and around Jerusalem" and other religious features. It is the purpose of the Reverend Dr. Brandt to make these pictures a regular Sunday institution. To children attending regularly at the Sunday services the pictures are expected to not only instruct but instill a desire for church attendance which will go a long way towards the making of better citizens.

Pictures of the St. Louis Forest Park Zoo, and the New York Zoological Park were recently exhibited at a banquet given at the Mercantile Club in conjunction with a talk given the diners by Mr. Courtlandt Harris of St. Louis, secretary of the Zoological Society of St. Louis. The pictures were taken by the Motograph Company of St. Louis and included views of the llama, bull moose, bear, deer, zebra, elk, buffalo and the kangaroo.

Frank L. Talbot, the genial, hustling, vaudeville and picture impresario whose Hippodrome and Gem theaters on 6th Street have made a gay White Way of that locality, has instituted a suit against Mrs. Mary E. Boyce of St. Louis to compel her to live up to an agreement made leasing the property on the south side of Market Street near Seventh to Talbot for a term of 99 years through William Flood, an agent of Talbot's. Mrs. Boyce is at present in Paris, France, and the agreement relative to the lease has not been ratified. It was the purpose of Mr. Talbot, after acquiring the property, to put up a million dollar hotel and theater on the site.

Managers and owners of picture houses, and also of the regular theaters appeared before the Legislative Committee of the city council recently to remonstrate against the passage of a bill relative to the amending of the city code making it imperative that buildings erected for other than moving pictures but at present being used for that purpose be made to conform with the regulations at present governing the regular theaters. The amendment if passed would necessitate the reconstruction of a good many small picture houses.

The advent of the new Edison talking pictures in St. Louis are being eagerly awaited, and the Columbia Theater management announces the new innovation will be a regular feature of their weekly bill.

Representative Wolf of Jefferson County has introduced a bill in the Missouri Legislature licensing moving picture houses and calling for an annual tax of $50.

PITTSBURGH.

BECAUSE the moving picture theater owners of Steubenville, Ohio, raised their prices from five cents to ten cents, the women and children of that place have instituted a boycott against the shows in an endeavor to make them lower their prices. The move was taken simultaneously on the part of the theater managers and is the result of the demand of the public for high priced and varied programs. The theater owners decided that in order to make any profit at all out of their business it was necessary to increase the price of admission, and recently all the theaters in Steubenville simultaneously raised their prices. The boycott was felt rather seriously the first few days but with the weakening of a number of the usual audiences the theaters are actually taking in more money than before the admission charge was raised. The boycott is not expected to last very long, as all the managers are sticking together and holding firm for the present established price of ten cents.

The old Newmyer Opera House, of Connellsville, Pa., has been sold and will be torn down. The theater has been used lately by moving picture shows, but because of its situation in the older part of the town was never much of a money-maker. Ogden Shoemaker was the last owner of the theater and the Connellsville Exchange is the new owner. The building covers 60 x 100 feet and has three storerooms on the ground floor. It is intended to erect a business house on the site when the theater is torn down.

Jack Lewton, who operates a moving picture machine in a local theater of Lorain, has fallen heir to $183,000 through the death of an uncle, Oscar A. Redman, a fruit trader at Tampa, Fla. Asked what he intended doing with his fortune the lucky man said he would buy the theater in which he is now employed, make his employer the manager, and keep on turning the "crank."

The interesting announcement that the Rev. G. S. Richards, pastor of the First Congregational Church, of this city, intends to have a moving picture machine installed in his church where educational and interesting pictures may be shown for the young people of the neighborhood, was made by Dr. Richards recently. There, on week day evenings pictures will be shown free to all who care to enter. This action creates another competitor for the theaters of that neighborhood.

Thomas McCaffrey has sold his theater at Butler and Forty-seventh street, this city, to John P. McConnel. The price paid for the property was $12,500. It is in the profitable Lawrenceville district and has been doing a splendid business for several years. The new owner will greatly enlarge and increase the seating capacity of the house.

The Gaumont Film Company, of New York, recently succeeded in having Judge James S. Young, of the United States Court issue a writ for the seizure of several moving picture films alleged to be in the possession of Frank Hatch, a Fourth Avenue film dealer. The Gaumont Company alleges the defendant infringed on their copyright by making duplicates of their pictures and then renaming them.

To portray by means of moving pictures the varied activities in Pittsburgh, a two-reel film is being arranged by the International Educational and Industrial Film Company, associated with Thomas A. Edison, with headquarters at 303 Bessemer Building. The film will show scenes in all sections of the city and will include the parks, public and office buildings, industries, rail and river commerce, etc., and will be the first time so much of Pittsburgh has been made available for the view of thousands througout the country. The film will first be shown in Pittsburgh, then in the surrounding towns and eventually all over the United States. The picture will advertise the city as well as the varied industries that have made Pittsburgh the workshop of the world.

In a recent editorial the Moving Picture World spoke of the gradual change in the attitude of the daily press toward the motion picture and the theaters where the pictures are exhibited, and commented on the fact that the daily papers were beginning to discover the merit of the motion picture. As if in support of this statement the "Pittsburgh Post" recently published the following paragraph over the signature of its dramatic critic:

"Over in Baltimore the other day the proprietor of a moving picture theater was brought before a magistrate and fined $20 and costs for exhibiting an indecent picture film. His chief defense was that the picture represented scenes from a play that was current on the legitimate stage a few years ago and which is even now traveling around the country in a musicalized form. As a play with acknowledged stars, playing to $2 audiences, nobody seems to be worrying about it. When reduced to motion picture photography the shameful evidence of its vulgarity arouses the ire of the police. Moral: Are the upper classes immune?"

This fair statement by a gentleman intimately connected with both the theatrical and newspaper business, calling attention to the fact that what is considered proper on the legitimate stage is condemned in a moving picture theater, speaks well for the change in attitude of that great force for good or evil, the daily press.

The Olympic Theater, Fifth Avenue, this city, played the film of "Satan" for two consecutive days and packed the house despite the fact the admission was raised to ten cents. The foyer of the theater contained several large lithographs well displayed and red lights were substituted for the regular white lights in illuminating the foyer. The entire exterior of the theater was very striking and constituted a splendid advertisement for the pictures inside.

Close competition between moving picture exhibitors of Farrel, a small town near here, has resulted in a mighty slashing of admission charges to children who can obtain entrance to two of the theaters in that town and see four reels of pictures for one cent. This competition, however, is likely to result in disaster as the large number of children now attending the shows is keeping away the adults with their five cent admissions, and the houses are packed with one cent patrons.

The Pittsburgh Local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Pennsylvania has sent out a personal appeal to the exhibitors of this State calling attention to the danger to the business that attends the enforcement of the "three four-foot aisles law." The League is using its efforts to have passed at this session of the legislature a law repealing the former one for one that will be more equitable to all concerned. The letter which the League has sent out asks for a greater membership and appeals for contributions to assist in getting the proposed new bill before the State legislature. The Department of State Factory Inspection has promised the officers of the League that it will use its influence in putting the bill through the legislature, and the officers of the Pittsburgh local are working hard to attain that end.

PHILADELPHIA.

HERMAN BROTHERS have purchased a large plot of ground at Sixtieth and Walnut Streets, and will erect a modern theater building, which will have a seating capacity of 1,600, and will cost about $70,000. This is another of a string of houses that are about to be built in the fast growing western section of the city, and from all indications competition will soon become very strong in that section.

The death of Harvey Flitcraft, the moving picture man of Camden, occurred very suddenly on February 10th, while he was sitting in his office. Mr. Flitcraft was one of the first men to open a picture theater in Camden, and from the very start made a big success of his undertaking. Moving picture men will regret the loss of this well known tradesman.

A number of Camden and Wilmington business men are interested in a new theater which is in course of constructing in Camden, on the site of the old Newton Hall. The new theater will be built along modern lines, and will have a seating capacity of 700.

Local clergymen and persons well versed on popular topics, claim that the amusement craze is not irreligious, and are coming to the front to defend it. Amusement is part of every person's life, and without amusement of some sort or another the general public would be unfit for their regular duties, is the general trend of thought of the men who are students of this subject.

The Royal picture theater, of Reading, opened its doors to the public recently and on the opening day its 500 capacity was taxed to the limit all day and evening. Special feature films are part of the every day show and this new theater deems fair to become the most popular in the up-state town.

Spaulding & Zorn will in the near future erect a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 1,000 at York, Howard and Hope Streets, at a cost of $20,000. The front will be of brick and terra cotta in conventional design. The theater building will be 78 x 108 feet.

The Royal theater's management, composed of Gery Brothers, C. U. Gery being the resident manager, report a most successful business since they opened up their new theater in Reading, Pa.

Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, will soon have another theater under his management. This new one will be known as the Colonial, and is now in course of construction at Maplewood and Germantown Avenues. The Colonial will throw open its doors to the public in about six months time.

F. William Kamp, of the Calehuff Supply Company, is now formerly settled in his private office at the Calehuff building, and receives all visitors and customers in those quarters. Kamp is making some strides in the picture business, and all his friends congratulate him.

The Philadelphia Picture and Film Exhibitors have bought through their attorney, Simon Weiss, the Little Gem theater, which is located at 26 and 28 Fayette Street, Conshohocken. The purchase price was withheld.

Application has been made to the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania by the Manheim Amusement Company for articles of incorporation. The new concern is launched with the intention of placing a large number of picture houses in different places, and also to supply all forms of amusement. Just who is backing the new concern is not known at this time, or is their place of location in the city.

Howard K. Clayton, aged fifty-five years, and a resident of Jenkintown, died on February 11th, at his home in the surburban town. Mr. Clayton was the proprietor of several amusement houses in Jenkintown, and was also prominent in Montgomery County politics.

M. J. Chevalier, proprietor of the Strawberry Mansion carousel, has asked the Fairmount Park Commission for permission to replace the carousel with a moving picture theater. The Commission seemed quite favorable to the plan, and it is expected that next summer will see a moving picture theater at that place.

Becker Brothers will soon have another picture house added to their string of amusement places. The latest place to be acquired is that at Seventh and Dickinson Streets. The present building on the site will be altered into a first class theater and will be opened in about six weeks time.

Max Isser and Max Linderman, have purchased the stable building at Nos. 4545-47-49-51 Lancaster avenue and will have it altered into a first class moving picture theater which will cost about $25,000. Work on the new theater will be started at once and it will be ready for public patronage in the Fall.

C. H. CONGDON.

NEW ENGLAND.

DESPITE the fact that the Melrose Women's Club, at its last meeting, refused to accept an invitation to view an exhibition of "Dante's Inferno," the management of the Globe Theater, Melrose, Mass., went ahead with the arrangements originally planned and will present the pictures. The delay of this club in taking action on the matter led the management of the theater to believe that the members approved of the wonderful pictures.

J. Townsend Russell had a most successful engagement at Tremont Temple, Boston, where he gave a series of "Picture Readings" at prices ranging up to one dollar. An unusually interesting lecture was the one to accompany some exceptionally fine moving pictures of "Tales of a Wayside Inn."

Rev. H. W. Jones, D.D., lectured at Tremont Temple, Boston, on the moving pictures of the "Pilgrims' Progress" on February 17th and 18th. Prices ranged up to fifty cents. On February 24th and 25th, Angus Hamilton, F.R.G.S., the famous war correspondent of the Central News Asseociation, will lecture on his "Balkan War" pictures, with admission prices up to one dollar.

The Moving Picture World was intensely pleased to have its attention directed to a bill of Miss Elizabeth L. White, of the Massachusetts Anti-Cigarette League, to prohibit the giving away of coupons, etc., with cigarettes. Miss White did not hesitate to say that the tobacco trust, as a means of inducing young boys to buy, gives tickets of admission to the photoplay theaters with every package of certain brands of cigarettes. Miss White also stated at the hearing, that was held before the Legislative Committee on Public Health, that inserting tickets in the packages places a premium on the obtaining of cigarettes by boys, and makes it an incentive for them to buy. There was no opposition to the bill and Miss White made out a mighty strong case against the trust. The matter is now under consideration, with a good chance of the bill going through as drafted by the Anti-Cigarette League.

When the writer dropped into the St. James Theater, Huntington avenue, Boston, which Marcus Loew has just acquired, it was a case of "Standing Room Only." It was a typical Marcus Loew show that was offered, with pleasing vaudeville and licensed pictures, that made a good impression on the audience. It would be somewhat rash to state that the audience had all stepped to the box-office before entering, however, as the city is now flooded with passes, given away mostly by department and other stores. The Gilchrist Company advertises that by a special arrangement, they can distribute free discount tickets, and that they have already given away 15,000 free tickets to men, women and children, which are good any time, except on Saturday, Sunday and Holidays. Other tickets are given away, good only for women for the morning shows at the St. James. These are called "Introductory Tickets." On this account the St. James is doing a land-office business, but it can hardly be called a very profitable one.

Walter P. Eaton, speaking before the Drama League at Boston this week, stated that the moving picture theaters had killed the theaters in the one-night stands, because the latter can only take what is left, after the one hundred or so first-class theaters of the country have been supplied. Mr. Eaton spoke very well of the motion pictures, calling them a great agency for amusement, education and knowledge.

Under the heading "The Greatness of the Moving Picture Recognized at Last," Hearst's Boston-American ran a fine editorial on February 13, telling of the great work Cinematography is destined to do in the world. The American believes that before very long, every little country school house will have its moving picture machine, which will teach the children pleasantly in one hour, more than they could be taught in a week, against the grain. The American remarks that motion pictures will awaken the imagination, will teach science and astronomy, and will familiarize the lives of great men. The article closes with the statement that the motion picture will diminish the excessive use of alcohol, as the films give the brain the stimulation now secured by drink. The American feels that those engaged in this industry should be called educators, as the World has often pointed out. In fact, this whole editorial merely reiterates what the Moving Picture World is continually saying with regard to the scope of the films.

The School Board of the town of Norwood, Mass., has installed a moving picture machine in the Everett School, to be used for educational purposes.

Kinemacolor pictures became tremenduously popular at Keith's National Theater, Boston, during the first week they were on exhibition there, and the theater is advertising the fact that Kinemacolor pictures can be seen exclusively there in the newspapers.

B. F. Keith's Theater, Boston, is calling attention to the fact that Edison's talking motion pictures will be shown there very soon, by using full-page space in its program.

It is stated that the apparatus for talking motion pictures arrived at the National Theater, Boston, some three weeks ago, but that no move has been made to set the apparatus up. It is stated that there is a hitch of some kind; that something is wrong.

John Zanft, General New England representative for William Fox, has secured the Lyric Theater, Bridgeport, Conn., for his chief. It is understood that Mr. Fox has signed a ten-year lease on the Lyric, which he will open on February 24, with vaudeville and pictures. The Fox circuit now has a firm foothold in the New England territory, with theaters in New Britain, Waterbury and Bridgeport, Conn., and in Springfield and New Haven. Mr. Fox is doing very well in all these theaters, and expects to add to his New England chain at every opportunity.

The B. F. Keith Theater, Greene & Abrams' Portland Theater and the Big Nickle, are now on a working agreement, signed by the three houses. Beginning on February 10th, the Keith Theater changed its name to Keith's Hippodrome, and offers vaudeville and pictures. The Portland Theater plays pictures and vaudeville, and the Big Nickle is showing feature films only, with no vaudeville on the bills. Formerly these three houses were all competing for the same trade, but this change will eliminate that condition, or so it is thought.

The Shawmut Investment Company of Boston, which has bought the Shawmut Theater, Roxbury, Mass., has incorporated for $75,000, with Nathan Pinanski, Oscar Grosberg, James Solomont and Jacob Lourie as the promoters. These are the same men that control the large Beacon Theater, one of Boston's finest vaudeville and picture houses.

The Associated Charities of Boston, have given out a full report of conditions existing in the photoplay theaters of that city. The committee found things greatly to its liking, and that conditions were far less discouraging than they had expected to find. Modern, well constructed buildings, well ventilated and heated, and with very adequate fire protection were discovered. The committee was very well pleased with the character

"SHYLOCK"

Adapted from Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice"

Mar. 3, 1913 Eclipse-Kleine, Two Reels

BASSANIO wishes to marry Portia but has not the necessary money with which to buy the fine clothes. His wealthy friend Antonio is unable to aid him as his wealth is invested in cargoes on the high seas, but offers to stand security for him with a money-lender. They visit Shylock, a Jew of great wealth, and secure the money but first Antonio is required to sign a bond stating that if the money is not paid by a certain time the lender is entitled to a pound of flesh from Antonio's breast.

Portia accepts Bassanio, and just after a brilliant wedding, he receives a letter stating that Antonio's cargoes have been lost and the bond is declared forfeited. Hastening to Venice, he is just in time to attend the trial of his friend, and witness the plea of the Jew who demands his pound of flesh. A young lawyer appearing at the critical moment so interprets the law of Venice that the Jew is forced to withdraw his claim. To the great surprise of all, the learned young lawyer proves to be none other than Portia.

"Until We Three Meet Again"

March 7, 1913 Lubin, Two Reels

Three college chums agree upon a re-union ten years from graduation day. The date arrives and finds one, a victim of drink and gambling, in the act of robbing the home of the second. The third is the police officer summoned to make the arrest.

The re-union is not as originally planned, but results in a renewal of the old friendship ties and a new start in life for all three. Through a series of strange experiences the drunkard changes places with the one who prospered, and by a trick of fate the new condition is brought about by the third chum.

RECENT FEATURE RELEASES

February 28, 1913

"Pickwick Papers"

Vitagraph, Two Reels

PART ONE records the Adventures of the Honorable Event, and introduces Mr. Pickwick, Mr. Jingle, Mr. Winkle, Mr. Tupman, Dr. Slammer and all the familiar members of the Pickwick Club. These gentlemen are involved in the Honorable Event, which is brought about by the rascally Jingle. Dr. Slammer and Mr. Winkle are prepared to fight a duel, but a most extraordinary and humorous situation arises by the timely discovery that Jingle, and not Winkle, is the man who insulted the doctor.

PART TWO embodies the Adventure of Westgate Seminary. Pickwick, at the suggestion of Job Trotter, Jingle's chum, goes on a wild goose chase to the seminary to prevent Jingle from eloping with one of the girls. Trotter and Jingle are thus given a chance to get away and escape the discovery of their rascality. Sam Weller, Pickwick s faithful servant, is much in evidence in the laughable adventure.

Every scene in both parts was made in the famous haunts of Pickwick, in merry old England. Every character seems a living reproduction of Cruikshank's famous cartoons.

February 24, 1913

"Mother"

Pathe, Two Reels

Tom Dawson, having written his mother that he has been made ranch foreman, loses his job on account of drink. Not having the heart to tell her of his misfortune, he writes her that he has been elected sheriff. He steals two horses and, suspected, has to flee, pursued by the sheriff and his posse.

At this inopportune time his mother decides to visit him. Arriving at the little town, she tells the boys she has come to see her son, the sheriff, and proudly displays his picture. When the sheriff returns they explain the circumstances to him; he pins his badge upon Tom and allows him to masquerade as sheriff until his mother returns to her home. As the train fades away the sheriff's badge is removed and Tom is confined to a cell, while his mother is in happy ignorance of his plight.

February 21, 1913

"The Redemption"

Kalem, Two Reels

A strong moral drama in which is proven the theory that "a criminal is only a criminal because he has not had the proper opportunity to develop an honest character."

"Red" Ellis, a knight of the underworld, on whom the experiment is tried, twice starts to betray Grey, his benefactor, but each time his conscience restrains him. The second time, however, his old gang outwits him and one of their number makes off with a necklace belonging to Grey. The guilt falls on Ellis, but Grey, still believing in Ellis, allows him to go, on his promise to recover the necklace in half an hour. The time has almost expired when he rushes into Grey's parlor, gripping the necklace in his hand.

February 17, 1913

"The Lost Son"

Lubin, Two Reels

John Nolan, in the heat of anger, strikes down his opponent with a billiard ball and, believing him dead, runs away. Ed Jennings, the injured man, recovers.

Nolan's mother advertises for him and instructs the police to find her boy, but in vain.

Ten years later, George, his younger brother, holding a position of trust and supporting his now widowed mother, is robbed of some of his employer's money and tries to make it up by playing the races. He loses, and in desperation returns to the bookie and tries to put up his watch. The bookie opens it and sees his mother's picture. George tells him that Jennings is alive, and the little family is reunited.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

KALEM.

THE SHERIFF OF STONE GULCH (March 3).—Black McCarty, a desperado, visits a bank and makes away with a package of money. The frightened cashier rushes to the office of the sheriff of Stone Gulch and tells a rather incoherent story because of his excitement. On the highway McCarty meets Dick, a young westerner who is in love with the sheriff's daughter, Helen. McCarthy forces Dick to alight and when the young man's back is turned the outlaw hides the mask and empty money sack under his saddle. Dick is therenpon ordered to turn about and proceed to the village, while McCarthy makes his escape.

Dick reaches the sheriff's office while the cashier is endeavoring to explain how the robbery took place. As they are talking the cashier discovers the mask and sack under Dick's saddle and drawing them out he declares that Dick is the robber. Dick's protests are unavailing and, overpowering the sheriff, he bids Helen to bring him a revolver that he may capture the real robber and speeds away.

Helen soon follows and delivers a gun to Dick who is on a fair way to capture McCarty when the sheriff appears. Fearing the sheriff will hinder his plans, Dick makes him a prisoner through a clever subterfuge and follows in pursuit of the outlaw.

McCarty in his cabin is gloating over his success when Dick arrives and captures him. Dick orders the outlaw to release the sheriff who is tied nearby and when the astonished official takes possession of the desperado he realizes that Dick has taken his unusual course to further the ends of justice.

THE BLIND COMPOSER'S DILEMMA (Mar. 5).—Marie Wilson leads a life of self-sacrifice with her inconsiderate sister, Florence, who fails to appreciate the importance of keeping the home in order and as Marie is the wage earner, her work is twofold.

Arthur Tremayne, a blind musician in moderate circumstances, moves into the house where the sisters reside. They learn that he is ill and Marie prepares many delicacies for him. When he recovers, Tremayne returns the call and is impressed with the fact that one of the sisters is gentle and kind, while the other is extremely selfish. The young composer shows Marie an opera which represents his life work and the girl endeavors to brighten his existence by placing flowers in his room.

One day Tremayne receives a letter which is read for him by the landlady's little daughter, Ella. The message is from a firm of producers who advise the composer that his opera has been accepted and a check for $1,000 is enclosed as advance payment. Happy over his success, Tremayne has Ella conduct him to an eye specialist for consultation. The doctor discovers that by skilled treatment the composer's sight may be restored and Tremayne submits to an operation.

Several weeks later Marie receives a letter from Tremayne stating that his sight has been fully regained, that he has sold his opera and that the happiest moment of his life will be when he sees her for the first time. Florence reads her sister's letter and regrets that she is not the favored one. She determines to pose as Marie and induces the self-sacrificing sister to agree to the deception. Her plan is on a fair way to succeed until little Ella and her friends come in and propose a game of blind man's buff. With his eyes bandaged Tremayne by the sense of touch discovers his true love.

PARCEL POST JOHNNIE (Mar. 7).—Flossie leaves for the West to visit her cousin and is accompanied to the station by her sweetheart, Johnnie. As the days pass Johnnie waits patiently for a letter and finally receives a note from the girl, stating that she has decided to remain and that he should forget her.

But Johnnie is not so easily cast aside. He determines to follow Flossie and bring her home. However, he is badly in need of funds and is unable to raise the capital necessary for the trip.

A notice of the new parcel post regulation in the post office gives Johnnie an inspiration. That afternoon the village postman is astounded to find Johnnie seated on a mail box. He has placed several stamps and Flossie's address on his collar and in answer to the postman's protests he calls attention to the regulation which reads: Should any parcel sent by parcel post not be fully covered by postage, same may be sent through parcel post delivery to its destination and postage due collected from consignee." He is therefore carried to the post office, properly "cancelled" and shipped in the mail car.

Johnnie's journey across the continent is an eventful one and when he is delivered to Flossie with a $60 due charge, the young woman is unable to pay. The local postmaster therefore consigns Johnnie to the Dead Letter Office.

Johnnie spends the night in the post office, awaiting shipment to Washington and effects the capture of two noted thieves who have long been wanted. With the reward which he receives he is enabled to pay the due charge and returns east with Flossie.

THE WAR CORRESPONDENT (Mar. 8).—Jack Fisher secures a position as reporter on a metropolitan daily and incurs the enmity of Martin, the star reporter, because of friendly relations which he establishes with Myrtle, a young lady in the office. Martin secretly changes the copy which Jack has prepared for an important story and places the young man in such a position that he is discharged.

Some time later Jack learns of an opening in Central America. He bids goodbye to Myrtle, who has never lost faith in him, and leaves for his new field. Shortly after his departure war is declared in a Central American republic and Martin is sent to the scene as war correspondent.

Martin is a victim of drink and when a decisive battle occurs he lies in a stupor at a tavern. Jack happens into the room and seeing the condition of the war correspondent, he takes Martin's credentials and hastens to the front. When the defeated army retreats Jack hastens to a telegraph office and sends a full dispatch to his paper. Just as he finishes his work the office is stormed by insurrectos and he is led away a prisoner.

Martin is given full credit for the "scoop" and as peace has been arranged he is ordered back to America. While the real hero languishes in a disreputable prison, Martin steadfastly keeps his secret.

After six months of hardships Jack manages to escape and seeks the protection of the United States Consul, presenting Martin's credentials. The Consul cables to the newspaper and Martin is forced to confess. When he is again on American soil, Jack wins the hand of Myrtle and secures the position made vacant by Martin's dismissal.

LUBIN.

THE FIRST PRIZE (Mar. 3).—To a fishing village comes Duke Mason, a young artist, to paint his prize picture. He meets Nell Jason, who falls in love with him, as he does with her. As he paints, she watches and finds fault with his picture so many times that he tells her to paint it, which she does. They become engaged. The picture is finally finished. He leaves Nell and tells her that he will return soon.

In the city, the picture is a great success, bringing Mason money and friends. He forgets his little fisher-maiden and she waits in vain for his return. He left his paint, etc., with Nell when he went away, and to amuse herself, she paints. Her father is old, and she feels that she must do something to help along. She reads in a paper of an offer of $1,000 as first prize; $500, as second, etc., for a picture to be exhibited in an art gallery several months later. She decides to try for one of the prizes. The picture is finished and she names it "Calling." Mason tries for the prize, but his hand has lost its cunning, and some of his friends tell him of a wonderful picture which did win the first prize. The picture is just a barren part of the beach and standing on a little elevated portion is a girl, with back turned, looking across the water with arms outstretched. He reads the title, and much to the surprise of his friends, he leaves the art gallery. At the village, Nell is standing on the beach, the living picture of "Calling." Mason sees her, comes to her and asks her to forgive, and like all her sex, she does forgive him.

ON THE MOUNTAIN RANCH (Mar. 4).—John Fordham, a wealthy ranch owner and his daughter, Ethel, meet with an automobile accident near the ranch house of Jim Clifford. Proffered hospitality is accepted. An acquaintance is formed, which results in Mrs. Clifford inviting Ethel to visit the ranch again, and a few weeks later, Ethel arrives for a more lengthy stay. Jim falls in love with Ethel and later when she refuses his offer of marriage, it developes all the brutality in his nature. Ethel's love for adventure almost causes her death when she persists in riding a spirited horse against the advice of Ed Wallace, the foreman of the ranch. It requires all of Ed's skill and courage to save her after a thrilling and dangerous ride. This experience is the beginning of an interest between the young couple, which soon ripens into a strong attachment. Jim allows the worst in his nature to control him, and when Manuel, a Mexican, kills a drunken cowboy in self-defense, Jim conceives the idea to fasten the crime on Ed Wallace. The fact that Ed has previously quarreled with the cowboy lends color to the accusation, and he is held as the murderer. Fearing that Ed will be lynched, Ethel starts for the sheriff. The Mexican, who is making his escape, sees Ethel and suspecting her purpose, binds and ties her to the stump of a tree and rides away. Ethel manages to free herself from the stump, and with her hands still tied, mounts her horse and taking the bridle between her teeth, continues her ride. She reaches the sheriff, who starts with her towards the ranch with his posse. In the meantime, Jim has persuaded the cowboys to lynch Ed, but the timely arrival of Ethel and the sheriff stop the proceedings, and the capture of the Mexican who has stopped to say goodbye to his sweetheart establishes Ed's innocence.

ARMY TARGET PRACTICE (Mar. 6).—A picture of the army target practice at one of the government drill institutions. The targets are raised and lowered automatically and show the marvelous skill of the American marksmen. Instruments for testing sight are clearly shown; also the rapid loading and firing of the guns.

WILL WILLIE WIN (Mar. 6).—Sam seems to have the inside track with Ruth, so Willie buys an auto and learns how to run it. Then he takes Ruth for a drive, but she sees Sam on the street and invites him to go along. The car breaks down and while Willie is tinkering with the car Sam proposes and is accepted. On the way home they get Willie to stop at the jewelry store where Sam buys the ring. Willie's car is for sale—cheap.

HIS CHILDREN (Mar. 7).—Dr. Harry Matthews, is a widower, and not wishing to have his children, Marie and Jimmie raised in the city, he places them with their aunt in the country. He visits them once a week. Then Matthews falls in love with Ethel Wynn, but discovers she has a marked aversion to children. He ponders upon the advisability of marrying, but his intense love casts aside all obstacles and he proposes to Ethel and is accepted. His children he decides to keep a secret, trusting that in time everything will be settled. On his next visit to the children, he breaks the news of his engagement, but tells them they must stay with their aunt for a while longer. Marie is heartbroken, and little Jimmie vaguely realizes that he is to lose daddy.

Ethel is faithful as a wife, but Matthews is handicapped by her desire for extravagance and society. For awhile he lives beyond his income, then in desperation drifts into the stock market. In the meanwhile, little Jimmie in the aunt's home, longs for daddy and fails in health and spirits. Marie finally decides to take the lad to the father's city home. On the night Marie arrives in the city with Jimmie, Harry and Ethel are attending a society function. The children arrive at the home during their absence and the butler grudgingly allows them to await the return of father. He seats them in such a way that a screen in the drawing room hides them from callers. They fall asleep behind the screen.

Ethel is the ruling favorite at the ball that night. In the midst of the festivities Matthews receives a message that his entire investment in stocks is wiped out. Half-dazed Harry goes home and enters the house, passing by the screen that hides the children. Up to his room he goes. He realizes that he is ruined and rather than tell his wife he decides to end his life. Ethel, worried by her husband's conduct, leaves the ball shortly after he does. She, too, enters the house alone, passes through the room without seeing the children and is preparing to ascend the stairs when she sees Harry coming down, revolver in his hand. She steps behind the door and watches him. She sees him go to a desk near the screen and pen a short note. She sees him lift the revolver to his head. The horror of the thing flashes upon her. She starts to dash from behind the curtains, then she suddenly sees the revolver lowered. A slight noise has arrested Harry's action. Marie, in awakening, has knocked a photo off the table. Harry goes to the screen, and stands face to face with his children. As if in a dream he hears the tale from Marie's lips. Ethel, too, from behind the curtains hears the story. When Matthews turns around, he finds Ethel at his shoulder. Harry explains his reasons for deception. Ethel is not angry. Her heart has been touched by the sight of the children. She kisses Marie, then Jimmie, and at the sight of the little pale, peaked face, all her better instinct asserts itself. She carries the lad upstairs to bed. Harry is converted into a new being by the events. All of his misfortunes are forgotten, and he starts forth again.

UNTIL WE THREE MEET AGAIN (2 reels—Special—Mar. 7).—As James Abbott, Frank Arthur and Martin Wynne, college chums, are bidding farewell to one another at the commencement ball, James discovers that May Scott, whom he loves, favors Frank. He conceals his disappointment and just before they part, he suggests that each man write on a slip of paper, to be put in the back of his watch, the words "Until we three meet again, Thursday, June 12th, ten years from today." The others agree. James grows more and more despondent over the loss of May, and his melancholia is intensified when he is invited to her wedding with Frank.

Ten years later, James is reduced to abject poverty through drink, while Frank is on the road of prosperity. In a moment of desperation, James yields to the temptation to steal. Unknown to him, he singles out Frank's home. Just as he is about to break into the house, May, who is upstairs putting her little daughter to bed, hears the noise below and descends with pistol in hand. There is instant recognition on the part of James and he drops the pistol as Frank appears. Frank is in the act of tearing the mask from James' face when a plain clothes officer, in answer to May's telephone call, appears. He proves to be none other than Wynne. The three men pull out the slips of paper from their watch cases, and Frank holds a reunion dinner in his home.

Abbott is given a high position in the brokerage office of Arthur's. A few days later Arthur's financial condition drives him to distraction. In order to bolster up his business, Frank makes daily visits to a gambling house, while May grieves more and more over the great change that has come over her husband. Finally she sends a pitiful note to James, asking him to call and advise her what to do.

Shortly after James arrives, Frank enters the room, James is hidden behind the portieres by May as Frank goes up stairs to his wife's room. He extracts some of her jewels with the intention of cashing them. As he leaves the house, May requests James to follow him. His course leads him to a hotel outside of which he meets Detective Wynne. He tells him that Arthur is inside. The detective and his men break down the door. In the room they find Abbott trying to sell the jewels. At the thought of his impending imprisonment, Arthur is seized with heart failure and he drops dead upon the floor. James winds up the business affairs of Arthur and leaves the office with the personal papers for May. During the conference the old love, increased by the dejected appearance of May, surges up in James' heart, and on the impulse of the moment he asks May to let him fill Arthur's place. At first she refuses, but finally yields and accepts James' embrace.

PETE JOINS THE FORCE (Mar. 8).—Pete Rollins loses his last penny playing poker. Although broke, Pete renews his suit for the hand of the widow Amelia Scruggs, whom he believes to have money. Pete has long known that the widow favors him, and this time he goes keyed up to the point of proposing. He progresses in this direction, until he and the widow are interrupted by the old maid servant, Pete, in disgust, leaves the house. He is helpless and too lacking in courage to continue the proposal. His steps lead him back to the retreat of the "gang." While sitting at the table, a want "ad" catches his eye. New members, especially big men, are wanted for the police force. Here is the chance to end his difficulties and to make a name for himself.

He gets a job on the force, although his ignorance and inexperience in this line is a great joke to the others. Pete's beat carries him by Amelia's home. The night after he joins the force she is sitting in her parlor admiring a large portrait of Pete. She treasures this so highly that it is her custom every night to place it in a small safe. As she stores away the portrait, burglars see her at the safe through the window and later, when she has retired, they return to secure what they think is a "cinch haul," Pete sees them. He peeps through a window, sees them at work and then enters a window into the dining room. Through the keyhole he watches the burglars at work, while he formulates plans for their capture.

Upstairs in her room, Madge, the maid is awakened by the burglars. She hurries to Amelia's bedroom and awakens her. Clothed in negligee and blankets, and armed with poker and umbrella, the old ladies descend the stairs into the hallway. They creep into the dining room in time to see Pete's revolver protruding from the portieres, where he is concealed watching the burglars. Breathless with fright, they retreat and telephone police headquarters. Meanwhile the burglars have opened the safe and, discovered only Pete's portrait. In disgust they start for the dining room. Pete, at the keyhole, sees them coming. His inexperience and fear assert themselves, and he jumps hurriedly into a big chest standing near the door. The women have again crept into the dining room, and when they see the lid of the chest slowly rise, they again retreat to the hall, firmly convinced the burglar is in the chest. At this juncture the yeggs enter the dining room. Pete suddenly pops up from the chest and covers the men. But he is so nervous that the yeggs get the better of him, divesting him of his hat, coat and revolver. They manacle him with his own handcuffs and put him back in the chest. At this moment the cops arrives and the burglars beat it, carrying off Pete's uniform. The cops enter the dining room in time to see the yeggs getting through the window and two of them, give chase. The third cop finds Pete handcuffed in the chest and promptly collars him. Pete argues in vain, Amelia and Madge creep back into the dining room. Then comes the startling recognition of Pete and Amelia. She orders the astounded cop to take his hands off and leave them. As he does so she moves up to Pete in a manner that shows her affection. The other cops return with Pete's uniform, dropped by the yeggs, and when all of them re-enter the dining room they find Amelia tightly embraced in Pete's manacled arms.

SELIG.

THE DEPUTY'S SWEETHEART (Mar. 3).—A young girl in a small western community, receives a legacy of five thousand dollars worth of government bonds. A gossip neighbor calls upon the girl and, after a bit of questioning, learns all the details. Bursting with importance, the gossip tells the news to everyone she meets. A couple of rough characters hear of the girl's wealth, go to her home, and take the bonds from her, making good their escape.

The girl communicates with her sweetheart, a deputy U. S. Marshal, who follows and finally corners them in an out of the way log house. By a clever bit of strategy, the marshal manages to arrest one of the thieves, but is shot from behind by the other. When he regains consciousness he again takes up the trail. This time he is aided by several brother officers and a posse of cowboys. After an exciting chase, the thieves are run down, and the bonds recovered. As the deputy marshal returns the bonds to the girl, he takes occasion to impress upon her mind the fact that she needs protection. She comes round to his way of thinking and the happy pair start to town for a marriage license.

THE COLLECTOR OF PEARLS (Mar. 4).—An American dancing girl is mysteriously advertised as "The Pearl of the Orient." J. Pearl Collector, a millionaire gem collector, sees the advertisement and believes that "The Pearl of the Orient" is a real pearl. In order to appease the wrath of his athletic sweetheart, the millionaire orders the pearl sent to his home C. O. D.

The manager of "The Pearl of the Orient" receives the message and sees in this mistake a chance to get some free advertising for his dancing star. He puts "The Pearl of the Orient" in a trunk and sends her to the millionaire's home. The collector's sweetheart, Electra, sees the dancer and goes into a rage. The dancing girl, becoming frightened, hides in the millionaire's vault. The pearl's manager and sweetheart, believing that she has been hidden, threaten the collector with death, if he does not produce her at a certain hour. Many complications ensue, but eventually the collector's sweetheart understands the situation and effects a satisfactory settlement all around.

THE STORY OF LAVINIA (Mar. 5).—Lavinia is the favorite pupil in the high school of a small town. At the graduation exercises she is presented, by the school trustees, with a scholarship in Freshwater College, as a reward for her high standing as a student. Later she leaves alone for the city. At college she is thrown among girls who have come from wealthy homes and have enjoyed social advantages far above any which have come into her life. As a consequence, the simple, demure Lavinia is laughed at and snubbed. She retains her sweet nature through it all.

One night there is a clandestine chafing dish party in the room of Betty, the ringleader of the "fashionable" set. All in the dormitory are invited except Lavinia. Thinking, in her simple-hearted way, that she has been overlooked by accident, she presents herself at the party and attempts to enter into the festivities with the others. She is received in an ironical manner, but the whole aspect of the situation is soon changed. During a pillow fight the lighted alcohol lamp is overturned and the room is ablaze in a moment, A panic ensues in which Lavinia proves herself a heroine, capping the climax of her daring, when it is discovered that one of the girls has been left unrescued, by climbing to the second story of the building by the waterspout and lowering the unfortunate to the ground in safety. In descending, the waterspout breaks away from the wall and Lavinia is precipitated to the ground, suffering terrible injury. The girls now realize the smallness of their own conduct and do everything to make amends to Lavinia. Her mother is brought to the city at their expense, and Lavinia is suitably rewarded.

THE SPANISH PARROT-GIRL (Mar. 6).—In order to save her father from the designs of a cunning Spaniard, who holds his promissory note. Lola Hernandez, the beautiful parrot-girl, is about to sacrifice her young life. A wealthy young tourist, Richard Avery, falls in love with Lola. Knowing that her father will object to the young millionaire, Lola promises to elope with him. The Spanish rival hears of the intended elopement and waylays Lola and her lover. Lola is returned to her father and the young tourist is incarcerated in the dungeon of the Mission Church. His automobile is wrecked by an explosion of the gasoline tank. Through the aid of a priest, Richard Avery is liberated and arrives at Lola's just in time to confront his Spanish rival, who is in the act of demanding Lola's hand in marriage in lieu of the money owed him. Avery saves Lola by marrying her himself, and, as a wedding present, he gives the girl a check with which she can pay her father's obligations.

A HUSBAND WON BY ELECTION (Mar. 7).—Edna Dusenberry, the charming twenty-year old daughter of Senator Dusenberry, is in love with handsome young Walter Force. John Cartwright, a corrupt politician and candidate for mayor, makes a deal with the Senator whereby he is to receive the hand of Edna in marriage. Edna holds opinions of her own upon the subject and goes to her fiancé, Walter, for advice. Walter's law partners hit upon a scheme to beat the corrupt politician. They tell their idea to Edna and she tells her father that she will marry the next mayor, the announcement to be made on the day after election. Cartwright, believing that he has won goes into the campaign with renewed vigor. Now the young people put their scheme into operation. Walter is put up as the reform party candidate for mayor and, after an exciting battle at the polls, wins by a good plurality. The next morning he calls at the Senator's home and reminds him of Edna's promise to "marry the next mayor."

Winkle and Snodgrass join him and all of them go to the Golden Calf. In answer to Pickwick's questions, the cabby makes many remarkable statements about his horses, etc., which Mr. Pickwick jots down. The cabby then becomes suspicious and when they arrive at the Golden Calf, approaches Mr. Pickwick in a belligerent attitude, attacks him and his friends, much to the delight of the bystanders. Mr. Alpha Jingle arrives upon the scene, quells the riot by his authoriatative manner, sends the cabby about his business and takes under his prosonal protection, the four members of the Pickwick Club. Upon learning that they intend journeying to Rochester by coach, Mr. Jingle offers to accompany them. As the coach bowls along through the Kentish fields, Mr. Jingle relates many startling and wonderful things which had happened during his interesting career. Mr. Pickwick fills his note book to overflowing.

Upon arriving at the Bull Inn, recommended by Mr. Jingle, Mr. Pickwick reluctantly parts company with Mr. Jingle, only on the ground that Mr. Jingle join the Pickwick party for dinner. Mr. Jingle arrives promptly at five, does full justice to the food and very full justice to the wines. After eating and drinking, sleep overtakes the illustrious Mr. Pickwick, the poetic Mr. Snodgrass and the redoubtable sportsman, Mr. Winkle, leaving Mr. Jingle and the sentimental Mr. Tupman in conversation on the beauties of the Kentish ladies. Mr. Tupman tells Mr. Jingle that a ball is in progress in the Assembly Room. While Mr. Winkle is sleeping, Mr. Tupman borrows Mr. Winkle's new Pickwickian uniform for Mr. Jingle's use. Both the gentlemen enjoy themselves thoroughly, becoming acquainted with the ladies of Kent through the engaging manners of Mr. Jingle.

During the evening, Mr. Jingle pays such ardent attentions to one Mrs. Budger, a fat and wealthy widow, that she forgets her faithful suitor, Dr. Slammer. In spite of warning glances from the enraged Dr. Slammer, Mr. Jingle, assisted by Mr. Tupman, escorts Mrs. Budger to her carriage. Without mincing matters, he tells Mr. Jingle what he thinks of him and challenges him to a duel, which Mr. Jingle coolly ignores.

The following morning, Lieutenant Tappleton, in behalf of Dr. Slammer, calls and inquires for the gentleman who wore the Pickwickian uniform, Mr. Winkle, the owner of the coat, is called to interview the Lieutenant. Mr. Winkle still feels the effects of the wine, and accepts the challenge. At sunset, with his second, Mr. Snodgrass, he starts for the field of battle. They find Dr. Slammer there with his seconds. After the preliminaries are arranged, as they are about to fire, Dr. Slammer gets a good look at his adversary, and shouts, "Stop, stop, that's not the man." Explanations and apologies follow and they promise to meet again at the Bull Inn that evening. At the Inn, Mr. Jingle is introduced to Dr. Slammer, who recognizes Jingle. Mr. Jingle again ignores Dr. Slammer, Mr. Pickwick refuses absolutely to credit a single accusation against him, and the meeting is abruptly broken up.

PART TWO—THE ADVENTURE OF THE WESTGATE SEMINARY. — Mr. Pickwick learns that Mr. Jingle is an adventurer and starts out with Sam Weller, his valet, to find him and punish him. They arrive at Bury St. Edmonds, at the Angel hotel and Mr. Pickwick engages a private room. He and Sam plan to secure further information concerning Mr. Jingle. In half an hour Sam comes back with the news that Mr. Charles Fitz-Marshall (Jingle's assumed name), is spending the evening in another house in the neighborhood. Sam promises to secure Mr. Jingle's plans from his servant, Job Trotter, in the morning, and with Mr. Pickwick's consent, spends the evening in his own way drinking with the company downstairs, while Mr. Pickwick is sleeping.

The next morning, Sam meets Job Trotter, who pretends to be willing to betray his master, and introduces him to Mr. Pickwick. Job, with lamentations and tears tells of the perfidy of the rascally Jingle, tells Pickwick that Jingle is planning to elope with a young lady, an heiress, who is attending the Westgate Seminary, which is just outside the town. Job suggests that Mr. Pickwick wait outside the Seminary in the garden, and at ten o'clock, the hour set for the elopement, he could then frustrate Jingle's plans. They plan that he shall knock at a little door when the clock strikes ten and Mr. Jingle will open it. That evening, Sam reports that Jingle and Job are preparing for their evening's work. It is a very dark night, with a storm threatening. Sam returns to the Inn after assisting Mr. Pickwick over the low fence. The heroic Mr. Pickwick knocks on the door of the Seminary, arousing the girls and startling the household, who answer the knocks, but discover no one at the door, when Pickwick hides behind it. When Jingle doesn't appear at last he makes bolder and discloses himself. He tells his errand much to the surprise and confusion of the ladies. Mr. Pickwick is ushered into tse presence of the Lady Superior of the Seminary and accused of being a burglar. He explains that he came to save one of the young ladies from being kidnapper by a dishonorable rascal. This convinces the young ladies that he certainly must be crazy. Pickwick is locked up in a closet and Sam Weller sent for, at the suggestion of Mr. Pickwick.

Mr. Pickwick's friends, who have missed him and gone out in quest of him, come to his rescue and vouch for his respectability, which, together with Mr. Pickwick's winning manners, dispel all doubt as to his identity and character.

While all this is going on, Jingle and Job Trotter make good their escape and are far beyond all apprehension.

UNDER THE MAKE-UP (Mar. 1).—Doing a turn daily in a music hall, Pierrot and Pierrette, have a bad struggle for existence. One night, during their performance, John Harrad happens into the theater. He is married to a shrew and seeks pleasure elsewhere than his home. He is very much taken with Pierrette's dancing. His applause is so loud he attracts her attention. She bows to him in acknowledgment. He sends her a bunch of roses with his card asking if she is free to take dinner with him. Her life is a grind and she hungers for other associates. Her mind is disturbed by thoughts of her child and husband, but she finally consents to accompany Harrad. Their tastes and ideas arouse a mutual sympathy. He proposes that they go away together and forget the past. Such a proposition from a man of wealth confuses her, and distractedly she opens her handbag for her handkerchief, when she discovers in it a toy belonging to her little boy. The sight of it brings to her a realization of her obligation to her child and husband. Harrad notes her distress and she tells him all. He, being a decent man, leads her out and sends her back to the music hall and her family.

During all this time, Pierrott, her husband, has been waiting at the theater, for her to go on with their act. He is almost frantic at her absence and when he is told by an actress that his wife has gone away with another man, he completely breaks down. The manager insists that he do the act alone. He is doing the best he can when Pierrette returns to the theater, makes up, and is standing in the wings of the stage. Pierrot beckons her to come on and at the same time, determines to kill her on the stage in front of the audience. She obeys and he tries to strangle her, asking between his teeth if she is guilty of wrong-doing. Her eyes meet his and he sees at a glance that she is innocent.

The audience thinks this part of their act, and applauds with wild delight, and the curtain falls. Pierrot carries his wife, in a faint, to the dressing room and revives her. She tells him the whole story of her experience with Harrad. Pierrot takes their child and placing him in his little mother's arms, he folds his arms around them both in a protecting embrace.

O'HARA'S GODCHILD (Mar. 3).—Tom O'Grady rushes into the O'Hara's one evening to announce the arrival of a son and Denis O'Hara and his sister, Mary, go over to see the baby; there and then Denis is informed that he is to stand godfather for it. The christening takes place amidst great feasting, but as time passes and ill-luck comes to Tom, owing to a slack season, he is discharged from the steel works where he is employed and cannot get another job, O'Grady and Sullivan seem to think that this is his own fault and are always nagging at him. He gets an offer to go to Pittsburgh, but when he asks help from his father-in-law and father to get there, they both refuse it and declare, that he should remain in New York, and when he persists in taking the place, going there with money furnished by O'Hara, they refuse to speak to him or say good-bye. For a while, all goes well and then Tom is stricken with a fever, loses his job and they are at the point of starvation, Aileen even pawning her wedding ring for food. Tom is too proud to write to his relations and will not let Aileen do so. At last Aileen writes to Nora and tells her troubles. Nora goes to O'Hara. The moment he and his sister hear of the trouble, they get together all their little savings and Denis starts for Pittsburgh. He reaches there on Christmas Eve, and enters the wretched home of Tom like a gleam of sunshine. Tom regains strength and on New Years Day, O'Hara brings him with Aileen and the baby, home. He invites Sullivan and O'Grady over to his house and when they see their son and daughter with their grandchild, their hearts melt, and the new year begins with a family re-union and good fellowship, with Denis as the presiding genius.

HUBBY BUYS A BABY (Mar. 4).—After a joyous night at the club, Johnny Bun is in love with the whole world. On his way home, he sees a colored girl wheeling her little sister in a baby carriage. He takes quite a notion to the youngster, and falls in love with it. He induces her sister to sell the pickaninny to him for $10. He takes the baby home and surprises Mrs. Bun, who is entertaining representatives of the Mother's Club, informing her that their childless home will be made happy by the presence of their adopted daughter. Mrs. Bun is horrified and her guests disgusted with such a presentation, leave the house without the formality of congratulations or the usual good-bye. John sees that the little darkey is made comfortable over night.

The girl who sold her baby sister, takes the ten dollars and invests it in a white poodle dog and exultingly takes it home to her mother, explaining how she got rid of the baby and came into the possession of the dog. Her mother gives way to great lamentations, and impresses her slipper with force and vigor, where it will best express her opinion of her fool daughter. The girl's howls bring in the neighbors who accompany the mother and daughter to the police station, where the loss of the child is told and the police requested to be on the look-out for Bun.

Mrs. Bun insists that her husband take the child back to its parents. He calls his taxi and is on his way, when a mounted policeman becomes suspicious and stops the auto, and demands that the chauffeur drive to the police station. Here they meet the child's mother and her neighbors registering their complaint about the loss of her baby. The mother seizes her child from Bun's arms and gives him the poodle, telling him that represents his ten dollars. The police sergeant fines him for disturbing the peace and allows him to depart. Outside the station house, he meets the colored woman and her child. He apologizes for his conduct. This smoothes her injured feelings, and she holds the baby out to John and tells it to kiss him good-bye. He accepts the challenge, and makes amends for his night at the club.

A HEART OF THE FOREST (Mar. 5).—Making his way through the forest, Little Eagle, the son of Black Hawk, the Indian chief, is caught beneath a falling tree which holds him captive. Mr. Bower, a backwoodsman, living with his family in a log cabin, happens along and finds the boy, whom he releases. The boy's leg is broken and he is greatly exhausted. Mr. Bower carries him to his home, where he is cared for and nursed back to health by Mrs. Bower. The lad becomes greatly attached to the Bower family and stays with them a long time, serving them in every way he can, in gratitude for their kindness. His father, Black Hawk, learns where he is, and insists that he shall leave the cabin and come back with him to his tribe. The boy obeys, but whenever possible, makes off without his father's knowledge to the Bower home. The chief is greatly angered and threatens to kill the Bowers if he continues to associate with them. He does not heed his father's injunction and is punished for disobedience. The boy overhears his father in consultation with the braves, arrange for an attack upon the Bowers cabin. Mr. Bowers, who has gone into the woods with a companion, has left his wife and little daughter alone. Little Eagle hastens to tell them they must flee at once. He leads them to the river bank and draws forth a canoe from the bushes, tells them to jump in and paddle down stream as fast as they can, while he will return to the cabin and keep the Indians at bay until Mrs. Bower and her child are safely out of reach. He goes back to the log house, bars the door and when the Indians attach the cabin, he shoots at them, standing them off for some time. They make a detour of the cabin and climbing to the roof, set it afire. It is soon enveloped in flames, and he dies in the fire a hero, to gratitude and his friends. Mrs. Bower and her child make their way down the river until they reach her husband. She tells him of the boy's faithfulness. They all hasten back to the cabin only to find it in ruins, too late to save their grateful little friend.

THAT COLLEGE LIFE (Mar. 6).—Unexpectedly, Jack Martin receives word from his fiancee, telling him that after all, she will accept his invitation to the Regatta, and is coming out from the city at once. He is bewildered. Thinking that she was not going to come, he had spent all his money. He writes to his father for money. Father wires a flat refusal. Something must be done to raise money enough to see him thrugh Regatta Day in good style. He pawns his best clothes and all the extra clothes of his two roommates, leaving the three nothing but what they are wearing. His chums discover his trick, and while he sleeps, they take his only suit and hock it. In the morning, he finds it out and tells them that the money for the clothes and the ticket, were in the pocket of his suit. He explains to them the only way to right matters is for them to loan him one of their suits and he will pawn the only remaining suit. They hesitate, then agree. He puts on the suit and behind their backs, takes the aforementioned money and tickets from under his mattress and with the suit, departs. He pawns the suit and with the money, takes his own suit out of pawn, takes off the borrowed suit and pawns that; thus giving him the money for all the clothes he originally pawned and the last and only suits of his roommates, and still has his own suit. He gets an automobile and meets his fiancee at the station and takes her out to the Regatta. Afterwards, he takes her to dinner. In the meantime, the boys are raving in their room in town, clothed in pajamas and swearing vengeance on Jack.

HE WAITED (Mar. 8).—Full of anticipation for an evening at the theater, a young man, according to appointment, calls at the home of his fiancee. The maid announces him and the young lady sends back word that she will be ready in a few minutes. The young man waits and waits, but still she lingers at her dressing table, while the young man continues to wait. Growing restless, he tries to pass the time away by reading, then by playing the piano, but still she remains in her boudoir, directing the maid in the adjustment of her dress and the arrangement of her hair. The young man waits, while time flies and minutes become hours, hours days, and days, weeks; then the years begin to show in the young man's face until he is growing old and feeble, still the young lady hovers over her rouge and powder pots, putting a touch on her face here and there to make herself more charming in the sight of the man who has become aged and infirm in waiting for her appearance. At last his dearly beloved announces that she is ready to attend the theater with him. As she enters the room, she cannot recognize him; his wrinkled face, his long white beard and his snowy, flowing locks, are not as she knew them in his youth. She is distressed, but he tells her to be of good cheer, that they will go to the theater anyhow and see the grandchildren of the actors whom they had originally intended to see before he began his long wait.

ESSANAY.

BILLY McGRATH ON BROADWAY (Mar. 4).—The lure of the footlights attracts Billy McGrath. He decides to purchase a drama, produce it and play it on Broadway. He engages a company of capable performers, but through the misunderstanding of two of the actresses the company go on a strike, and refuse to work. His booking agent emphatically tells him he will not furnish him with any more talent. The stage hands of the theater McGrath has purchased come to his assistance, by declaring that they will take the parts. After several unfortunate rehearsals the play is produced. The scrub woman as the leading lady creates a furor, while the janitor of the building in the costume of a dashing young blonde engenue creates the laugh entertainment of the performance. The audience at the opening night proclaim the show a huge success, while the critics in the morning papers declare the show to be a riot. Billy McGrath, with his fortune assured, smiles at the defeat of his striking performers and his unreluctant booking agent.

THE DISCOVERY (Mar. 5).—I. M. Monion falls in love with his stenographer, Maud Mueller, and proposes to her. The pretty young girl informs her employer that she will give her answer when she returns from her vacation. At the summer resort Miss Mueller meets Mr. Monion's son. The two are constantly together. Finally young Monion proposes to Maud and is accepted. They are about to be married by the justice of peace when the latter informs them that he cannot perform the ceremony unless Miss Mueller produces a birth certificate. Returning to the hotel, Monion receives a telegram from his father requesting him to return to the city immediately, as business matters demand his attention. Monion leaves and his fiancee returns to the city. That same afternoon Miss Mueller is struck by an automobile and rendered unconscious. A doctor is summoned who identifies her. A few weeks later Miss Mueller, now recovered fully from her accident, returns to the city whereupon entering her employer's office is greeted lovingly by Mr. Monion and his son. I. M. Monion requests the young beauty to give him her answer. He produces an engagement ring, as does the son. Both are overwhelmed when informed that her name is not Maud Mueller, but Maud Mueller Monion, her employer's daughter. Sad at the loss of a charming wife, but happy in the discovery of their lost one, they welcome her into their hearts and home.

A MONTANA MIX-UP (Mar. 6).—Maizie Mackey finished with her term at boarding school in Los Angeles, leaves her sweetheart, Bud Stone, and returns to her father's ranch near Ash Forks, Cal. A few weeks later, Bud, lonesome and downhearted, wires Maizies father that he is coming on to ask a very important question. A few of the cowpunchers on Mackey's ranch meet Bud at the station. Mistaking a traveler's package for Bud's, the men throw it on the bus and drive away. Maizie welcomes her sweetheart. Everything goes smoothly enough until the mysterious package begins to wiggle and squirm around in Bud's room. The climax comes when everybody in the house hears the cries of a baby. Comical situations arise from Bud's peculiar situation in the matter. Bud has a lively time trying to explain until the mother of the baby arrives on the scene and explains matters. Maizie accepts Bud as a life partner and they are left to plan their future happiness.

A MISTAKEN ACCUSATION (Mar. 7).—Pietro, an Italian laborer, out of employment, reads an ad in the daily paper asking for a good conscientious man. Pietro answers the ad by calling at the home of Tom Dayton, a contractor, only to learn that he is not in. The infant son of Dayton is found playing in the dirt in front of the house. Pietro amuses the child by helping him build a mud castle. Having completed his architectural masterpiece, Pietro arrives. The child, tired of its amusement, wanders off into the nearby woods. The mother returns and finds the child gone. She picks up a bandana handkerchief left by the Italian. Coming to the conclusion that her child has been kidnapped, she notifies her husband and the two go in pursuit. Pietro is discovered at the corner, where the father and laborer engage in a battle. Pietro escapes into the woods, where he runs across the sleeping form of the baby. He fondly picks him up and returns him to his home, unseen. The police capture Pietro and take him to Dayton's home. The child explains matters to the satisfaction of all, and Pietro is rewarded by a good position.

THE HAND OF FATE (Mar. 7).—Jim Rathburn, foreman of the quarry gang, and bully, refuses his dog food. The poor animal begs pleadingly for something to eat. Not satisfied with starving the dog, Rathburn ties a stick of dynamite to his tail, and sets the fuse on fire. The bully takes to his heels, and the gang follows as the dog pursues them. The crowd enter the dynamite shed and the dog crawls under the door. Frantic, the men rush outside, lock the door behind them, unknowingly leave Rathburn to his fate. The dog crawls out from under the door, leaving behind the lighted dynamite fuse. A moment later the shed and it's contents are blown into atoms.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SQUATTER'S DAUGHTER (Mar. 8).—Broncho Billy, half crazed with liquor, enters a saloon and demands a bottle of whiskey. This he absorbs about half, which places his physical and mental condition in a state of sub-consciousness. Completely intoxicated, Broncho Billy is placed on his horse and led away. Having ridden a few miles in this condition, he falls off his mount unconscious. Mabel Clark, a squatter's daughter, discovers him by the roadside, washes off his aching brow, and brings him to. Appreciative of her kind act he later saves her and her father from being cast out of their humble home into the wilds of the country, by a disappointed suitor.

EDISON.

IN A JAPANESE TEA GARDEN (Feb. 24).—This picture gives us a fine view of a Japanese tea garden with a comedy woven around an American girl tourist and her two suitors. Like all lovers, they search out romantic spots to let their romantic feelings have full sway, but it comes about that they are often interrupted in their sweetness by the arrival of the little lady of the tea house. The real event of the picture does not occur until the lady forgets her velvet bag and young Sir Gallant hurries back to bring it to her, though he hates to leave her side even for a moment.

It then befalls that on his return with his love's precious possession, he meets another fair damsel in distress, who has sprained her ankle, and Sir Gallant hastens to her side. The distressed lady nearly faints in his arms, and who should see the fond embrace but his own fair lady love from a distance. Sir Gallant tries to explain to his lady love, but she will not listen; she thinks he is false.

Vainly he tries to seek an interview, and in his distress he pleads with the little Japanese lady of the tea house to help him find a moment alone with the woman he loves, and the dusky maiden contrives a very clever trick wherewth Sr Gallant carries his lady love far away from the maddening crowd in a 'rickshaw and runs with her far out into the ocean. Helpless and alone, she is forced to listen to his explanation, and the true light of love returns as it is ever with a man and a maid.

THE NEWEST METHOD OF COALING BATTLESHIPS AT SEA (Feb. 26).—We see the Battleship "North Dakota" taking coal from the Collier "Cyclops," by means of an ingenious device which lifts six large bags, each holding about one-half ton of coal, from the hold of the "Cyclops" and transferring it by a trolley line of about two hundred yards to the hold of the "North Dakota." We are also shown close views of the engine which operates the trolley and automatically takes up the slack in the cable in such a manner as to insure rapid and accurate operation.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A TRANSFER (Feb. 26).—In trying to explain to a big, fat German who has recently arrived in this country, how and where he is to change street cars to get to a certain address, a conductor gives Herr Frantz Muller a transfer, telling him to follow a lady who is sitting ahead of him, to whom he has just given a transfer for the same car.

Arriving at the crosstown line the lady, who is followed by Muller, discovers that she has forty minutes leeway before her transfer expires, and decides to do a little shopping. Muller follows her everywhere. She becomes suspicious of him and tries to evade him by rushing into a busy bargain store, but Muller sticks to her trail like Old Sleuth, the detective, never losing sight of her for a moment. At the shirt waist counter, where great reductions are offered, the persistent Muller creates a sensation among the shoppers when the lady he is following screams for help and has him arrested.

At the police station Muller tries to explain in his own tongue, but the Irish sargeant cannot understand him and is about to confine him to a cell when the lady, upon learning Muller's motive in following her so persistently, withdraws her charge, and understanding German, acts as his interpreter, has him excused and also volunteers to direct him to the proper car. Now they understand each other they become good friends, and the last seen of them is on a crosstown car with Cupid on the job.

A WILL AND A WAY (Feb. 28).—Being the eighth story of "What Happened to Mary." In this picture we see Mary as a public stenographer. Mr. Foster, a lawyer, has her write a letter to Abraham Darrow, stating that a new will is ready for his signature, but that the son, Terence Darrow, prevents the lawyer's access to the old man's bedside. Mary immediately volunteers her assistance in getting into the house and having the will signed.

Terence Darrow sees Foster and Mary coming out of the office building and follows Mary to his home in time to prevent her entering. He then goes in, sits down, lights a cigarette and sends the old housekeeper out for some whiskey. Falling asleep, his cigarette drops from his fingers and sets fire to the rug. Mary, in the meantime, goes into the alley and slips in the back way when the old housekeeper comes out. She is detected by Terence attempting to steal through the room and a terrific struggle ensues, but Mary escapes to the yard agan and gets the bottle of whskey and a shawl from the old housekeeper by a trick and re-enters, this time being successful in escaping detection.

She locks Terence in the room, reaches the old man and gets the will signed just as Terence breaks into the room. The fire caused by the cigarette has meanwhile gained such headway that the firemen have their ladders up and one of them reaches the window just in time to knock Terence down as he attempts to wrest the will from Mary. The fireman then picks Mary up and starts down the ladder, but is followed by Terence and a desperate fight takes place on the ladder. Terence in an endeavor to kick the fireman off loses his balance and falls to the ground. The fireman brings Mary safely down. She quickly recovers consciousness and takes the signed will to Mr. Foster.

Shrewsbury, N. J. The iceboat enthusiasts are out in full force on the five-mile triangular course on the Shrewsbury River.

New York, N. Y. Lina Cavalieri, looking as charming as ever, arrives with Lucien Muratore, the tenor. And many others.

THE WATERFALLS OF IDAHO (Mar. 5).—From almost an arid waste, the plains of Idaho have been converted into a beautiful and productive farming country by the harnessing of the very numerous waterfalls of the state for irrigation purposes. The process by which this transformation is obtained is clearly shown and explained. Aside from all this the waterfalls are remarkable for their natural beauty and especially Shoshone Falls which are considerably higher than Niagara, although their volume is not so great.

THE HAIRY AINUS (Mar. 5).—An interesting study of the peculiar people who inhabit the islands to the north of Japan and to whom civilization has not yet penetrated.

AN EQUINE HERO (Mar. 6).—Being left alone with a consignment of gold. Lulu Atwood, the daughter of the postmaster, mails a note to her sweetheart, Tom Kimball, telling him that she is fearful of bandits because of the gold and asking him to come to her house. Tom sends Peggy, his highly intelligent horse, to get his mail, but Peggy, returning with the note in her teeth is met by bandits who lead her to their rendezvous and tie her. She loosens, with her teeth, the knot in the rope, takes the note from the bandit's pocket and away with it to Tom. When Tom reaches Lulu's house he finds her bound and gagged and the bandits waiting for him. Neither he nor Lulu will tell where the gold is hidden and in despair the bandits bind them to the railroad tracks and leave them. Peggy proves herself an equine hero, however, by liberating the lovers in the nick of time.

GOING SOME (Mar. 8).—Just an ordinary difference of opinion, but what unusual difficulties it brought to the man who believed Roosevelt would win. He backed his judgment with a freak bet, but the Bull Mooser was game enough to take his medicine which consisted of shaving half his moustaches, and wheeling a perambulator through the city streets at noon while wearing evening

C. G. P. C.

THE BUTTERFLY OF A DAY (Mar. 4).—The history of the Ephemera, or common, yellow butterfly that lives only from sunrise to sunset is unfolded herein by means of various microscopic views. After the butterfly has taken wing the camera follows its destiny through gloriously colored fields and beautiful flowers.

COD FISHING FROM A TRAWLER (Mar. 4).—A delightful journey to the fishing banks to witness the catching and handling of a boatload of enormous cods.

THE TITMOUSE (Mar. 4.).—The Titmouse has been termed "The Defender of Our Orchards," and the reason for this sobriquet is clearly shown in a series of beautifully colored views of the Titmouse at work and at play.

HYDROGEN (Mar. 7).—In this film a toy balloon, filled with hydrogen is deflated and the gas used in several experiments, all clearly explained in the sub-titles. Each experiment is highly interesting, showing just what hydrogen will and will not do. Scenes are shown explaining the method of transporting this combustible gas and also the inflating of a passenger balloon with a capacity of 6,000 cubic feet of hydrogen, which sails gracefully away, thus proving that hydrogen is fifteen times lighter than air.

THE GRANJA (Mar. 7).—Views of the grounds surrounding the Palace of the Kings of Spain. A sight most entrancingly beautiful and the feature of it all is a number of intermittent fountains, the most famous in all Europe.

MELIES.

THE UPA UPA DANCE (Mar. 6).—The native dance of the Tahitians, performed by natives of the island who pass it down from generation to generation. It is a typical barbarian dance, both highly comical and educational.

A GAMBLER'S HEART (Mar. 13).—Jack Hurley, a professional gambler, but square in all his dealings, falls in love with Kitty Holmes while she and her father are on a visit west, where Kitty's brother, Benton, is a mine superintendent. Hurley and several other, Yaller Smith, Hurrah Mag, Bad Eye and Whiskey John, being undesirable citizens in the opinion of a majority of the town folk, are warned by a notice pasted on Red Pete's saloon to leave town by sunset of the 15th. Kitty's brother, noticing the growing intimacy between Hurley and his sister, warns Kitty that Hurley is a gambler, and shows her the notice.

Early on the 15th all leave but Hurley, who, unconcerned, sits gambling in Pete's saloon until five minutes before sunset, when he starts off, first riding by the house where Kitty stays, hoping for one last glimpse of her. There he hears that Kitty and her brother rode out early that morning and have not returned. One of the men nearby tells him he saw them riding towards the desert. The father becomes much alarmed and a party is organized to go after them, but Hurley, the moment he hears, rides off at a mad pace. After riding for hours, he finds the pair half crazed from thirst and exhaustion, their horses having wandered off while they were resting. Hurley gives them his water and while Ben is trying to revive Kitty, he bids them a silent farewell, slipping quietly off, leaving his horse and water behind. When Kitty and Benton look around they find him gone.

At daybreak the brother and sister come upon the party looking for them, explain Hurley's kind action, and all return in search of him. When they come upon Hurley, he is dead, with a deuce of spades attached by penknife to a little stick nearby. He had played his last game; death was the dealer, Kitty's life the stake. He won.

BIOGRAPH.

A QUEER ELOPEMENT (Mar. 3).—The deputy sheriff is in love with the sheriff's daughter, but proves himself such a coward that the chief takes his badge away and kicks him off the place. An elopement is the young folks' only chance and the escape of a convict not only aids their cause, but makes a hero of the ex-deputy in spite of himself.

LOOK NOT UPON THE WINE (Mar. 3).—Mr. Samuel Tucker, the president of the Temperance League, is preparing a lecture which he is to deliver before the Convention, and the Committee, though realizing his power as an orator, suggests that he gather some local color to inject into his discourse. He immediately acts upon their suggestion and gathers local color a-plenty. His wife, however, delivers the most effective lecture of the two.

THE WRONG BOTTLE (Mar. 6).—Happy in her devotion to her unfortunate sister and the promise of honest love that had come into her life, the girl was perhaps blind to true values. She became indifferent to her life and its surroundings. Accordingly she accepted the stranger and his doubtful promises. Honest love and duty were forgotten, until, caught near life's uncertain edge, she was called back by her blind sister's peril. Thus was true love separated from blind infatuation and life's lesson learned.

BROKEN WAYS (Mar. 8).—In this story the young wife concerned is called upon to solve a rather momentous question. After separating from her husband, whom she has discovered to be a brute and a criminal, she is about to give herself to another man, believing her husband dead, when he appears before her fleeing from justice. Shall she deliver him to the law or surrender to his claims? She yields in one instance, but not in the other. Then justice intervenes.

ECLIPSE.

HIS NEW WATCH (Feb. 26).—Percy buys a watch at a bargain store and can scarcely wait until he gets home to show it to his wife, but instead of admiring it, the good lady angrily throws it out of the window. He finds it still O. K., however. Percy then decides to go for a walk during which he has many dangerous mishaps, even falling into the river, but the watch still ticks and he believes it to be invulnerable. Finally he enters a restaurant to take dinner with a friend. When no one offers to wait upon them, he impatiently taps the marble-topped table with his watch. The shock proves too great, however, and it bursts into a hundred pieces. Alas! It will never tell the time again.

CINES.

WHEN A MAN'S MARRIED (Feb. 25).—When Bloomer learns that his mother-in-law has come to pay them a visit, his face assumes an expression of intense anxiety. Upon her arrival the good lady certainly makes good her reputation and impresses only too forcibly upon the household her remarkable strength of character and tireless energy. Bloomer at last becomes desperate and resolves to attempt every means of getting rid of her. He performs all manner of rude tricks upon the good lady, but they are all of no avail for she proves utterly impervious to injury. Bloomer is easily driven to cover from which he is finally compelled to sue for peace.

FOOLING PAPA (Feb. 25).—Papa is an ardent lover of music and will not accept Percy as his son-in-law unless he can play the horn. With the assistance of a confederate stationed outside the door. Percy astounds the assembled guests with his performances, until a mix-up in signals occurs which discloses the trick, but papa thinks it all such a good joke that he gives his consent just the same.

A MARTYR TO DUTY (Mar. 1).—After the terrible earthquake, Rose Carter rescues a child from the arms of a dying man. Knowing that the wife and child of her brother, a Judge in a neighboring county, have been lost in the disaster, she seeks to alleviate his agony by bringing the rescued child to him as his own.

All three live happily togeeher until one day a stranger appears to see Rose, claiming the child and offering to show proofs of identity if she will go with him in an automobile to a certain place.

On the way they meet with an accident from which Rose sustains slight injuries. Not wishing her brother to know, she explains that she fell down the stairs. However, upon investigation he learns that the lady in the automobile must have been his sister and therefore appears to be guilty of some wrong. His suspicions are soon confirmed and Rose is ordered to leave the house, never to return. Despite the pleading of the little girl, the Judge will show no mercy to his sister, who rather than confess her deception reluctantly departs, a martyr to duty.

NIPPED IN THE BUD (Mar. 4).—Willie is sent to the city to study law, but soon neglects his work, because friends persuade him that he has great talent for the stage. He resolves to attempt a career in that direction and interviews a theatrical manager, who offers to "star" him. Willie has plenty of confidence and his first appearance proves a great success, until, to his consternation, his father appears at the theater in search of him. Catching sight of Willie, the angry parent rushes upon the stage and forcibly ejects the principal actor, thus putting an end to the show. The next time we see Willie he is back on the farm working hard and occasionally lamenting the fact that his talent should be wasted thus.

WANTED—A HUSBAND (Mar. 4).—Two old cronies, Stout and Thynne, notice that a wealthy widow is advertising for a husband, and decide to put in their applications at once. Thynne arrives first, but at the sight of the widow's face and her six noisy children, he quickly decides to make his escape. When Stout calls, however, he is not a bit frightened, for he is a widower with four children of his own. The more the merrier is Stout's motto, and later he scoffs at Thynne's facetious remarks for he is now the happiest man in town.

CRYSTAL.

MA AND THE BOYS (Mar. 9).—Percy calls on Violet. Her mother must sit in at all conversations. Clarence calls and presents flowers to both mother and Violet, and immediately jumps into favor. Percy dislikes Clarence and does not hesitate to show it. The next time he calls Percy brings flowers for both ladies also. Clarence also calls and brings a large box of candy for each of the ladies. Mother invites them in for a bit of supper. Clarence suggests eating some of the candy just as Percy has the pepper box in his hand. Percy volunteers to get it and sprinkles a goodly portion of the contents of the pepper box all over the candy. He brings it in and he and Clarence and Violet all take some. Immediately they are seized with sneezing fits and compelled to take refuge in the lemonade to quench their burning thirsts. Violet and Percy exit into the parlor where they make up and she forgives him. Meanwhile Clarence is having a hard time explaining that it was not his fault and mother proves that she holds nothing much against him by proposing to him. He can do naught but except and go into the parlor to find Violet in Percy's strong arms, and when all hands explain the double engagement everything ends well.

KNIGHTS AND LADIES (Mar. 9).—Chester and Pearl, are sweethearts. Grace and her beau, Belment call on Pearl while Chester is there. Belmont pays a whole lot of attention to Pearl and makes Chester jealous. After Belmont and Grace leave, they quarrel and Chester leaves angry. They are each on the point of telephoning for the other for forgiveness, but neither will give in. At last Pearl visiting Grace unburdens her story of the quarrel and Grace determines to bring Chester to Pearl. She leaves Belmont with Pearl and leaves for Chester's apartment. Meanwhile Chester has capitulated and called on Pearl's house. The maid informs him she is visiting Grace. He rushes there and seeing Belmont talking to Pearl rushes in. Grace meanwhile has dozed off while waiting for him and she does not see him until he has taken two swords off the wall and left. She follows, Chester goes right back and makes Belmont fight a duel with the swords. Belmont is just about to run his sword through Chester when Pearl hits Belmont over the face with a pillow, ending the duel. Grace returns and orders Pearl and Chester from the house. They both go and upon arriving home renew old friendships and vow never to quarrel again.

REX.

THE STOOL PIGEON (Mar. 6).—Young Walsh, the assisting prosecuting attorney of a big city, is very much in love with Roma Bonnelli, an artist's model, whose naturally beautiful temperament has raised her above her station. Her whole heart goes out to this progressive young man, and she is afraid to tell him that her brother is the one-time crook, Dago Joe. Roma tells Joe that Walsh has proposed to her and he promises to reform with her help.

Dago Joe's erstwhile companions, Red, Slim and Steve, are aware that Joe has turned informer, but do not know that he has decided to reform. They determine to revenge themselves upon him. Red and Steve both pay attention to Minnie, a tough character. This causes bad blood and a clash, and in an ensuing fight in a line, Red kills Steve, shooting through his pocket. Red escapes. He tells Minnie and Slim of the happening and they decide to fix the blame on Dago Joe. They take his coat from a peg and substitute Red's, and Joe is caught by the police, whilst looking in surprise at the revolver and burnt hole in his coat. He is arrested.

Roma reads of his arrest and knows that at the time of the murder Joe and she were together talking over his future. She visits him in his cell and offers to prove an alibi. He refuses, believing that it would cause a rupture between his sister and Walsh.

The case comes up and Roma listens to the evidence and sees Walsh gradually getting Joe in deeper water. Unable to stand the strain she makes a dramatic statement regarding her relationship with Joe and why he did not claim an alibi. Walsh proves his manhood by claiming Roma and he extends a friendly hand to Joe.

ECLAIR.

THE CRIMSON CROSS (Mar. 5—3 reels.)—The captain of a Spanish vessel enters the house where Giles Corey, his wife, Martha, and his daughter, Priscilla, are enjoying a peaceful day at the fireside. He is selling the merchandise brought over by his ship.

The Spaniard did not fail to notice the beauty of Priscilla. Coming back, he finds her alone and shows her what he thinks to be the most interesting to the girl, the box containing the jewels. Among the jewels is a rosary. Priscilla does not know what the use of this is, and smilingly, the captain is about to explain, when armed Puritans break into the room and arrest him. They believe he has been making love to the girl.

Priscilla, in vain, tries to free him, but succeeds only in being locked up also. There, enclosed by the gray walls of the prison, the Spanish captain shows the first bead of the rosary and there appears before the enchanted eyes of the Puritan's daughter, the joyful mysteries of the rosary: 1st—The annunciation by the Angel to the Virgin Mary; 2nd—The visitation of Mary to Elizabeth; 3rd—The Nativity—Birth of the Saviour in the stable, surrounded by the adoring Magi and wondering animals; 4th—The presentation of the Infant Jesus to Saint Simeon at the Temple; 5th—The Boy Jesus at the Temple confounding the priests by His wisdom, led forth by anxious parents.

The Sorrowful Mysteries.

First—The agony of Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane; 2nd—The scourging of Christ in the courtyard of Pilate's palace. The soldiers urged on by the angry mob; 3rd—The crowning of Jesus with thorns, much to the joy of the howling populace; 4th—Jesus on the way of Calvary, carrying His Cross, followed by the jeering mob and a few faithful ones not daring to show their sorrow, save one, St. Veronica, who gives Him a cloth to wipe His face, and the miracle of the Agonized Face appears on the cloth; 5th—The Crucifixion, where we depart from the usual view of Christ on the Cross and instead give the rending of the curtain in the Temple, which, as it falls, discloses the old City of Jerusalem, and outside the walls on the fatal mount are seen the three crosses with their victims thereon. An astounded priest views the scene, then turning to Heaven asks which is the true God. The sky darkens, lightning flashes and smoke issues here and there.

The Glorious Mysteries.

First—Roman soldiers, casting dice for the raiment of Christ, are surprised and horrified by noises; the raising of the lid of the tomb and Christ issuing forth and ascending into the air; 2nd—The Ascension. Mary and Christ's disciples repaired to the spot appointed by the Saviour. He suddenly appeared in their midst and with final instructions slowly ascends into Heaven; 3rd—The descent of the Holy Ghost upon Mary and the Eleven Apostles; 4th—The assumption of the Blessed Virgin, slowly ascending to Heaven accompanied by Angels; 5th—The Crowning of the Blessed Virgin, Queen of Angels and Saints in Heaven.

And now we see the prison again. Believing that Priscilla has been bewitched, the Puritans seize the captain, tie him to a stake and are about to burn him alive, when a man runs in and cries out, "the Indians are upon us." The women flee in terror and the men rush to meet the advancing foe.

Juan begs Giles to release him and let him help fight the Indians.

Later we see the return of the Puritans warriors. Abner has a wound in his head. All assembled, they miss the captain, and Abner deliberately lies and says he saw him flee.

Priscilla, stung by this monstrous tale, accuses Abner of lying. Giles, in his fury, orders her out of the house. She leaves and we find her, rosary in hand, on the battlefield, seeking the captain, whom she finds dying. She gives him the rosary, and he dies in peace. Priscilla returns home, and at the window, her mother tells her that Giles is relentless. As Martha leans over she reads the passage which Giles has just been reading in the Bible, and beckons Priscilla in. The little maid steals down in front of her father, but he rises in anger and is about to hurl his denunciations upon her, when Martha re-opens his Bible and points to the passages:

"For if ye forgive men their trepasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you."

"But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Matthew 6: 14, 15.

Giles reads, and turning to Martha says: "You are right." He extends his arms and folds his daughter to his bosom.

THE TESTER TESTED (Mar. 9).—Meddling gossips often cause considerable trouble in a happy family. Mr. Wilton really trusts his wife and loves her, but when he receives a note from an anonymous friend, telling him that Olga is deceiving him, he at first laughs and then begins to give it serious consideration. In order to test her, he calls on his friend Paul, whom he asks to make love to his wife, to see whether or not she is untrue to him. Paul did his best at making love to Olga, but his attentions were certainly not welcome, and he receives a rebuke which ends with a slap which makes his face sting. Discouraged by his reception, Paul returns to Wilton and tells him he is sure—in fact, very sure—that Olga is a dutiful wife. But Wilton is not convinced. That letter has by now worked him up to the point where he believed its contents.

He is told to try again, and that he has failed simply because he did not try hard enough. Angered by this, Paul decides to make things interesting for his friend Wilton, and so he tells Olga that her husband suspects her, and shows her the anonymous note which Wilton has received.

In order to turn the tables, Olga decides that she will really pretend to love Paul, and so cause her husband a real bit of worry. Olga writes a note to her husband, saying that she is very much in love with Paul and that she intends to elope with him. Upon receiving this, Wilton becomes so enraged that he decides he would shoot his former friend, but he is saved from this rash act by his dutiful wife, and the two are reunited, while the unfortunate Paul is almost thrown from the house.

COCOA CULTIVATION (Mar. 9).—This instructive film shows the interesting process of the cultivation of the cocoa tree, which furnishes us with such an excellent and delicious drink, which, in its taste, very closely resembles chocolate. The cocoa tree is a native of the tropics and requires a warm, damp climate. It's height varies from 15 to 30 feet. It bears an enormous nut, which is called the "cabosse," and has a hard and rough exterior surface or shell, and is of the general shape of a cucumber. The interior is filled with a pulpy substance in which are embedded from 25 to 40 seeds, which are called the cocoa. The seeds are taken from the nut, laid in the sun and in that manner fermented so as to eliminate the sticky substance which adheres to them even after they are thoroughly washed. After this fermentation is fully completed the seeds are then roasted and ground into the fine powder in which we obtain it.

NESTOR

WHEN HE JUMPED AT CONCLUSIONS (Mar. 3).—Louise loves Fifi, her little dog. She also loves her hubby, which is well, for hubby is an awfully jealous man. Louise takes Fifi for an outing. She sits in the park and reads and looks up in time to see Fifi saved from a squashy death beneath an automobile by the fearless and good looking Eddie. Louise is profuse in her thanks and they exchange cards. Hubby sees them separate, and the "Green-eyed Monster" gets busy and he only half believes the tale Louise tells him.

Hubby and Louise are invited to a ball and go. Eddie goes too, and fate ordains that they shall meet and talk as hubby goes for refreshments. On his return the "Green-eyed Monster" gets on a veritable rampage and an exchange of cards is made and Louise is borne tearfully away. Eddie is more than annoyed. He tries to drown his indignation by long and copious draughts. One of two men find hubby's card in a pocket and decide to take him home to the apartment house. They put him to bed, removing his coat. Eddie has it all to himself, for Louise is at her club and hubby is at his.

Hubby comes home first, and recognizing Eddie, he flies into a rage and decides to go forever. Eddie wakes, finds he is not where he ought to be and escapes by the window without his coat, as he hears a sound at the door.

Louise comes in, sees coat, thinks it is hubby's. She goes to bed and is rudely awakened by a wild-eyed apparition with a gun. He sees his wife and storms to her. Louise, not understanding the why and wherefore, finds refuge in tears. Hubby seeks the bar and the same solace that Eddie did. He meets the same fate, but having Eddie's card in his pocket, he is deposited on Eddie's bed.

Eddie jumps up and is shown his own card. He sees it all. Explanations ensue and a penitent husband interrupts a very damp wife in the act of packing her trunk. Eddie is called in and hubby buries the "Green-eyed Monster" for keeps.

BIG BOB (Mar. 5).—Big Bob and Dick were friends and both were anxious to find favor in Jessie's eyes. However, when Bob learned that she preferred his friend, he agreed to give him all help possible in securing the consent of her father.

The old man had firmly made up his mind that Jessie was to marry Frank Bardly, so Dick was an unwelcome visitor. Jessie refused to have anything to do with Frank, and wrote Dick a note, which she took to their little post office in the old tree, telling him she would elope with him, while her father and Frank followed to read the note, and upon learning its contents, decided to lock Jessie in her room and come themselves to the trysting place and give Dick a sound thrashing. Dick overheard their plans, however, and promptly secured Big Bob to take his place, and as a result, it was father and Frank who received the thrashing and made to run for dear life in the bargain. In the meanwhile Dick had broken the lock on Jessie's door, and the young people were being made one by the very minister that father had brought to marry Jessie and Frank.

THE GREATEST OF THESE IS CHARITY (Mar. 7).—John Morton, a manly young cleric, comes to a small western town. Pity attracts him to Sue, the daughter of a bad character, who lives with the son, Billy, in a shack in the hills. Sue, a good girl, would break away from her surroundings, but she is ostracized by the small-minded villagers.

One day, at the close of a meeting, after John says a kindly word to Sue, he is invited to dine with Farmer and Mrs. Brown, who sees in John a desirable mate for their daughter. John goes with them, leading his horse. Sue is being roughly criticized by her father and brother Bill for going to church when the Browns pass, and Sue is horrified to hear them plotting to steal the parson's horse. This they do while John is at dinner. Sue tries to prevent the theft, but is silenced.

Time elapses, and Brown's daughter, Marion, does her best to win John over by her blandishments. Sue's father and brother are surprised while rustling horses. The old man is wounded but holds the cowboys at bay and covers his son's retreat. John is talking to the sheriff when the prisoner is brought in, and fearful for Sue, he begs to go with the sheriff.

Bill runs home and shows his cowardly spirit and begs Sue to protect him and save him. She takes his guns away and sends him into the shack. The sheriff arrives and asks for Bill. Sue tries to deny his presence, but John takes her hand and asks her and she leads her brother out.

The father and son are sentenced to long terms. Sue is free and friendless. She appeals to several women for assistance, but they all avoid her. John takes her to the Browns, who, with some neighbors, are discussing the case. John confidently asks them to take care of the girl until he can arrange for her future. They are indignant and John takes Sue to his own small home. He puts her inside and prepares to sleep on the porch with the old church attendant, who goes, astonished at the proceedings. Farmer Brown spies upon John, but can find no wrong in him.

An indignation meeting is called and John pleads for charity, and when he sees that quality is lacking, he takes Sue with him and drives away to a little country church where a friendly parson makes them one, and Sue looks forward, for the first time, to a life of love and charity.

POWERS.

EPH'S DREAM (Mar. 5).—Eph is a black man of the crap shooting variety. He is industriously engaged in his favorite occupation of crap shooting and hoping for big winnings. He fares badly in the game and goes home. His mind still dwelling on his imaginary winnings, he goes to sleep and dreams.

He finds money on the street, meets a "swell" girl, visits the swellest cafes and throws money around promiscuously and is the ideal of his class. But finally the crash comes. He awakens and comes back to the actual things. He realizes that all his fun was only in his imagination and is one disappointed coon. He wanders out from his hovel, passes the old crap game and hoping to realize something on his dream, he makes a "grab" at the "stakes." He is successful only for a while. The "bunch" start after him and after a lively chase, catch him and give him a ducking in a nearby water trough.

IN A ROMAN GARDEN (Mar. 7).—Marius is a wealthy young Roman patrician. He is weary of the pomp and splendor which surrounds him, weary of the fauning of those who seek to favor or propitiate. With a trusted friend he seeks adventure, and discovers a beautiful maid. The beautibul young Christian woman's ingenuity and loveliness appeal to the grosser passions of the patrician and desiring her, he does not hesitate to carry her off. The girl, Lygia, carries with her a wooden cross bound with thongs—a talisman against this powerful man. He takes her to his Roman mansion. When he approaches her, instead of the reproaches he expects and the fury of a beautiful girl, she appeals to his finer qualities, and when he would take her in his arms, she quietly raises the wooden cross and prays to her god to change him. He finds himself unable to exercise his power and will and that some power he cannot fathom prevents him from taking her in his arms. Instead he lashes her with his tongue and leaves her in uncontrollable anger.

He goes to the reception hall and stands and watches a moment. His friends, rich men and influential, are taunting the girl. He strides forward, and reviles and dismisses them. She thanks him simply and the scales fall from his eyes as she tells him of the man of sorrows and he listens fascinated. He takes her to her home and slowly retraces his steps. He sits awhile and in a wonderful vision he accepts conversion and is happy.

FRONTIER.

A RACE FOR LIFE (Mar. 5).—As the story opens we see Edythe Farney, a telegrapher, in the employ of the Santa Fe Railroad, holding a love conversation with her sweetheart, Larry Peyton, a civil engineer. He finds it hard to tear himself away from her side to go to his duties twenty-five miles away at the Gordon Surveying camp where he is employed as superintendent. As he is about to say good-bye, Grace, the eight year old sister of Edythe comes running in crying and holding fragments of her broken dolly in her hands. Larry tells her not to cry, that he will bring her a dolly the next time he comes to town, a great big one that goes to sleep and closes her eyes when she is laid down. On his way to the camp Larry stops in a store and buys the dolly he had promised Grace. We next see him superintending the work at the surveyer's camp. Coming across a bunch of his men who are neglecting their work and playing cards, he censures the foreman who resents to the extent that he aims a blow at Larry. Larry knocks the foreman down. The men come to the foreman's aid, but they are no match for the physical strength of the young engineer. They all go back to their work with the exception of the foreman who is discharged and goes away grumbling that he will get revenge.

Larry goes into the rough temporary shanty that is his office. Telegraph instruments are there, and his knowledge of telegraphy has permitted him to hold a telegraphic conversation with Edythe. While sending one of his love messages to Edythe, he hears a slight noise at the door. He closes the key, goes to the door, picks up a paper and reads the words: "Take a tip from a friend. Look out for Bill Dalton, your foreman, and his gang. They are after you to do you bodily harm, yours in haste—a friend." Before he could realize just what it means, he hears footsteps approaching and the voices of men swearing "get revenge." He opens the door to see hurrying toward the cabin, Dalton and his crowd of toughs. He closes the door, bars it, and as Dalton and his gang knock for admittance he asks them what they want. They tell him to come out or they will break the door down, that they are going to teach him a lesson he will never forget. In answer a gun is fired, and a bullet comes through the door. Larry rushes to the single window, bars that, places the furniture against the door, shouts to the men that if they break in, they do so at their peril, for he will kill the first man that shows fight. He rushes to the telegraph instrument and a call for help goes over the wire to the station where Edythe is employed. Edythe hurries to the dispatcher's office in search of her father who is an engineer on the road and whose engine is waiting to assist the California Limited up the grade. Her father cannot be found. She rushes to the engines, tries to persuade the fireman to start it and go to the assistance of her sweetheart. The fireman refuses to go without the consent of the engineer. Almost crazed with fear of what might be happening to her sweetheart, Edythe climbs into the cab of the engine and calls to some of the railroad men to come with her. She rushes to the throttle, pulls the lever and the great monster starts to move and gains speed with wonderful rapidity.

The scene switches to the surveyor's camp. The door is being battered down. One of the toughs attempts to make an entrance. A shot is heard from within. With a howl of rage, the man falls back with a wound in his left arm. As the cabin is reached the engine is brought to a standstill by Edythe, and heading the men she rushes toward the cabin. The door has been broken down, and the gang have rushed in upon Larry, and as the girl with the men following, dashes up to the door, they find a peculiar spectacle confronting them. Larry is standing with his back to the wall, holding above his head a box with the word "Dynamite" written upon it. The men standing in front of him, realizing what will happen if he throws the box, are just about to flee when they are confronted by the boys and made prisoners. Edythe rushes up to her sweetheart. He places the box to one side, then folds her in his arms. After the tumult has sudsided he quietly removes the lid from the box marked "dynamite" and takes therefrom, the pretty big dolly which he has promised Edythe's little sister. The word "dynamite" he had written upon same while the men were struggling to break down the door.

THE GREATER LOVE (Mar. 3).—Ed. Evans kissed Betty goodbye and went West. In a Mexican boarding house he met Conchita who promptly fell in love with him. One day Jose, her lover, hurled a rock from far up on the mountains and broke Ed's. leg. Betty, in a distant city, hearing of the accident, at once went West to his bedside. And then Conchita realized the truth.

Jose took advantage of the chance to attempt Evans' life. Conchita, hovering over the sick man, saw the knife over her shoulder, threw herself upon the sick man and received the blade through her back, thus sacrificing her life that Evans might live and be happy.

JOCULAR WINDS (Mar. 6).—Mrs. Carlton speculated heavily. Practically every dollar of an enormous income was invested. Her daughter, wandering about the big estate made friends with a charming neighboring girl whom Mrs. Carlton, learning of the acquaintanceship, snobbishly insulted, advising her to stay to herself.

Mrs. Carlton needed another hundred thousand dollars, or thought she did, which amounted to quite the same thing with her, the wealthy John Morton was sent for and the transaction negotiated, Mrs. Carlton giving her splendid residence as security.

Going to his automobile, after the transaction, John Morton recognized his long forgotten niece in the doorway of the modest home next door. Recollections of his ill-treatment of her mother, swarmed to his mind, and John Morton knew that he was not far from his day of reckoning. He therefore entered the little garden and sought by the one means known to John Morton to, in a degree, make up for the neglect of her mother—he offered her a check. This she refused.

Two months later John Morton passed into the great unknown and left his all to the niece. This included the mortgage on the fashionable property of Mrs. Carlton next door.

A time came when Mrs. Carlton's mortgage fell due, and she was quite unable to meet it. Then came to her the news that the little neighbor next door whose companionship she had forbidden her daughter, was the present holder of the note. Mrs. Carlton had her hour of anguish. And then came the little neighbor and, for the exchange of friendship with her daughter, offered Mrs. Carlton the mortgage. Needless to say Mrs. Carlton felt the exchange more keenly.

THE TRANSGRESSION OF MANUEL (Mar. 8).—Manuel, a Mexican of the West, loved his wife more dearly than life itself. He saw her take sick and her ailment assumed an aspect that even to his inexperienced eye spelled death. Desperate, Manuel went to the doctor, and the doctor, kind-hearted soul, came, wrote a prescription and left.

Away to the drug store went Manuel. The prescription filled, the druggist refused to deliver it without money, and Manuel had none. Out again went Manuel, arms flying, his head dizzy with unhappiness. There stood some horses belonging to the boys. Manuel, knowing it certain death, stole a sorrel mare, sold it to a suspicious looking stable proprietor, hastened to the drug store, got his prescription and dashed home.

The wife of Manuel was slowly dying. Frantically Manuel poured out the medicine, but it was too late. Just then the sheriff, leading a band of determined cowpunchers broke into the room. They were about to seize him but the sheriff raised his arm. A sweeping glance showed him the true nature of the crime. The dying woman raised her head, stared at the intruders and fell back lifeless. And then Manuel, raising his hands toward the sheriff announced that he was ready, but the boys, instead removed their hats and filed slowly out of his room, leaving Manuel, hated Greaser, alone with his precious dead.

PUNCH.

BOBBY'S BUM BOMB (Feb. 27).—Bobby's father buys a large bowling ball, which interests his son very much. The boy manages to steal it and after inserting a piece of rope to make it look like a fuse, he has a great deal of fun, frightening the neighbors with the supposed bomb. After he has scared the cook out of her wits and stolen the pies, chased a tramp off the grounds and reduced the minister to a hopeless state, he is caught by father, who soon transfers the bomb to a harmless ball. But when he threatens Bobby with a spanking, the wise little boy says he will tell his mother about the pretty ladies father flirted with; so instead of a whipping, he receives a dollar to keep quiet.

TRACKED TO FLORIDA (Feb. 27).—This picture shows Tom, Dick and Harry, the now famous comedy sleuths, on another case, requiring their gravest attention. They assume their various disguises, and follow a notorious criminal to Florida, finally capturing him with their usual cleverness.

RELIANCE.

THE BIRTHDAY CAKE (Feb. 26).—Mr. Gladwin has one son, Jack, of whom he is very fond. The boy wants to go abroad and finish his studies in music. His father has saved the money but does not want to tell the boy until his birthday. One night Jack finds the money and thinking of his ambition, he feels justified in taking the money. He leaves a note for his father saying only "Goodbye." The old man is heartbroken. Looking into the cupboard he sees Jack's birthday cake, the one he had bought to surprise him on the day he was to give him the money. He loses his mind and peers into the face of every young man who speaks to him—he is looking for his son. Every

YOU CAN'T EAT YOUR CAKE AND HAVE IT

For that, of course, is impossible. Hence, Mr. Exhibitor, after you have gone through the usual period of experimentation; after you have experienced a few "twinges" of conscience for eye troubles caused your patrons who have been so good to you; after you have tried every screen surface that you ever heard of; after you have "burned the midnight oil" in your hopeful, but fruitless, effort to make something "just as good" as The Mirror Screen; after you have followed the deceptive "will-o'-the-wisp" of plausible and enticing advertising of inferior surfaces; after you have tired of the coldness, the flatness, the glare and the distant haze of metallized screens and the darkness and flickering shadows of the plastered surface and cloth screens; when you have begun to feel the need for a sensitive, resilient projecting surface that will faithfully portray even the slightest emotion indicated by the human countenance in all the very fine dramas now being produced in film—

THEN

You will be about ready for a solution of all your troubles—the Mirror Screen. You will have passed through the whole process of evolution on the Screen proposition, but will have eaten your cake. You will have spent the full price of one or two Mirror Screens. On the basis of good business judgment, therefore, why should you experiment further? If you have reached the conclusions as outlined above, you and I need each other, and we are going to get together. Ask for our new catalogue. If you put it off you'll forget, so write for it now before you lay aside this journal.

Gentlemen:

About a year ago, after numerous tests and try-outs, we decided to install one of your MIRROROIDE curtains in one of our theatres, and after using it for awhile we decided this was the curtain we have been looking for. All we can say as a testimonial is that we have installed six of your MIRROROIDE curtains in our different houses. It is the screen De Luxe.

Yours very respectfully, night he gets out the cake and lights the candles and waits for the boy who never comes. The doctor says he is dying of a broken heart and nothing but Jack's return will cure him. In Paris, Jack, overcome with remorse decides to return. He enters the old home to find the cake on the table with the old man crouching near. Jack counts the candles and realizes. Falling at his father's feet he pleads for forgiveness. Reason is restored to the heart of the father and with loving kindness he welcomes his son home again.

THE LURE OF THE CITY (Mar. 1).—Marion Grey, a pretty and talented girl living in a small town, sings in the choir and is happy in the love of Bob Molton. Marion is ambitious; she leaves the simple village to seek success on the stage in the metropolis. There she has the usual struggle and after many bitter efforts she yields to the temptation of fine clothes and an advance in her theatrical work, through the influence of a millionaire "first nighter," Charles Bowden, who showers her with favors.

Back at her home her mother has become ill and Marion is oblivious to the call of the old scenes. Her neglected sweetheart Bob, comes to the city to urge her to return to her dying mother's side. He sees her at the theater and his heart aches at the thought of his sweetheart exhibiting her face to thousands and, degrading in his eyes her wonderful voice, by using it in a vulgar musical show. But far worst when he waits for her at her home, begging her to return, he is made well aware of Borden's influence. It comes to à choice between them and with his fine personality and simplicity which rises above the narrower, more selfish infatuation, he takes her away from the millionaire back to the town where she was born, back to her real home and just in time to save her mother from the grave and herself from what would have been worse.

MAJESTIC.

SHIRTS AND SHOCKS (Feb. 23).—Just before a swell wedding, the groom spoils his last dress shirt and the others are already in a hopeless state, owing to his nervousness. He chases his groomsman through the house to big, borrow or steal a shirt for him. The groomsman gets into the bishop's room and sees a shirt, but once he gets it into his hands, he sees that it would be useless, for it is merely a clerical shirt bosom.

In the meantime, a burglar breaks in, lured on by the accounts of the wedding presents in the daily newspapers. He is well dressed and mingles with the guests. He sneaks into the room where the presents are displayed and as he looks from the wonderful array of gold and silver, he finds himself confronted by the groomsman, gun in hand. He drags the burglar into the groom's room, and pointing to the thief's immaculate shirt he says, "This is just what we want!" They drag the shirt from the struggling burglar and in a moment it is on the groom. The groomsman asks what he shall do with the thief. The groom dismisses him with a wave of the hand. How can he be bothered with mere trifles when he is about to be married? They point to the window and the fellow dives through pausing only to remark ,"You're nothing but a set of crooks!" before he gets out.

THE MESSAGE IN THE COCOANUT (2 reels—Feb. 25).—Dick Ellis is in love with Edith Morton, daughter of a millionaire. Her father does not approve of Dick—for he wants his daughter to marry a count in the French diplomatic service. The girl will not even listen to this, as her heart is given to the American. Dick is kidnapped by some friends of the count and shanghied aboard a vessel bound for the South Seas.

Edith waits and waits, but no word comes from her absent sweetheart. Her father and the count tell her he has deserted her. The ship on which Dick is catches fire. He swims to shore, the sole survivor. He finds himself on a cannibal island, inhabited by cannibals who want to burn him at the stake. But when he carelessly opens a pocket cigarette lighter, they show fear and decide he must be a "White God" to be treated with great respect. They make him their chief, and at the head of the army, Dick leads his tribe forth to victory in many battles.

But all the while he longs for the sight of a white face and prays for the day when a ship will carry him back home to the girl he loves. One day he writes a note and seals it in a cocoanut which he flings in the sea, hoping it will be picked up by someone able to read and understand his message. Several months later, the cocoanut is washed up on the beach at Coney Island and Dick's plea for help read. A ship is sent after the man on the cannibal island. With a happy heart Dick sees the vessel making its way to him. He bids farewell to his faithful warriors who loudly lament their chief's departure. When Dick arrives in New York, the first thing he hears is that Edith is being married to the count that day. Jumping into a motorcar, he makes his way to the Morton home, where he arrives in time to prevent the ceremony, denounces the count, and claims Edith as his own bride.

MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL.

FATHER AND GODFATHER (Feb. 27).—Moirac, a notary, and Landron, a retired army surgeon, who have been friends since boyhood, live in the same village. The daughter of the notary is, at the same time, the god-child of the surgeon and they both love her very tenderly.

The young girl, who is a student at college, is about to make a visit to her father and the surgeon, which to them is a very happy event. They decide to go fishing—after awhile there is a bite, and behold!—the surgeon has just caught a large fish, while the notary catches—only an old shoe! They receive a hearty laugh from the onlookers which greatly vexes the notary, but the major cannot refrain from laughing also. The notary becomes very angry—they quarrel and leave one another, vowing never to meet again.

Sad and furious at the same time, the notary arrives home. But thinking what his daughter will say when she does not see her godfather, he becomes very perplexed. When Helene, his daughter, arrives and hears the sad news, she feels very sorry and thinks of nothing else but to reconcile the two good friends, so dear to her. She arranges to have them meet—they bow to each other and are very willing to make up and become friends again. But an unhappy word from the surgeon starts the quarrel again, and there they are, worse enemies than before.

The notary seeks revenge, and knowing that the surgeon is a hunter, tricks him into shooting a stuffed rabbit. The surgeon easily guesses who is the guilty one and it is utterly useless to think about a reconciliation any more. Helene, very sorry to have been unable to reconcile her father and godfather, reasons out another stratagem—she will cause her father to believe that she is very ill! The old servant goes and fetches the notary from his club: "Sir, come back immediately, Miss Helene is very ill!" What is the trouble?"—"I don't know—she fell down in the garden—a nervous wreck." In fact, Miss Helene .appears to be very ill. What is to be done? "If I was going to fetch the surgeon," suggested the servant. "Never!!! This man must never enter this house!" But Helene feigns to be worse and the father decides to ask the godfather to come. Here the two men are, face to face, greeting each other very coolly. New crisis of the false sick girl. They approach her and speak more amiably. She is better and they shake hands. Helene must laugh! They look at her and understand that she has been baffling them. Are they going to quarrel again? Without giving them an opportunity, Helene says "I forbid you to quarrel!" and kisses them gently.

GONTRAN'S SURPRISE (Mar. 6).—Although married three years, Gontram has not yet become a father. This is unbearable to Uncle Jupin, a confirmed bachelor, who finally loses his patience and notifies the young couple as follows: "My dear children, if in one year from now you have not at least one child, you will never get a penny of my fortune."

They immediately call on a doctor, who prescribes many things, and you should see how earnestly Gontram and his wife carry out the instructions, but all in vain! And at the very moment when the fixed time has expired, they receive a telegram from Uncle Jupin: "I will be with you to kiss the dear baby."

A thunder crash on the young couple's heads would not have been so terrible as this news. "What are we going to do? At any rate, we must find a child before Uncle arrives."

Polycarp, the servant, is entrusted with the task of producing the denied child. But he is unsuccessful, and after long searching, he is obliged to bring back a little colored boy.

Meanwhile, Uncle has arrived and is continually asking for the baby. Then Polycarp, dressed as a nurse, brings in the baby, to the great relief of the young couple. "Here is baby." Everybody turns around and lo! to their great surprise and astonishment, it is a superb little black one!

The Uncle is furious with rage, and while father and mother try to explain, the little one, left alone on a sofa, avails himself of the opportunity to run away in a most comical manner.

TIFLIS, RUSSIA (Mar. 6).—Tiflis, contraction of the word "Thilis Kholakhim," meaning the Town of Hot Waters is the capital of Trans-Caucasian Russia. It is situated about 1408 feet above sea level, in a mountainous country. The population is about 20,000. It is the seat of a few colleges, one Observatory, one Natural Museum of History, one Cathedral which is supposed to have existed since the foundation of the town in 445, and one Armenian Cathedral, built in 1480. Tiflis is an important center for jewelry, weapons, carpets, cotton articles, salt, tobacco, silk and wool. It is also noted for a famous bath resort. We are shown scenes of the ancient Georgian town which has become the capital of Transcaucasian Russia; the old Fortress Castle; through the town; the Cathedral; a festive day; entrance to the Persian baths; mosque and minaret; workmen's sheds; a funeral; mills on the Kour.

THE LAKE OF CANDY (Feb. 20).—On the Island of Ceylon, near the town of Candy, there is an immense lake, the picturesque shores of which form one of the finest landscapes in the world. Situated not far from it, are the majestic ruins of the palace of the ancient Cingalese Princess and of numerous temples.

At the southern extremity of India, washed by the waters of the Indian Ocean, lies this Island of Ceylon, where in 1815 the Portuguese landed. The little dominion was subsequently conquered by Holland in 1650, annexed by England in 1818, and up to this day is still under the protection of the British Crown.

A CHILD'S CONSCIENCE (Feb. 20).—Claire Lenoir, who is employed as an apprentice in a dress-making establishment, is excited by the teasing of the other girls and, in her anger, slaps little Jeannine. The mistress, who enters just then, asks why the little girl is crying and all point to Claire, especially Gilberte, a spiteful woman, who seems to take pleasure in accusing her. A necklace which she has taken from a customer while trying on a dress, she hides in Claire's coat. This Jeannine sees.

Jeannine seems disturbed when she arrives at home, which the father notices. He questions her and she answers that "A girl gave her a thrashing." He tells her that she must have teased the girl and that she should bear her no malice. This cheers her but it is plain that she has not told all. Finally, she explains everything she has seen and is advised to immediately tell her mistress. The girl returns to the shop at once and explains. Claire is cleared and she and Jeannine become fast friends.

THE TELL-TALE HAT BAND (Feb. 28).—While out riding in the wild woods, Lola is thrown from her horse and lies unconscious. Jim finds her, and carries her to the brook and revives her. The two become fast friends, and Lola gives him the band from her hat. One day Jim, fond of solitude, has ridden into the forest and is sitting on a rock tenderly thinking of Lola, and he takes the band off his hat and caresses it. A gang of rustlers pass near him, driving cattle before them, and accelerating their speed by revolver shots. Jim leaps on his horse and gallops for assistance, forgetting in the excitement of the moment the hat band which has dropped from his hand. The posse find Jim's band, and Jim, fearing ridicule, does not claim it as it is recognized as Lola's. She is asked how her hat band came to be there, and she tells them she gave it to Jim. The cowboys suspect Jim of being one of the rustlers and arrest him. The posse goes on the trail of the rustlers and a terriffic fight takes place. The leader of the rustlers escapes, but one of the cowboys makes a short-cut and lassoes him from the top of a cliff as he gallops by. The capture of the real culprits exonerates Jim.

THE LOST DESPATCH (Mar. 7—2 reels).—The introductory scenes show Frank Payton and his fiancee, Nell Hartman, in a southern town in the spring of 1861. The war breaks out and Frank becomes an officer in the southern army, while Nell's little brother, Bill, enlists as a bugler. Stupendous and awe-inspiring scenes are shown as the war progresses. Frank is made a major, and one day is confronted by a large force of union soldiers, and holds them at bay at a bridge. From the top of a high hill the general sees Frank's desperate predicament and realizes that if Frank's command is driven back the union soldiers will cut his army in two. He therefore rushes an orderly to Frank with a hasty message to hold the bridge at all hazards, as reinforcements are coming. The orderly is shot from his saddle by Union soldiers and the message discovered. The Union general dresses one of his men in the uniform of the dead orderly and sends him to Frank with a message to which the signature of the Confederate general is forged, telling him to retreat at once. Frank gives the order, and as the men retire before the advancing Union soldiers, he is struck by a bullet and falls, and at the same time Bill is fatally wounded. The message has fallen from Frank's hands, and Bill picks it up and sticks it in his blouse. When Frank recovers consciousness he is in the hospital, and Bill is dead. He sends the little bundle of Bill's clothes to Nell with a pathetic little note.

The retreat has cost the Confederates dearly, and Frank is court-martialed for disobeying instructions. He is found guilty and dishonorably discharged, being read out of the service and his uniform stripped of its trappings in a most impressive scene. He goes home to Nell, but she, broken-hearted turns from him, saying she could never marry a coward.

Many years pass, and Frank is a white-haired, sad old man, and Nell has never married. The grizzled veterans of the war are holding a reunion, and are marching down the street, cheered by the throngs which line the sidewalks, and led by a fife and drum corps. As the martial strains of the music reach Frank's ears he goes to the window, and the sight cuts him to the heart, for he is denied his rightful place in their ranks. The day also grings back memories of the Past to Nell, and she goes up into the attic and brings out her old clothes from a trunk. Among her treasures is the tattered uniform of her dead brother, and she brings this out. She feels a piece of paper in the lining, and tearing the lining apart she discovers the lost despatch upon which Frank retreated. As the full consciousness of what it means flashes over her she rushes out and intercepts the parade. Excitedly she tells the old general the startling news, and it is decided to march to Frank's house. The parade halts before his door, and the old officers and Nell enter. Frank is sitting in a big arm chair with his head fallen over upon his chest. They gently shake him, but he does not awaken, and then they discover that he has passed into the great beyond.

THE BARRIER (Mar. 5—2 reels).—Sergeant Wade is promoted to a lieutenancy, and the day he receives official notification of his new rank he has been writing in his dairy the innermost secrets of his heart, for he is in love with Grace, the Colonel's daughter, and has never dared to communicate to her the affection he bears her. Corporal Sullivan, much the worse for an evening spent in the saloons of the settlement, comes in and finds the diary, and goes to the bunk house where he entertains the soldiers by reading it aloud. Wade comes into the room, and tears the book from Sullivan's hand, and, greatly mortified, rushes to his room. The drunken Sullivan follows him, and Wade, driven to desperation, strikes him. A terriffic struggle ensues, and Wade picks up a heavy water pitcher and strikes Sullivan, who falls unconscious. Wade is arrested and court-martialed, being sentenced to a prison term at Ft. Leavenworth, and is sent away escorted by an armed guard.

Grace, who is secretly in love with Wade, feels his disgrace keenly and decides to go east for awhile. She goes away in the stage coach. In the meantime the Indians have been acting in an ugly manner, having trouble with the government agent, and they break out and go on the warpath. The agency is burned down, and then they see the stage coach approaching. The escort sees the Indians approaching and by a clever trick manage to get Grace secreted in the hills, and they gallop away with the Indians in pursuit. The entire guard is killed off, but not before they have put up a great fight for their lives. Wade takes advantage of the carelessness of his guard and makes a thrilling escape, taking to the hills. He meets Grace just as the Indians, who have discovered the ruse that was employed, are following her trail. Behind the rocks Wade fights for his life and that of Grace, and, in a narrow pass he holds the redskins at bay, though wounded a number of times.

The soldiers at the fort, discovering the massacre of the Indian agent and his staff, are in pursuit of the Indians, and hearing the firing ride madly to the scene. A sensational fight takes place before the Indians are finally driven back and Grace and Wade rescued.

Wade is carried back to the fort and tenderly nursed by Grace. The Colonel makes a personal appeal for him to Washington, and in view of his heroism Wade is restored to his rank of lieutenant and the findings of the court-martial set aside. The last scene shows the happy man with Grace, who has confessed her love for him.

KEYSTONE.

A LANDLORD'S TROUBLES (Feb. 20).—An Italian owning a performing bear gets behind in his rent, and the collector becomes vehement in his demands. The bear comes to his master's aid and chases the collector out. Terrified, the man runs to the police station and returns with a squad of bluecoats who proceed to arrest the Italian, and again the faithful bear takes a hand —or rather a paw—in the proceedings, with the result that the brave guardians of the peace are soon flying down the road toward the station house with bruin in close pursuit. The men tumble into the station and take refuge in a cell, and the bear follows them, nearly scaring the desk sergeant to death, and, standing on its haunches faces the scared policemen, who are content to bravely stand their ground behind the bars until the Italian comes and leads his pet away.

FORCED BRAVERY (Feb. 20).—This picture shows a young man, of delicate physique, who goes west for his health. He is made the butt of many boisterous jokes, and one day the cowboys decide to give him an Indian scare, they making up an redskins in full war paint and feathers. They chase the poor youth until he is terrified and exhausted and at last takes refuge in the bunk house. While cowering against the wall his hand comes in contact with a belt, in the holsters of which are two huge revolvers. In desperation born of fear he grasps the weapons and faces his pursuers, and when the bullets begin to sing around their ears the cowboys are quick to reveal their identity and to admit the joke is on them.

THE PROFESSOR'S DAUGHTER (Feb. 24).—The professor's daughter has two suitors, one, Fred, whom she favors, and George, her father's choice. Many amusing encounters take place between the rivals, and papa finally butts into an interesting tete-tete between his daughter and Fred, and the latter loses his temper and gives the old gentleman a good shaking up. Athletic George, however, appears on the scene and gives his rival a drubbing, winning favor with the old gentleman, and the admiration of the daughter, who decides that his brawny arm shall protect her through life.

A TANGLED AFFAIR (Feb. 24).—Two young men are aspirants for the hand of Mabel, Henry and Ned. Ned, walking through the park, accidentally bumps into a gouty old gentleman who furiously resents the shock, and Ned amuses himself by tapping the gouty foot with his cane and keeping out of reach of the lunges of the old man. When he calls at Mabel's home he finds to his consternation that the old gentleman is Mabel's father, and manages to make his exit about three inches in advance of papa's boot, which is following him. Ned is obliged to meet Mabel clandestinely, and Henry decides to have him kidnapped when he sees him sitting on a bench with Mabel. He engages two tramps to do the work, and tells them which bench their man is on. Unhappily, however, father appears on the scene and Ned does a disappearing act, and Mabel soon leaves her dad in full possession of the bench. The tramps, therefore, make a mistake and roughly handle papa, tying him to a tree and placing a sack over his head. Henry appears, and thinking it is his helpless rival delivers some beautiful upper-cuts and swings on the face beneath the sack. Mabel hears the roars of her father, and calls Ned, who runs to the rescue. When the sack is pulled off the head of Mabel's father Henry is horror-stricken, and loses no time in placing considerable distance between himself and the irate man. Father is grateful to Ned, and forgives him, but Mabel has had enough of her troublesome suitors and dismisses them.

A DOCTORED AFFAIR (Feb. 27).—Harry and Tillie are preparing to elope when her dad appears and boots his would-be-son-in-law out of the house. Tillie is locked up in her room, and to regain her liberty feigns illness and apparently swoons. Dad is troubled and telephones for a doctor. Harry, who is hovering around the corner, sees the doctor coming and bribes him to help him in a scheme to see Tillie. Harry secures a false beard and makes up as a doctor and enters the house, where he is permitted to call on the patient and arrange new plans for an elopement. His high spirits are his undoing, however, for suspicious father, looking out of the window, sees the fake doctor fooling with the false beard. He telephones the doctor and finds him in his office, and lays a trap for Harry, beating him to the doctor's office. When Harry enters he is set upon by dad, but makes his escape, running to the meeting place with Tillie. The couple rush to the home of a minister and the ceremony is nearly over when dad rushes in and attacks Harry. The doctor, angered at dad's actions in his office, has called the police, and they rescue Harry from the irate man. The ceremony proceeds, and when Harry and Tillie exit they see dad in the clutches of the police, and they relent. A compromise is effected, by which he gives them his blessing and they withdraw the charges against him and secure his release.

A RED HOT ROMANĊE (Feb. 27).—This is a most amusing and cleverly acted burlesque of a Spanish courtship, in which two rivals for the hand of a beautiful senorita battle with each other. Gomez, with the assistance of weird looking desperadoes, captures Antone, ties a rope about him and swings him from a steep cliff. He then builds a fire under the rope so that when the flames have burned the strands through Antone will be hurled to the bottom of the chasm, 1000 feet below. As the rope breaks and Antone is seen falling through space; Gomez loses his footing and comes tumbling after. The men fall in a heap, and arising, renew the battle. They are interrupted by the senorita and a policeman, and suddenly decide that their arduous duel has cooled their love, and they fall on each other's necks and kiss each other, walking away arm in arm from the cause of their strife. With a disdainful toss of her head she leaves the faithless lovers, and a smile brings the policeman to her side, and she walks proudly away hanging onto the arm of the new victim of her wiles.

THANHOUSER.

THE GHOST IN UNIFORM (Feb. 23).—A little orphan boy found that the high cost of living was too much for his income as a seller of newspapers, so he was frequently compelled to sleep outdoors. Being a resourceful chap, however, he got a bright idea when he noticed that the police of a certain precinct were moving from one station house to another. Without consulting anyone the youngster moved into the abandoned building by entering a rear window. He had an additional piece of luck, for he found an old uniform coat and helmet which had been left behind by one of the policemen. The garment made an excellent overcoat and nightrobe combined, and under the sergeant's desk was a spot well sheltered from drafts, where the youngster soon fell into a sleep.

Had he been the only one to cast envious eyes upon the old station, it might have been his home for a long time. It happened, however, that two tramps saw the building which to them was an old acquaintance, as they had frequently been prisoners there. They decided to pass the night as free men within the walls where they had been prisoners and found no difficulty in gaining an entrance. While exploring they walked over to the sergeant's desk and were horrified when a figure in blue uniform rose from behind it and confronted them. They could see the official helmet, the coat with the brass buttons, and although the figure had no head it moved menacingly toward them. With wild yells the tramps ran out and away, only to fall into the hands of a vigilant blue coat. At the new station they told the sergeant of their experience and he sent the reserves out to "lay the ghost." They returned soon afterward with the

WHEN DREAMS COME TRUE (Feb. 28).—The young owners of a California orange grove loved each other, but they were unhappy because their lives were so narrow and circumscribed. Each dreamed of wealth and prayed continually that it might come.

Sometimes dreams come true and in this particular case they did. Wealth came to the couple and they were in a position to gratify their every fancy. A young couple from the East gladly leased their grove and the original owners went to a large city expecting to spend the remainder of their days in luxury. Within a year, however, they were tired of their new life, but each was ashamed to tell the other so. While the husband was absent on a shooting trip the wife received a letter from their tenant, who also had been disillusioned. The tenant was sick of oranges and longed for "that dear Broadway." Under the circumstances the woman saw her duty clear. Her husband returned, weary after his outing, to receive word that his wife had gone back to the orange grove "to look after the property." He followed her there, found her in an old gingham dress and sun bonnet, thoroughly happy because she was again settled in the land she loved. It might be added that he was heartily glad to join her.

WHEN ALL WAS DARK (Feb. 18).—Barnard Powers is happy in his home-life with his wife. He is visited by several friends and there are many pleasant evenings passed at the card table and around the piano. Powers notices that his eyesight shows signs of weakening. One evening, when his wife, himself and friend, John Trapp, are together, his wife playing at the piano, sudden pains shoot through his eyes. All grows dim. The darkness passes, however, aur he can again see. The next day the malady comes again in renewed force and Power's vision entirely fails. He is entirely blind and experts declare it impossible to restore his lost vision.

A year passes. Suddenly his sight returns. He sees his wife sitting at the piano. By her side is the "friend," John Trapp. The "friend's" arms are wound affectionately around Mrs. Powers, who doesn't appear to be otherwise than pleased. He closes his eyes again, while the love making goes on.

A day later Powers is alone with his wife. She is sitting at the desk and is writing a letter. He employs a ruse to get her out of the room. He asks her to fetch a book for the blind that he had left in the parlor. He reads her letter; it is to Trapp. "Mine: It cannot be. What opinion would you have of the woman who would desert her blind husband? But should he recover his sight I would come to you. Dora." He says nothing to her during the day.

In the evening despite the import of the letter, Trapp calls, unconscious that the supposedly blind husband is watching his every move.

Then from the chair rises the outraged husband. He says not a word. Powers' arm goes up, his finger pointing to the door. Trapp picks up his hat and walks out. Mrs. Powers falls at her husband's feet. "I have seen all," are the words of the husband, as he lays his hand upon the erring head.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR (Feb. 20).—Mary Brown's nieces come a visiting. Next door lives Mr. A. Cart Wheel. His nephews, the Wheel brothers, do, a turn at home during the holidays. The Wheel dog crosses the hedge leading into Mary Brown's hennery. This puts him and his owner into bad repute with Mary Brown.

Accordingly when Mary Brown's nieces learn of the presence of the Wheel brothers, there is strong objection by the old folks of their becoming acquainted. Inasmuch as the boys and girls are forbidden to have each other's company, there needs must be strategy. They determine that boys will be girls and girls will be boys. One of the girls changes clothing with one of the boys and each masquerader clambers over the hedge and tries to act natural. When Mary Brown and the elder Mr. Wheel come along they find their supposed nieces and nephews respectively, busily engaged in their duties.

One of Mary Brown's hens crosses the hedge and gets into Mr. Wheel's garden.

The elder Wheel chases the scratching hen into her own domain and then through the hedge takes hasty aim. It happens that one of his disguised nephews is there with his sweetheart. There are many perforations of the nephew thereof, as the elder Wheel's aim is about as good as that of the Spanish gunners in the war of '98. They decide they will use the uncle's bad markmanship as the means of entering connubial bliss. The conspirators get together and write the following letter to the elder Wheel: "You hit the wrong chicken. She now has to eat her dinner off the mantlepiece. Every time she sits down she thinks of it. But it certainly made her smart. But to be brutally blunt, I believe it your duty to arrange a marriage between her and the nephew who most pleases her. If you don't agree, I'll charge you for the time I spent in picking lead out of her. She was a human lead mine."

The elder Wheel sees visions of spending the rest of his declining years in a cell dining on bread and water and he believes that he would rather have his nephews married than to suffer the fate of a chicken shooter. He takes his nephews to Mary Brown's house. The girl and the youth in the meantime have exchanged clothing. There is much matchmaking. It is finally agreed to save expenses. To get a cheap rate at the ministers they decide upon having a double wedding in which both nieces and both nephews will play heavy parts.

PILOT.

THE DOLL AND THE DEVIL (Feb. 27).—Herr Puppenmacher, the old toy-maker of Nuremberg, has two ambitions, one being to make a life-size electric doll that will walk and talk, and the other is to marry his pretty daughter Gretel to a nobleman. Both these ambitions are fostered by the elderly Baron Crosswig, who desires a wonderful doll to present to the king's little daughter on her birthday. In consulting the old toy-maker about the doll, the Baron has beheld the fair Gretel and has asked her hand in marriage of the toymaker. But this proposal carries with it the proviso that the toy-maker must furnish his daughter with a large dowry. To meet the wishes of the Baron in this direction, the old toy-maker must raise more money than he has of his own. At this junction it occurs to him that he has in hand in trust for his apprentice a large sum of money due to the apprentice, the son of an old friend. To complicate matters the apprentice, who is in ignorance of the money due him, when he comes of age, is in love with Gretel.

The doll is completed, but alas it is beyond the toy-maker to endow it with speech and motion. He succumbs to the temptation, however, of using Fritz, the apprentice's money as dowry for his daughter's marriage to the Baron. The Carnival is now going on and Fritz and Gretel desire to mask and participate in it. The toy-maker forbids this and sends them to their rooms on the night of the Carnival procession. Fritz, however, steals out and hires a Mephistopheles costume and buys a stick of red-fire to carry in the procession. He returns for Gretel who has resolved to don the costume of the life-size doll, which is boxed ready for the Baron. She has just made the change when her father comes in, angry at the noise and confusion of the Carnival. The old man is calmed at the sight of the life-like doll—which is really Gretel, who has stepped into the upright open box and hidden the disrobed doll figure away. In his rhapsodies over his master-piece, the old toymaker declares aloud he would sell his soul to the devil if he could make it walk and talk. Fritz, who has peered in, dressed as Mephistopheles, overhears this and stamps his foot. With his hand behind him, Fritz lights the stick of red-fire by dropping it in the fireplace. The room lights up with a crimson glow and while the old man trembles, Fritz orders the doll to walk and talk and they depart together for the Carnival as doll and devil, telling the aghast old man that they will be back for him from the doorway. The old man falls in a chair, tormented by his fears, and, finally, falls asleep. In the morning, the doll redressed and back in place and the young folks in their proper habiliments, the old man, conscience-stricken, refuses the Baron's suit and gives his consent to the marriage of Fritz and Gretel, giving his daughter a good dowry and Fritz his patrimony. The Baron is so pleased with the doll, even if it does not walk and talk, that, not getting the dowry he desires, relinquishes his suit and joins in drinking the health of the happy young couple.

GREAT NORTHERN.

AN OLD MAID'S LOVE (Mar. 1).—Professor Hart has a winsome daughter Erna, and likewise a maiden sister who is fast approaching middle age. The professor receives a letter from Jack Hendon, the son of a life-long friend, announcing that he has completed his examinations and is about to spend a brief holiday at the Hart villa. Rose, who is the "old" maid is overjoyed at the news and dons her best frocks in order to greet young Jack Hendon. Upon the latter's arrival Rose showers attentions upon him, while Erna to all outward appearances simply looks upon him as an ordinary visitor come to spend a few days in the country. But he manages to arrange a game of tennis with the young woman and while they are engaged in batting the ball across the net, the old maid appears and attempts to take part in the game. Her awkwardness causes her to stumble and fall, but Hendon gallantly goes to her assistance. Later during his visit, Rose manages to lose her balance while seated on a rustic bench during the progress of a lunch—and again is saved from embarrassment by the timely action of Jack. In the meantime the latter and Erna become greatly attached to each other and announce their engagement in the presence of the disappointed Rose. On the night of the wedding and after the ceremony, Jack remains with his father-in-law and a friend and several good healths are drunk. But during the merriment he has forgotten the number of his apartments and through an error on the part of the boot cleaner he mistakes Rose's room for his own and enters. Aroused from her slumber the spinster turns on the electric light and Jack hurriedly beats a retreat. There is commotion immediately and the guests rush from their rooms to learn the cause of the uproar. Jack's young wife and her father are disinclined to take his explanation of the mistake, but after he has shown that his wife's shoes and those of Rose had been misplaced, all is forgiven. The stupid boot cleaner is then summoned and promptly ejected from the hotel.

THE KISS OF JUDAS (Feb. 7).—Curtis Gray, a millionaire, has as his partner Henry Danvers, a man who has a somewhat unpleasant past, and who is wholly unscrupulous. Gray has as his secretary, Philip Winton, a young man who is loyal in every way to his employer. Gray is married to a woman much his junior, and Danvers has been making love to her.

Affairs come to such a pass, that Danvers and Mrs. Gray arrange to elope. Danvers draws a heavy check upon the firm and gives it to Winton to have cashed. This arouses Winton's suspicions, and he sees a meeting between Danvers and Mrs. Gray, and the passage of a note from her to him. Danvers puts this note in a drawer of his desk, and Winton finds it there.

In Mrs. Gray's boudoir that night, Danvers is helping her prepare for flight. She gives him a packet containing her jewels and he puts these in his pocket. As they are about to depart, Winton enters and orders Danvers out of the place, taking the packet of jewels from him by force. He then tries to show Mrs. Gray the folly of her course. Danvers meets Gray as he goes down the steps, and tells him to watch Winton as he believes he is in Mrs. Gray's room. Gray goes to his wife's room, and she, hearing him coming, makes Winton conceal himself in a closet. Gray finds him, and to save herself Mrs. Gray accuses Winton of stealing jewels. A policeman finds the jewels on Winton, and he is arrested. Mrs. Gray later, overcome with remorse confesses the whole story, and Winton is released.

LUX.

PAT AS A BIRD FANCIER (Feb. 28).—Nearly everybody in your audience will have read of the celebrated Parisian bird charmer, who attracts much attention in the Tuilleries Gardens. Pat sees this gentleman, and desires to emulate his example. He purchases some bird seed and commences operations. After a series of exciting adventures he comes to a large cage. Pat thinks that this gives promise of a bird of considerable dimensions. The promise is realized, but the bird has four legs, and Pat flies in terror from the angry lioness, who chases him through the town.

ARABELLA AND THE WIZARD (Feb. 28).—Arabella's husband is a cabby. A bad attack of gout causes him to absent himself from the office, and Arabella is obliged to take his place. During her experience as a cab-driver she encounters an Oriental, whom she belabors with her whip. The Oriental turns out to be a wizard, and his magic powers enable him to give Arabella an exciting time.

THE MYSTERY OF BOSCOMBE VALE—McCarthy was killed! The very day his slain body was found he and his son had violently quarreled. A little later the youth was seen following his father with a gun under his arm. McCarthy evidently had no enemies, there was no tangible motive for the crime to be connected with anybody but the murdered man's son. Yes, his son was innocent! By marvelous deduction and phenomenal precaution and intuition, Sherlock Holmes unraveled the startling mystery and fastened the guilt upon the real perpetrator of the crime.

Jack Turner and his men are seeking gold in Australia. They are disappointed in their search and Turner is threatened with mutiny by the men. At that moment a convoy of a rich prospector passes and is held up and robbed of all his gold by Turner's men. James Carthy, the owner, is sent away on a horse with his little daughter in his arms.

Fifteen years later, James Turner is living happily in England, the owner of a large farm. Meeting Carthy in poor circumstances, and fearing disclosure,

The Chief Electrician of Clune's Pasadena Theatre Highly Recommends "Hallberg's A. C. to D. C. Economizer" to a Friend. Read what he says:

Mr. W. H. Smith,
Livingston, Mont.

Pasadena, Cal., Feb. 3, 1913.

Dear Sir—Yours of 31st received and noted. The Hallberg A. C. to D. C. ECONOMIZER we are using in this theater is made by J. H. Hallberg, New York, It is adjustable for any amperage up to 100 amps for one lamp, or will operate two projector arcs at same time, each 50 amps. The light is so far superior to any other device, there is no comparison. This outfit has been in constant use 5½ hours per day since January, 1912, with no expense save one set of brushes, and our load is much heavier than is usual in motion picture theaters, projecting a picture 20x26 ft. at 92 ft. throw. Approximate amperage at one lamp is 90 amps at 65 volts, and that is a combination that cannot be obtained with any other device. I can recommend the outfit I am now using above anything I have ever seen or used in my experience in this business, and will put in one in another of our theaters soon.

Yours very truly,
Lester L. Conrad, Chief Electrician.

Turner offers Carthy money for his silence. Alice Turner and Jack Carthy meet and fall in love with each other. Jack asks Turner for Alice's hand, but the boy is rejected, and, downhearted he goes to his father, to whom he relates his troubles. Carthy has an idea. He goes to Turner and threatens to tell Alice of her father's past life if he will not consent to his daughter's marriage to his son. Turner again bribes Carthy with money, but Jack has witnessed the bribery and he demands an explanation from his father, which is refused and an argument ensues. Two farm hands hear the argument. A few minutes later Carthy is found by his son, murdered on the road.

All appearances are against Jack as being the murderer of his father and Alice Turner, his fiancée, appeals to Sherlock Holmes.

Sherlock, in his investigation, picks up a pipe and a piece of broken bottle. This clue leads him to Turner, whom he immediately suspects. Under the grilling third degree of Sherlock, Turner confesses his guilt, and taking a revolver, ends it all, thus atoning for two crimes.

Upon Carthy's confession, Jack is released and he and Alice are made happy.

THE COPPER BEECHES—"Two hundred pounds a year," said Mr. Rucastle, "that is the sum you may expect, as governess in my family."

Miss Hunter, somehow, felt disturbed and distrustful of this strange man, even when he made such a generous offer to her, at the employment agency. Nevertheless, she accepted.

Upon arrival at "Copper Beeches," the home of Rucastle, Miss Hunter was asked to cut off some of her hair, wear certain dresses, sit in certain chairs and other strange things, which seemed very unusual, to say the least.

And, later, when she heard sounds as of someone moaning in a shed near the house, she was thoroughly aroused. The climax came when Rucastle caught her at the door of the shed and commanded that she never go near it again. Miss Hunter immediately sent for Sherlock Holmes. She felt certain that she was being employed to impersonate some person, who was kept a prisoner in this old shed.

Holmes arrived in the nick of time to prevent a tragedy, since old Rucastle had plotted carefully the death of young William Johnson, a young man, who had asked to marry Rucastle's daughter, Alice.

Trapped into an appointment by the thought that Miss Hunter was his sweetheart, young Johnson had gone to the "Beeches" and Rucastle had followed with a shotgun, with murder in his heart.

Caught by Holmes, the villainous Rucastle is taken to the old shed, where they found his beautiful daughted imprisoned.

Rucastle was the trustee of his daughter's very large fortune. Part of this he had squandered and he hoped to divert it all to his own uses. Fearing that should she marry young Johnson, an accounting might be demanded, his villainy and greed led him to plotting and violence.

AMBROSIO.

WHAT THE UNKNOWN CONCEALS (2 Reels—Jan. 25).—For many years Adrian had roamed over the world in search of her daughter, who had been stolen while very young in a mysterious manner. She now resides with her father, who never knew of his daughter's sin and does not realize the depth of her sorrow. Although he has given her all the luxuries his immense wealth afforded she is still very unhappy.

Adrian, hopeless, has now dedicated her life to help others in sorrow, and it so happens that she meets a poor young artist who is obliged to sell the splendid works of his skilful paint brushes on the street corners. Max is in love with a poor young girl, and this love is the one light illuminating his dull life. His sweetheart is employed in an office of bad repute and Max is desirous of removing her from the demoralizing surroundings.

This agency, strange to say, is the property of Adrian's father, and he has just negotiated for the delivery of his young employee, Max's beloved, into the hands of a bad old woman. Adrian, ever on the alert for any sign of her daughter, after hearing Max's story, goes to this office, not having the slightest suspicion that her father, who in her eyes in the most honorable of men, should be the proprietor of such a place. The old man hides himself and listens to the inquiries his daughter is making regarding the girl. Great is his surprise and sorrow to learn that the girl he has just sent off is his granddaughter, certain little symbols confirming this. The old lady is soon overtaken, Max having followed them, and all ends happily.

KINEMACOLOR

THE NEW BUTLER.—Billy is ordered out of the house by the parents of the girl he loves. Her family expect a Count to visit them and advertise for a butler. Billy reads the advertisement and by means of a disguise is engaged. He makes desperate efforts to wait on the table, but the attentions of the Count to the girl Billy loves cause him to make many sad mistakes. The girl has penetrated the disguise and enjoys the situation.

Billy hears a noise in the night and leaves his bed room in the servants' quarters to investigate, descending to the dining-room. Here Billy encounters a burglar, a fierce fight ensuing. The family hear the commotion and come down stairs, all in a semi-dressed condition. During the fight Billy's disguise has become disarranged and he stands revealed to the irate father. His wrath is dispelled when by tearing away the mask from the burglar, the Count is discovered. Billy is forgiven and gets the girl.

HIS LORDSHIP'S MERRY JEST.—Weary of match-making mothers, His Lordship changes places with his valet. Matters are complicated by a beautiful girl. The valet at first reluctant, finally determines to win the girl for her money. The Lord falls in love with the girl, but his false position renders any chance hopeless.

The valet steals some jewels belonging to the girl. He tries to fasten the blame upon the real Lord, who is given in charge of butler and groom until the arrival of the police. He overcomes his captors, but not until he has received severe handling. The girl arrives, binds up his wounds, believes his story and they elope. On the arrival of the police the jewels are found upon the valet, who confesses his real position. Father and mother are crestfallen, until a note from daughter tells of the elopement, and His Lordship's jest, which for a time looked like a tragedy, is a merry one after all.

From the Patrons View Point

What Causes People

to continually patronize one Picture Theatre in preference to another? Of course, location, appearances, films, etc. have a great deal to do with it, but quality of the picture is what builds up a steady patronage that makes the business profitable.

This depends largely on your light and if you are using any other device than a to step down your current you are not getting best results.

With our machine you can produce a clear, white, steady light that won't worry your "house" by continuous flickering and will surprise you with the difference it makes with the films.

It is the only device that can be changed instantly to any of the three intensities without breaking the circuit between adjustments.

But this is not all. We will guarantee that our Compensarc

Will Cut 65% from Your Light Bill

and we'll send you one on 30 days' free trial to prove it.

We have a little 22 page booklet that explains all the reasons why. If you want a better light at 1/3 your present cost, send for it today. It's free.

A STATE RIGHT FEATURE FILM

Does it interest you that among other states, New York, parts of the South, and Ohio are now open on this and other Gaumont Feature Films?

How long they will remain unsold is a matter of dollars and cents to you.

"Soft and Sinister were the kisses of the waters on the cold stones. Clear rang out the voice of the distraught singer, her accents echoing back from the rocks in dissonance dolorosa. Under the waves slept her husband and there only could be the union eternal. And thus, over the sullen tide, she strew the flowers of her triumph, strewed them upon the grave of her husband-lover—upon her grave to be."

Haven't space here to tell you all about this film and others. Write! Inquire! Don't experience the self-disgust of feature film men who have let others walk away with the profits resultant upon handling Gaumont Films.

MADAME DU BARRY

is the name of our next release, which will be sold without restrictions in the open market. The film shows one of the love adventures of this bewitching woman, ending in disaster to the man who gained her affection. The story is one of those that take a grip on you from the first to the last foot, and make you wonder how it is possible to compress so many happenings into one reel. The film is hand-colored throughout, in a manner bewildering to the eye. The acting is superlatively good, Mlle. Napierkowska of the Paris opera impersonating Madame Du Barry, with other leading talent in support. Scenery and settings are superb, the opening scene showing a ball in progress, taken in the palace at Versailles. One and three-sheet posters are available for this film. Length about 1,000 feet. Price 12c. per foot, F.O.B. New York.

Facts and Comments

LESS than two years ago the multiple or feature reel was an exception. There were fears that the exhibitors might not be willing or able to incur the extra expense. The answer of the exhibitors, or rather of the public through the exhibitor, came quickly, and it had no uncertain sound. The feature film has been growing in importance ever since, and in spite of many inferior productions has proved a boon to the exhibitor. Unless all signs fail, the sway of the feature is destined to last for many a year to come. The possibilities of the multiple reel forming an evening's entertainment, have appealed to some of the best people in legitimate theatricals. The filming of great spectacles has likewise attracted many desirable elements in the show world. Musical leaders and experts have come forward to add the tribute of their art to presentations of great features, and lectures have likewise proven to be a factor in the success of the many big features which again and again have found their way into the big playhouses of the country. In spite of all this it must still be said that the feature of more than one reel is in its infancy. So far we have had nothing but adaptations, but the day will surely come when some great author will choose the feature picture as the medium of expression for some great modern original idea. When that day comes, look for a wonderful development along new lines.

FLASHES of superb common sense have at times characterized the administration and the personal acts of President Taft. Among his last acts was the veto of a measure designed to invest the government of the District of Columbia with power to censor motion pictures. The President, with a certain quiet humor often characteristic of his utterances, remarks that the police department would have no time to attend to its regular duties if it were called upon to act in a censoring capacity. In other word, the police are to catch burglars and not to sit as a tribunal extraordinary in ethics. Best of all, the President says he has been advised that the pictures now exhibited in the national capital have improved, "and that the films now exhibited are chiefly instructive and generally unobjectionable." This must be gall and wormwood to the reformers, whose natural obliquity of vision permits them to see and recognize only the occasional bad picture.

EVEN at the risk of shocking our own friends, we have been unsparing in our denunciation of pictures which too closely approached the definition of "crime-films." We never do this, however, without giving the name of the picture and of the man responsible for the picture. At a hearing on the Folks ordinance, a lady named Mrs. Wayne informed the public that she had seen not only the current crimes but all the sins of our ancestors in the films. This is indeed a serious charge. It is a horrible thing to contemplate that the films portray the sins of the world from Adam down to Mexico and the New York Police Department. Will Mrs. Wayne please oblige by naming the dreadful films she has seen. We must needs suspend our judgment until then.

SPEAKING recently to an exhibitor of prominence who owns and conducts a chain of moving picture theaters, the writer asked him how he liked his film service. The exhibitor frankly replied he did not think much of it himself, but he had to like it, considering it, after careful analysis, as the lesser or rather the least of evils. This suggests the further question: How do the patrons like the pictures? They have this advantage over the exhibitor: they do not have to like it; they may have to go but around the corner to find something more to their liking. The position of the exhibitor is hard indeed when his only choice is what he considers a choice of evils. We hope that sooner or later he will be the arbiter of his own destiny and absolutely free to choose.

This exhibitor, of whom the writer has made mention, owns one or two theaters in fine residential sections and others in poorer parts of the city. What may go with a flourish in the one theater may cause a dropping of the thermometer in the other. He must, therefore, mix and balance his programs with the utmost care. We know that under present conditions he is handicapped no matter where he takes his service from. He lacks the power to select freely. It is said that the personality of the exhibitor counts for much, and we regard this as axiomatic. How is he to assert his personality, however, if he must follow where he ought to be able to lead?

* * *

TOO many of even our good producers are afraid to trust the intelligence of the motion picture audience. They cannot entirely shake off the fear that they may possibly be aiming too high, while their hated rival, telling some lurid tale on a neighboring screen, is gathering in considerable small change. There is no warrant for such timidity; we advise any producer suffering from such timidity to watch the uniform success of the men who aim high. Going to a dozen motion picture theaters and averaging the matter of location will convince any doubting Thomas that the best is none too good. The real danger is more in aiming low.

THE RIGHT TYPE OF EXHIBITOR.

It has often been asserted that there is no big theater in New York deserving any particular praise for its projection. Indeed it has become a proverb that New York is behind the rest of the country in moving picture management. Now this may be true of many of the large moving picture temples, but it is only just to say that there are many among the small New York City theaters that are conducted in model fashion. One of these is situated at 314 East 138th Street in the Bronx. It is conducted by Mr. Daniel Newman, a good type of the small but intelligent and progressive exhibitor. The secret of his success is everlasting personal attention to every important detail. The result is most flattering. His theater, now in operation for more than five years, is always crowded and his patrons seldom die and never go to another show, unless they move far away. There is a most pleasing personal acquaintance with almost every patron and there is at all times a most exemplary order.

WILL BUILD NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

Henry Bishop, of Hoboken, N. J., has given out plans for the erection of a high-class motion picture theater to be erected in that city, the location being on First Street.

Crops of Freaks and Follies

By W. Stephen Bush

AT this time of the year legislative folly runs riot in more than one-half of the various sovereign States. With a superabundance of unenforced laws on the statute books everywhere legislators pursue their annual or biennial pastime of encumbering the statute books still further. The proposing or even the passing of laws has long ago ceased to excite any particular attention; it is the semi-occasional attempt to enforce the law which excites uncommon curiosity.

There seems to be a perfect epidemic of freak legislation this year specially designed to hinder the progress and development of the motion picture. From numerous States The Moving Picture World has received drafts of proposed legislation affecting the vital interests of exhibitors and aiming savage blows at the whole industry. Before the formation of the National League this sort of silly legislation would have stood an excellent chance of going through the houses and receiving the approval of the governors. Realizing their danger and smarting under their wrongs, the exhibitors in those early days made ineffectual protests, in spite of which many of these obnoxious measures became laws. Now that we have organizations and intelligent and watchful officers, things will no longer go by default against the exhibitors. The exhibitor will at least be heard, and the chances of any drastic regulations have been measurably reduced. Under the old system of individual protests the exhibitor had to fight the laws in the courts; now with a solid organization behind him he stands a fair chance of killing the hostile bills in the halls of legislation.

In New York the organized exhibitors are wide awake in legislative matters, and were in Albany only last week advocating the bill for a proper regulation of the admission of unaccompanied minors and opposing the Stillwell bill in favor of Sunday prohibition.

From other States in the West comes most alarming news of legislative freaks and follies. One of the worst cases is reported from Minnesota. A bill has been introduced in the legislature of the State, which endangers the very life of the motion picture. Its provisions are harsh, confiscatory, loosely drawn and seemingly designed for no other purpose than of hurting the motion picture interests. Under this bill "all motion pictures, advertisements, descriptions and representations of the same are to be submitted for censorship" to a body bearing the peculiar name "State Recreation Board." This board, which is appointed purely through political influence, is to pass upon the propriety of the pictures, advertisements, etc., submitted, and there can be no license to exhibit without the approbation of this board. The powers of this board are most sweeping in character, and heretofore wholly unknown to Anglo-Saxon laws or traditions. Everything and everybody directly or indirectly connected with the selling or leasing or displaying or circulating "any motion picture, any advertisement, representation or the description of the same" must be licensed and taxed. No motion picture theaters are allowed within five hundred feet of any school building. No seat shall have more than five seats intervening between it and any aisle. For violation of any of the provisions of the act the State Recreation Board shall have power "to confiscate any unlicensed (meaning unlicensed by the State) motion picture, advertisement, description or representation thereof." Of course, such legislation would never get any further than the first court competent to deal with the question upon the complaint of an aggrieved exhibitor. This, however, would mean worry, litigation and considerable expense. The exhibitors of Minnesota must hit this preposterous piece of freak legislation squarely on the head before it has a chance to be voted for upon final passage.

We are glad to note that the organized exhibitors of Minnesota are thoroughly alive to the situation. The President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Minnesota, assisted by the officers of the organization, is active in his efforts to strangle this iniquitous measure.

South Dakota may be cited as another example of the fool legislator running riot. The First Vice-President of the State league of that State writes to us telling of a bill which makes it unlawful "to show any film depicting any humorous or dramatic story or illustrating illicit love, resisting an officer or, in fact, anything but a scenic." Why permit scenics? We do not quite understand this remarkable moderation of the South Dakota legislator. Just what this Western Solon means by "illustrating illicit love" it would be interesting to know. The most distressing feature of the situation in South Dakota lies in the probability that this grotesque bill may become a law. Our correspondent frankly avows his fears in this respect, but puts his hope in the referendum, which, he says, "will put our execution off for a couple of years." We hope there is enough sanity left in South Dakota to bury this bill beyond the power of resurrection.

There is one phase of the trouble which it seems to us merits particular notice. Who is doing the fighting against all this draconic and confiscatory legislation? Who is spending time and money in the fight? The exhibitors, and the exhibitors alone. Does this seem fair and just? In foreign countries the burden of the battle is borne entirely by the manufacturers. There are committees entrusted with the task of combating the enemy of the motion picture, and these committees are permanent organizations. They are furnished with the sinews of war by the producers of films. It seems to us that the manufacturers here might follow this example. There is a community of interest between the exhibitor and the producer which should make them share the burdens as well as the profits of the business. The exhibitor is doing pioneer work all the time. The attacks of the enemy are always centered upon him and his theater. His cares and difficulties are numerous enough as it is. If in addition to his regular work he must wage the battles against legislative "strikers" and fools and tyrants in office, it seems entirely proper that the producer should do his share toward defraying the cost of this necessary warfare.

The manufacturers should not wait to be asked for their co-operation. The question of hostile laws affects them just as vitally as it affects the poorest exhibitor. If in any particular State the exhibiting business is ruined through arbitrary laws, the market of the producer is reduced by just so much, and the work of rebuilding will be slow and costly. Now is the time to overturn this witch's cauldron. The exhibitors have a right to expect two things from the producers to aid them in their struggles for the common weal of the motion picture: more self-censorship and proper financial aid.

Mysterious Tragedy

By Louis Reeves Harrison

I HAVE yet to come upon satisfactory explanation of a general tendency to disclaim fondness for tragedy in spite of the fact that it has proven to be of absorbing interest from the time Shakespeare presented "Hamlet," "Othello" and "Romeo and Juliet" to the present rage for grand opera. All along the line, in arts that serve to communicate ideas, especially in poetry, painting, music and the drama, the most profound impressions made are those closely related to the tragic side of human affairs, so that it becomes apparent that the subject has a fascinating and enigmatical aspect.

We say that we do not care for tragedy, that we go to the theater to be entertained and have our minds turned from the dark phases of daily existence as a measure of relief, and this sounds so good when it is convincingly put that we come to believe it as a matter of habit. That is the trouble with us—our minds are badly cramped by erroneous habits of thought—for we go along believing and saying the same old thing in spite of the fact that we are more often bored than entertained by stories supposed to put us into a happy frame of mind, and sigh for some dramatic presentation that shall stir our souls.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" was not written to lightly amuse, nor was any other great work appealing to universal sympathy, and the top achievements in poetry, fiction and the drama have oftenest been tragic, but it does not accord with common opinion to say that we take any particular delight in the unhappy ending of a story. All England cried over the death of Little Nell because all England became absorbed in her fate by the little sign posts planted by the accomplished novelist in order to prepare the hearts of his vast audience for the child's inevitable end.

A skilled writer indicates at various stages of his story what is likely to happen with another purpose than that of giving consistency to the death of a character, and now we are getting very close to one of the secrets of tragedy's charm. This clever preparation on the part of an author acts as a tremendous spur to interest. It arouses curiosity and creates suspense. Our sympathies quickened in advance, we become more and more anxious about the fellow-creature into whose heart we are looking, and when you come to realize that there is a spell binding us that is possibly that of creative genius, the idea that we go to the theater to cry or to laugh seems ineffably stupid, unutterably silly, so inane as to never again deserve place in our thoughts.

We go to the little theaters, as to the big ones, from natural love for a great many things that charm us in the presentation, whether or not we laugh or cry. The love of beauty, for one thing, is universal, and most of us instinctively recognize what is fine in music, in acting, in all the details that make up a complete and satisfactory performance, whether the trend of the story be comic or tragic, but we are most deeply impressed by the vibrant quality of genius in the story pictured or told, that genius which soars untrammeled and carries us where it will. Our satisfaction is in the method quite as much as the end, and the latter need only be logical to bear conviction.

"The Vengeance of Durand" is a tragedy, yet the ending is entirely satisfactory, and the play would fail utterly if the futility of vengeance was not tragically enforced. "The Prisoner of Zenda" would have meant nothing at all instead of stirring the heart deeply if honesty had been sacrificed to the "happy ending" idea of the Old Showman. These plays are inspirations.

The screen offers a tremendous bill of mortality in drama mellow, military and Western—the slaughter by poison, gun and knife goes merrily on—but those of us who view the wanton and ruthless killing from a seat in the orchestra or balcony are getting so accustomed to the destruction of life by violent means that it may be safe to say death is becoming less tragic to frequenters of the moving picture shows. I even dare go further for a broader point of view and assert that death is not absolutely essential to tragedy.

Into the chaos of passion and confusion of thought that intensify human existence at critical moments nature's solution is often projected. Death clears away difficulties; it settles vexed questions; it reassembles seemingly inharmonious elements; it rounds out human destiny; but on this account the writers and producers of plays, disregarding the relation of commonplace death to commonplace life, use the cessation of life for the sake of a situation that has little else to it, and only create an atmosphere of gloom unillumined by splendid purpose. "You will have to excuse me," remarks the Average Audience, "if that is tragedy."

The death of a character in which we are not particularly interested does not move us so deeply as the failure of a character in which we are interested to attain an ideal or cherished purpose. There is far more tragedy in living strenuous lives than in shuffling them off and tucking our feet comfortably under the sod, "not gone, but forgotten." Those who frequent the theaters are seldom without retrospect of bitter experience, of keen disappointment, of sorrow, of extremity, of peril, and are ever ready with trembling sympathy to be affected by a life portrayal having in it the mysterious power rarely to be found in other forms of drama than tragedy. What is the source of that mysterious power?

I cannot hope to make evident to the understanding of others what has never been satisfactorily explained to me, but I trace the fascination of tragedy back to the breadth of mind possessed by authors of comprehensive knowledge, varied experience and warm sympathies, who not only realize what a mixture of good and bad human nature is but are able to show human strength and weakness so powerfully in creative work that our emotions are stirred and our spirits quickened by the poignant scenes and incidents described. We know in our secret hearts that we fail and fall in our efforts to rise, that we seldom attain anything like our ideals, and the recital of a similar experience has a powerful effect upon us because we have tasted its bitterness.

Tragedy of the noblest kind acts as a tonic. It revives rather than depresses us, strengthens and purifies us, because most of us are rudely great at our best, however puerile we may be at our worst. All that man tries to make solemn and impressive, such as the bench and the pulpit, become the merry jest of comedy, while the great play staged by man's creator, the eternal conflict between noble purpose and base desire, is truly that of drama's highest form when depicted by genius.

Of charm elusive and power mysterious, this form of the drama is more personal than any other, affecting all kinds and conditions of men, and it works less by theory than through the spirit. On this account its true significance is more readily grasped by those who feel it than by those who merely adapt it to their uses. Only those sincere in artistic effort may solve the Riddle of the World. So it seems that this form of story in action is almost set apart for those men of enough intellect and character to make noble structures of their ideas.

The Moving Picture and The Press

An Address Before the Woman's Press Club of New York by W. Stephen Bush.

THE Woman's Press Club of New York City held its annual social meeting on Washington's Birthday in the Astor Gallery of the Waldorf-Astoria. Miss Elizabeth Lonergan, the chairman of the day, had arranged a very fine program of musical and oratorical numbers. Mr. Melville E. Stone, the general manager of the Associated Press, delivered an address on "The Power of the Press." A talk on "The Press and the Motion Picture" had been assigned to W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World. Mr. Bush spoke as follows:

"Madame Chairman, members and guests of the Woman's Press Club, of New York City: This looks to me like a very good opportunity to get even with the press for its cruel treatment of the motion picture. The Moving Picture World, which I have the honor of representing, has vicariously, at least, suffered from the slings and arrows of yellow journalism, for to us, who seek to represent the motion picture in the journalistic world, nothing is more intolerable than the ignorance and unfairness of the average newspaper toward the motion picture. No press agent, madly flinging about the contents of his basket of adjectives, helped the motion picture at its birth; it needed no such adventitious aid. A foolish paragraph, containing far more complacency than wit, a freakish item of news, an editorial condemnation summed up all the attention of the press to the motion picture. Happily the motion picture was such a healthy, happy, indestructible infant that the whole press of the world, if it had been banded together for that purpose, could not have harmed a hair on its head. Now when it is seen even by the most undiscerning how deep the motion picture has struck its roots into the soil of our civilization, we get a little more attention, but it is too often of an unflattering variety. None of our journalistic leaders seem to realize that a new, tremendous and unparalleled psychic appeal has been discovered. They may have stopped or slackened the fire of their batteries of denunciation and vituperation, they may have ceased their rash calls for suppression and drastic regulation, but it does not seem as if any of them have been able to understand that this new invention is more important than either the alphabet or the movable type, because it has no grammar and may be understood wherever the human soul through its windows looks out upon the world.

"I see little evidence in the press that the importance of the educational picture is fully appreciated, though even to the average mind it must appear upon even a slight mental effort that the motion picture is destined to revolutionize the science of teaching. Our friends the editors and reporters do not even want to call us by our right and proper names. I can well understand how the lisping infant, not yet a master of articulation in seeking to repeat the word moving picture, may say "movie" and how our heathen brother, the Chinaman, may prefer to say "talkie" in trying to speak of the kinetophone or the talking pictures, but my understanding is hopelessly baffled when I see the heroes of current journalism, the intellectual flower of the land, the very men, who out of the inexhaustible stores of their wisdom offer advice to mankind from the President down use such vulgar, shapeless and unjustifiable words for the great inventions of the age.

"I am glad to say that there are signs of improvement. Some of the great metropolitan dailies and, some time before them, some of the dailies of the Middle West have begun to take the motion picture seriously. I appeal to the press to give the motion picture its full share of appreciation and publicity and to treat it fairly as it would treat an equal. Let there be no mistake about this: the motion picture is the equal of the press, to say the least, in its power for good; the big men engaged in the industry, Americans all, who supply the major part of the world's films, are as fully aware of their moral responsibilities as the editors of the country. The motion picture claims equality with the press before the law; we think there can be no two ways; if the press is free the picture must be free also. What is the difference between the printed page and the moving picture screen in the eyes of law? On both we may show what we think is right, subject, of course, to the law and responsible for any abuse of our liberty. We claim no privileges except those which the organic law of every State extends to the press and we are willing to share the responsibilities of the press. Like you we are subject to the law of libel; like you we will not and dare not invade the sacred rights of privacy; like you we are responsible for any offense the motion picture may give to the public through any offensive, obscene or immoral exhibition. You cannot without his written consent print or publish the likeness of any person, man, woman or child in a newspaper and the producers of motion pictures are amenable to the same law. There is now pending in the Court of Appeals of this State an appeal against a judgment for heavy damages recovered against a film maker who violated not, perhaps, the spirit, but the letter of that law. Sharing with you these legal responsibilities, why should we be shut out from the privileges which under the constitution are bestowed upon the press?

"The friends of the motion picture realize that it means a long fight to secure the final enfranchisement of the motion picture and they appeal to you for help. Like the press we, of the motion picture, work for the advancement of the ideals of humanity; our fields of usefulness are at least as wide as yours, our aims are as high. We think that we have a right to appeal to you for brotherly help as well as for fair play. Look over the proposed legislation in the different States of the Union and you will be alarmed at the ignorance shown by the legislators, who seem to be painfully ignorant of the fact that the constitutional guarantees of free speech and free press extend likewise to the motion picture. Long ago this all-important fact was pointed out in the columns of the Moving Picture World and, more recently, it found forcible expression in the words of Mayor Gaynor addressed to the Board of Aldermen, which in the dark depths of its ignorance sought to establish a motion picture censorship in contravention of the fundamental law of the State. The battle for the full enfranchisement of the motion picture will be won at all events, even the crassest ignorance cannot forever withstand the logic of events and the plain letter of the law. We ask the assistance of the press because the sooner the battle is fought and won the better for the fuller development of the motion picture. If the motion picture is to realize all the just hopes which mankind entertains of its possibilities it must, above all things, enjoy the freedom now accorded to the press of every English speaking country.

"If we had the press with us we would soon hear the last of censorship. If every newspaper in the country devoted but a few lines to this subject, reprinting for the benefit of benighted statesmen the constitutional provision under which we claim freedom from censorship, it would mean a mighty step in the right direction. It would mean the nipping in the bud of many bills, which may otherwise be enacted into law."

FAMOUS PLAYERS IN NEW JERSEY.

The Famous Players Exchange, with offices in Newark and Asbury Park, has been organized to release to exhibitors in New Jersey the productions of the Famous Players Film Company. William E. Smith, manager of the Newark office, has charge of the booking for the northern section of the State. Both offices report unprecedented demand for James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda" and continued good business for Sarah Bernhardt in "Queen Elizabeth."

"MIRACLE" INJUNCTION ARGUED.

The injunction proceeding in the petition of the Miracle Company against the New York Film Company was argued in the New York Supreme Court before Justice Lehman, Thursday, February 27th. The Miracle Company owns the American rights to the pictured version of Max Reinhardt's play, "The Miracle," bought from Joseph Menchen, of London, by A. H. Woods, a New York theatrical manager. The New York Film Company owns a version of the original legend known as the Miracle produced in pictures by the Continental Kunst Film Company of Berlin. The petitioners claim that the German picture is an infringement upon their title rights.

"The Man From Outside"

Three-Reel Reliance Feature.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is discenible in this crucible, an attempt to create a powerful psychological drama, and some pure gold comes out in the shape of extraordinary double exposure and masterly acting. In the Edison production, "Corsican Brothers" and a recent Pathe release, "The Compact," the same elements are used—a remarkable resemblance between two men, and opportunity for a talented actor to play both parts by the employment of double exposure—but the theme is varied, and a more comprehensive view of its possibilities might have easily made the Reliance drama the finest of its kind ever thrown on the screen.

Irving Cummings has set a new mark for himself in this great opportunity. He fills two roles with such vigor that the eye is only once distracted from his performance, and that for a few seconds by Ralph Lewis in a minor part. Cummings is gifted with a personality that makes it easy for him to present a character without apparent strain and without artificial aid, hence his acting is delightfully free from affectation. His work is characterized by that quiet intelligence which has distinguished Marc McDermott of Edison and Roger Lytton of the Vitagraph Company.

Scenes from "The Man From Outside" (Reliance).

The process by which Cummings is enabled to play the Good Brother and the Bad Brother who look exactly alike except for a tiny scar on the wrist of the first named and to meet himself face to face is that of double exposure, and it enables the actor to present a complex of intellectual and emotional habits in what might be called hereditary harmony and acquired contrast. This would be completely nullified by defective or even inferior double exposure, but that shown is masterly, among the best I have ever seen, a credit to the skilled craftsman who did it and one of the greatest charms of the photodrama.

The two brothers love one girl—same old triangle—and the wicked one is one of those extraordinary stage plotters who blind business men and courts of justice with subterfuges that a small boy might try on his school teacher, but which belittle the intelligence of the minor characters and the audience as well. He sends the Good Brother up for forgery on trivial evidence and proceeds to woo the girl by Stonehatchet methods, by ruining her father in business and oppressing the girl wherever she tries to earn an honest living. His plan is to starve her out.

He writes her a series of letters that are very self-incriminating, telling her that she will have to come to him in the end, and "after many years" he has a table set for the long expected event of dining tete a tete with the woman he has so relentlessly persecuted. Will she dine with him? Of course she will. She has eaten her last cracker. This is supposed to be pitiful, but she is amazingly plump, looks as though a little dieting would do her good, and it would appear that she is utterly lacking in that nobility of character which causes us to bow our heads in reverence to womankind.

When Monna Vanna, in Maeterlinck's great drama of that name accepts the offer of a conquering and amorous beseiger in order to save the city of Pisa and its people, when the death of many innocents is hanging upon her decision, there is real morality in her Quixotic sacrifice, but the author of "The Man From Outside," did not apparently see that he was destroying sympathy by the very act in which he sought to create it. Most of us who are sons of good mothers have ideals far above the characterization of Lucille Caruthers in this play. She could have been brought into the power of the villain by simpler and better means and with no loss of respect.

The Good Brother is released from prison in time to save her, but before he gets to the critical scene he passes through an experience which offers the author a lot of psychological opportunity. He is not permitted to earn an honest living, is driven into the society of thieves, during which an unscrutinized phase of his character is suddenly revealed. He takes very kindly to the underworld and learns to be a burglar. There was a chance to show real character drawing in his hesitations, his revulsions of feeling, his occasional resolves and his final yielding. Psychology throws the limelight on unexplored tracts of human nature.

He goes at burglary as though he had grown up in it. Fear, one of the most powerful and impressive of human emotions under such circumstances, does not enter into his composition. He breaks into the bedroom of his wicked brother, and they meet face to face after many years, another opportunity for bringing underlying soul states to the surface. The wicked brother dies from a heart trouble with which he has long been afflicted, and the ex-convict changes clothes with the dead man. In this guise he meets the girl who promised to be faithful, reveals his true identity, and they agree to start life anew in an artistic finish.

The big lesson in a play of this kind lies in the dual nature of man. Audiences of today are not satisfied with a male character that preserves an embodiment of goodness throughout. Finer deliniation is that of placing a man in varied situations to show how the dominant forces of his nature operate under different circumstances. There is good purpose in a drama that applies the acid test to his virtuous professions and no little comedy element besides. All this requires delicate handling as few of us believe in sudden changes of a radical kind.

"The Man From Outside" shows decided progress in Reliance production, and what is attractive in it will make it a winner in this day of deplorable losers. The editor of a paper has barely time to give a sigh of relief that one issue is on the press before another is staring him out of countenance, but he has the support of trained writers and capable authors. The producer of several releases a week has exactly the same responsibility and has to depend upon very few writers equipped with constructive knowledge of the drama and a mass of amateurish adapters who do not even plagiarize with good taste, so I always welcome original and creditable efforts of this kind and wish both them and their creators well. We can not expect to find compressed into a week's release what takes months to evolve, and the whole business is merely in a state of evolution.

"The Battle of Bloody Ford"

A Two-Reel Kalem War Picture.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

IN this day of padded multiple reels, the real feature of 2000 feet ought to be labeled in large letters for the benefit of the exhibitor, who, of course, cannot be expected to take literally whatever the industrious press agent is tempted to say. In the Kalem subjects we have become used to high standards in settings, in dramatic construction, in acting and in what may be described as artistic realism.

There is a well drawn line which divides the freakish from the sensational and in this feature, as in all their others, the Kalems never approach the wrong side of the demarcation.

Scene from "The Battle of Bloody Ford" (Kalem).

The story is clean, sweet and wholesome, rich in genuine thrills and always faithful in the rendition of historic and geographic details. I have seen notable instances of moving picture realism in the reproduction of actual battles and audiences are now used to the best. "The Battle of Bloody Ford," is of the best, ay, the very best. Such a battle or one very much like it no doubt has been really fought and is not as so many moving picture battles are, merely the military nightmare of an enthusiastic but ill-guided director. The battle takes the troops participating into woods and over mountainous land, but everywhere the strategic probabilities have been carefully studied and the effect on the spectator is in the best sense of the word thrilling.

Scene from "The Battle of Bloody Ford" (Kalem).

I think a special word of acknowledgment is due to Miss Marian Cooper, who took one of the principal parts. This young lady, though still in her teens, is a splendid athletic, a good runner, a graceful and skilled rider and a perfect swimmer. She gives most delightful exhibitions of her accomplishments. Withal she knows how to act and altogether is a distinct acquisition to the Kalem ranks. The other parts were equally well taken. Most of the scenes in the feature were taken in Florida and were selected with expert judgment in which the artist's eye was by no means lacking. "The Battle of Bloody Ford," is one of those rare features that lose nothing of their charm on even a third view.

The Knights of Rhodes.

A Noteworthy Three-Reel Ambrosio Feature.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

WHEN a producer puts before us evidences of hard and conscientious work, devoted to a subject of both dramatic and educational value it is the plain duty of the critic to let the exhibitor know about it. The Ambrosio Company have in this production gone far beyond the average motion picture product and have condensed so much art and beauty and soul-stirring events into a few thousand feet of film that unqualified praise is in order. What could be more dramatic, more exciting, and at the same time more instructive than the story of those noble and brave Christian men who, on the island of Rhodes, maintained the spirit and the traditions of the crusaders long after the last crusade had been ended? The story has a solid historic basis from beginning to end, the names of Vendriman and Spliman are not fictitious but are realities in the annals of Christian and Saracen warfare.

In subjects of this character, doubly valuable to the industry at this time of Kinematographic weeds, the Ambrosio Company is at its best. Much praise must be given to the acting and the dramatic sequence of the reels. The settings were particularly fine and furnished a striking frame for the story. The scenes in Venice and later upon the island were splendid, the religious fervor and daring of the knights and all their elaborate ceremonial, half military and half religious, was shown with a most commendable historic accuracy. The storming scenes, where the Saracens seek to scale the stronghold of the knights with ladders and the furious fighting behind the ramparts, were rendered with consummate art.

Scene from "The Knights of Rhodes" (Ambrosio).

Few pictures that I have seen recently offer greater variety in action and costumes and in scenes than the "Knights of Rhodes." The photography is beyond all praise. I think the exhibitor will be glad to get this feature and a good many more like it. It is a credit to him with his patrons and wins him the support of the best classes. This must not be understood as implying that the masses of the people would not care for it. On the contrary there is no doubt that the appeal of this picture is to every audience everywhere.

The success of "Jerusalem Delivered" or "The Crusaders," is in the memory of all of us and there are many points of resemblance between that classic production and this feature. I must add that the equipment of the interior scenes shows a lavish and artistic hand, notably the council chamber of the knights. Other exquisite scenes are the march of the knights through the city, the procession and the blessing of the weapons and warriors on their way to battle. A pathetic love story has been interwoven with the scenes of martial strife and its ending is tragically different from the ordinary course of such episodes. Altogether it seems to me that this Ambrosio production takes high rank among the best in recent kinematography.

"Kathleen Mavourneen" (Imp)

By George Blaisdell.

THE Imp Company will release on March 17 a picture that will appeal to all of Irish blood—which means that it will have universal appeal; for Irish plays, like Irish songs, reach every heart. "Kathleen Mavourneen," the authorship of which is sometimes attributed to Dion Boucicault, has been done into a photoplay in three reels by Herbert Brenon. Mr. Brenon has builded carefully and well. For a foundation he created atmosphere. In his first scene it was noticeable. It was the interior of an Irish cabin. In his second it was marked. A bit of lane, with the low-roofed white buildings, mentally removes you to a little Irish village. And there you remain until the end of the play. It is a picture that will hold an audience—and send it home in a happy frame of mind.

Particularly fortunate has been the director in the casting of his players. To William Shay falls the characterization of Terence O'More, the peasant lover of Kathleen. Mr. Shay's capacity for serious acting here stands out. Especially is this true of his work in the scenes following the arrest—his incarceration in the cell, the good-bye to Kathleen, the farewell interview with the priest, the ride to the gallows, and the execution. Yet there are light touches, of the sort that will bring laughter—as, for instance, where he throws down among the three grave diggers great stones, or where he participates in the festivities of St. Patrick's day.

Scene from "Kathleen Mavourneen" (Imp).

Jane Fearnley is a splendid Kathleen. She catches the spirit of the peasant girl whose head is turned by the attentions of the man of means. Grave or gay, she holds and interests. Frank Smith carries the part of the father of Kathleen. Mr. Smith, who possesses one of the most pronounced "picture faces," is the ideal father. William Welch has the role of Bernard Cavanaugh, the squire who seeks the hand of Kathleen. Red Barney, the cut-throat who carries out the villainous schemes of the squire, is most delightfully portrayed by Robert Ferguson. By his antics he contributes materially to the lessening of the tension. Fred Turner is impressive and priestly as Father Daly, the genuine clergyman who substitutes himself for the intended bogus man of God. So here we have a most worthy cast.

The action is sharp, gingery. There is no dragging. There are many situations of dramatic suspense. In order to accentuate these Mr. Brenon has elected to mildly deceive those whom he will entertain with this picture. Kathleen falls asleep by the fireplace and dreams. The events that follow are those that come to her in her sleep. It is near the end of the third reel before Kathleen awakes—and it is quite certain that those who are following her will "wake up" at the same time.

Kathleen is in love with Terence O'More. Both are in humble circumstances. The two lovers are among those who are entertained on rent day by Squire Bernard Cavanaugh. The squire makes love to Kathleen. She accepts his attentions and also from him a ring. When Terence later calls on his sweetheart she treats him with scant courtesy. A messenger from the squire brings a proposal of marriage. Bernard says he will call the following morning for his answer. Terence throws the note to the floor and leaves. That night Kathleen reclines by the fireplace and falls asleep.

In the morning the squire calls and is accepted. The marriage is to take place that day. Bernard sends Red Barney to engage a man to don a priest's robe and perform a false marriage. Barney engages his man, but quarrels with him. The result is the injury of Barney's opponent, who sends for Father Daly. The priest learns of the intended deception. He decides to perform the ceremony himself. Bernard tires of his peasant wife. He writes her a note that he desires to marry someone else. As a maid bears to the wife in an adjoining room his message, Father Daly calls seeking funds for the parish. He hears the cry of the wife and follows the husband to the room. Bernard admits to the priest that Kathleen is not his wife. The priest tells the distressed woman that she is the true wife of the squire; that he himself performed the ceremony, and produces the certificate.

Bernard tries another tack. He engages Red Barney and two other cut-throats to repair to the foot of the Black Crag, there to dig a grave and to be prepared to commit a murder. Later the squire takes Kathleen for a carriage ride. Terence, up in the cliff, sees the men below digging. He drops stones among them to their great fright. When the old sweetheart sees the three men assailing Kathleen he leaps down the rocks and jumps in among the murderers. He disposes of the three men and grapples with Bernard. In the struggle the squire is killed. A passing file of soldiers arrests Terence. The trial that follows results in the sentence to death of the peasant. There are sad scenes in the following days. Kathleen is disconsolate. With her father she calls on her old lover and there is a tearful farewell. The priest enters to prepare the condemned man for the execution.

Through the village street the procession passes, Terence and the priest in the cart, which is driven to a point under the gallows. The soldiers hold back the people. The rope is adjusted. The picture fades.

It is St. Patrick's Day morning. Kathleen is asleep by the fireplace. She rubs her eyes and runs to the door. Terence enters. The girl throws her arms about him. She embraces him again and again. Kathleen is finally convinced by the happy lover that she really has been dreaming. Bernard calls for his answer. Terence takes from Kathleen the ring and returns it to the squire. Then he announces his engagement. The squire congratulates him. The festive villagers throng in. The chickens, the rabbits and the pig are sent scurrying. There is an impromptu dance right there and all ends merrily.

PICTURE FOLK AT PLEIADES CLUB.

On Sunday evening, February 23, the Pleiades Club gave a dinner at the Hotel Brevoort, New York, to the Vitagraph players. The toastmaster of the occasion was J. Stuart Blackton, who presided in his usual felicitious manner. Among those who took active part in the entertainment were Ralph Ince, in his portrayal of Abraham Lincoln, in a one-act drama, "The Seventh Son." Mr. Ince was supported by Mary Maurice and Frank Mason, Zena Keefe, John Bunny and Kenneth Casey. The Vitagraph Pickwick Papers, featuring John Bunny; International Motor Boat Races at Huntington, L. I.; Yachting at the Atlantic Yacht Club, and "Everybody's Doin' It," were motion picture numbers. A Power's No. 6A was used and gave rock steady projection to these very excellent subjects.

"His Grandchild" (Cines-Kleine)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

ANOTHER excellently acted photoplay (fully up in every respect to "A Lesson of the Past," which was reviewed by me a few weeks ago) of the Cines brand, will be released by George Kleine on March 12. The story, though it is familiar in some respects, is wholesome and interesting throughout, and the climax has a heart-grip for all who love their neighbors and who delight in making the world brighter.

I have seldom seen finer character acting anywhere than that of Emilio Ghione in the role of Captain Reed. He has a most expressive face and his flexible countenance reflects his changing thoughts and moods with remarkable clearness. The colonel, Captain Reed's foil, is also well portrayed, as are all the other characters of importance.

Scene from "His Grandchild" (Cines-Kleine). Copyright by George Kleine.

Colonel Green and Captain Reed have been lifelong friends and comrades—that is, until the rift that caused this story took place. Captain Reed's daughter, Elsie, and Colonel Green's only son, Albert, loved each other and their parents looked on with satisfaction and happiness.

The old soldiers had a great liking for playing chess. One day the captain charged the colonel with unfairness in playing, and the game ended in open rupture, not only between themselves, but also for the lovers. But the latter while outwardly obeying their parents continued to love each other devotedly. Albert finally decided to bring things to a climax and wrote Elsie asking her to become his wife without her father's consent, assuring her that her stern parent would forgive them both afterwards. On receiving a letter from Elsie announcing her marriage, Captain Reed replied that he once had a daughter, but that she was now dead to him.

Scene from "His Grandchild" (Cines-Kleine). Copyright by George Kleine.

Five years elapsed, but there was no sign of change in the captain's demeanor towards his child. Colonel Green had taken Elsie and Albert to his home and heart and a young grandson came to brighten the household and gladden the declining years of the old soldier. Meanwhile the captain led a lonely, embittered life, the shadows growing still more somber as the years passed.

One day Colonel Green had a happy inspiration. He suggested to his little grandson that he should write to Grandpa Reed and wish him a happy birthday. When the short note, in the sprawling letters of a child's first effort at writing, arrived at the captain's home, the old man read it sternly, crumpled it up fiercely and threw it in the fireplace. But on afterthought he picked it up and again read it. Then his heart melted and the tears flowed.

The captain's housekeeper noiselessly discovered him in his changed mood and invited Albert and Elsie, the colonel and his grandson to the captain's home to the birthday party. The little boy enters first and in a manly way wishes Grandpa Reed many happy birthdays. Looking at the child in surprise and then around at the group near the door, he fiercely shook his fist and head and refused to become reconciled. But the boy would not be rebuffed and again wished his grandpa many happy birthdays. It was too much for the captain, who seized the child in his arms and smiled forgiveness all around.

SCREEN CLUB BALL ANNOUNCEMENT.

The first public function of the Screen Club has been set for Saturday evening, April 19, 1913, when that organization will give its first annual ball at Terrace Garden, Lexington Avenue and 58th Street, New York City. That this event will make history in the social end of motion pictures is already conceded; that several thousand people, members of the club, their friends and admirers, will be on hand to make this the first Screen Club affair one long to be remembered.

Under the direction of an able entertainment committee, preparations are fully under way to uncover some novelties which will be startling. William Robert Daly and Herbert Brenon are in charge of this committee.

A unique and elaborate souvenir is being compiled by Joe Farnham. It will be in the form of a book containing the portraits of the club members and the leading lights of the motion picture world, a history of the club from its inception and formation, the literary efforts of the club members, etc., etc. It will contain more than one hundred pages, bound in a flexible suede leather and embossed with the club crest and in the club colors. It promises to be a work of art, worthy of preservation.

The advertising in this souvenir is also in the hands of Joe Farnham. He announces that loyal friends of the Screen Club are sending in their copy to him in good style, but there are still some delinquents. Mr. Farnham is to be found at the offices of the Film Supply Company of America, 133-135 West 44th Street, and that address will be the headquarters for the Screen Club ball program committee.

WANT THEIR FILM IN CHURCH USE.

Thanhouser Film Corporation desires the Moving Picture Educator to announce that while the renting business is quite out of their province, as manufacturers, and indeed they have hitherto declined to touch that branch in any way through plain lack of time, they will be pleased to handle rental correspondence in re "The Star of Bethlehem." Churches, lyceums, societies and private persons generally who are interested in this biblical film are invited to write direct to Mr. Bert Adler, Thauhouser Film Corporation, New Rochelle, N. Y. Mr. Adler will make a special endeavor to connect parties desiring to exhibit the film with those who have it to rent. He states that there is a copy of the picture convenient to about every town of size in the country, and that it was used in many churches during the recent Christmas holidays with marked success. In some, it replaced the customary cantata. He is very anxious to find it in church use in the coming Easter season, and hence the offer to help intending exhibitors secure the film with little trouble.

"GARDEN OF ALLAH" BOOKING ON THE COAST.

The J. Parker Read pictures, "A Trip to the Garden of Allah," have just closed a sensational engagement of ten weeks as a feature over the Pantages vaudeville circuit and have been indorsed by the press wherever shown. This is the first time a feature film has been booked as a top liner on a vaudeville circuit, which will make it a great attraction for the picture houses. The films are now being booked for California, Oregon, Washington and British Columbia by Frank Rowe, Georgian Hotel, Seattle, Wash.

"Hiawatha."

Longfellow's Immortal Poem Portrayed in a Four-Part Production by F. E. Moore.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE filming of the modest Longfellow epic "Hiawatha" is a distinct and valuable addition to the none too large supply of moving picture classics. The work has been done with a most conscientious thoroughness, the man at the head of the enterprise had mastered his subject in every aspect and in every detail and he had the assistance of men who were imbued with his spirit of enthusiasm and who with him braved and endured innumerable hardships and conquered seemingly insurmountable obstacles. In these reels no white man appears, except "the black robe," the Catholic priest, to whom the poet has paid such sincere tribute. There are no indoor scenes, except the short scenes in the wigwams and they have no studio-made settings but are as natural as the splendid outdoor settings. The choice of the proper scenery amid which to work out the weird, pathetic story was the first task of the producer. He performed it with the closest possible approach to perfection. The charms of the summer and the rigors of the winter are eloquently visualized before us. All the beauties of the North American landscape are there.

Having chosen the right ground the next thing was to determine the question of selecting the actors. Here again the producer rose to the logical demand of the situation, he gave us none but Indian actors. What a pleasure it was to see the red men and women act in a play so characteristic of them and so dear and sacred to their hearts. We have had such a fearful surfeit of blood-thirsty Indians, scalping Indians, howling Indians, gambling Indians and murdering and burning Indians in the cheap films, that it was like a breath of fresh air to see real human Indians enacting before us an old Indian legend. Hiawatha and Minnehaha were perfect specimens of their race and their acting reflects credit both on their ability and on their teachers. There was a suggestion of the heroic about the tall stalwart youth who played the part of Hiawatha. While in the ordinary Indian film the red men shout and gesticulate like a lot of excited French, the Indians of these reels show all that stoic and impressive calm which the white man has never been quite able to understand. Nothing could have been rendered more naturally, more delicately and more sweetly than the wooing of Hiawatha.

The producers had conquered both the spirit and the letter of the legend, and the spirit in the poem is the spirit of the Indian race. "Hiawatha" retains its popularity because no poet has shown a better insight into the spiritual nature and life of the Indian than Longfellow. It is due to the producers to say that they have succeeded in making this spirit show itself on the screens. There is a spell in these films, a note of sadness, a touch of tragedy, which are the most distinct characteristics of the Indian race. Not a little was added to the attraction by the capable lecturer, who, though working under difficulties, knew how to cope with his task. His voice was musical and well modulated; his enunciation clear and his understanding of the subject complete. The pictures will be popular and much sought after, not only by intelligent and wide-awake exhibitors, but by schools and Chautauquas as well.

"Hiawatha" is a finely rounded and strikingly beautiful work, notable for its marvelous attention to details. It is as far as I know the only true motion picture of Indian life. The picture is set in a frame of surpassing magnificence. As a spectacle it is unique. The epic character of the poem is with admirable judgment thoroughly preserved in the film representation. It is now generally conceded that no form of literature lends itself more readily to filming than the epic, provided the filming is done by competent hands. Much more might be said in praise of certain features of this production, but space forbids.

"DU BARRY" (Eclectic Film Company).

A Beautiful Hand Colored Picture Taken Partly in the Palace of Versailles.

MADAME DU BARRY was one of the most famous of those ladies of the court who, while their popularity lasted, were practically rulers of France because they ruled the King. Beautiful and accomplished, they were often the real centers of court life and were always the center of plotting and intrigue. For there were many who envied them their power, some who feared them and some who sought to win their good graces in order to advance in fortune. Some understanding of the conditions around Madame Du Barry help in understanding the meaning of this tragic picture of her. It has been taken from one of the many anecdotes, handed down from the reign of Louis the Fifteenth.

It is a beautifully hand colored picture and its opening scene was actually made in one of the magnificent halls of the palace of Versailles, once the summer home of French kings. As it is flashed on the screen we find a large company of men and women dancing. They are dressed in the fashion of over a hundred years ago when bright silks and satins were worn by the stern as well as the fair sex. Red, green, pink, yellow, purple and blue are woven into the dances and as the figures wind in and out, we catch the flash of rich brocade. Among these dancers, Madame Du Barry soon detaches herself and it is made plain to us that she is greatly interested in one of the courtiers who is known as the Marquis. She hands him a note and by it we learn that his wife is suspicious and is watching them. The danger of the intrigue lies in the fact that the king, who, very soon, is also introduced to us, will be jealous if he finds that a mere subject has supplanted him in the affections of Madame Du Barry. Thus we have for a situation a love affair over a mine of dynamite, as it were.

To make matters more interesting, we soon perceive that the lovers have arranged to meet after the ball. The Marquis escorts his wife back to their own home and when she has retired leaves the house again in a cloak and hat different from those he usually wears. His own togs are left on a chair in his library where he let them fall. At Versailles he is admitted into the appartment of Madame Du Barry. In the meanwhile, a thief has broken into his home and come upon the cloak and hat which, with the natural vanity of this kind, he puts on. The marchioness, awakened by a noise comes out with lights. The marauder is cornered and, although the action is broken so that we do not see the deed, he leaves the woman dead on the floor and escapes. But as he hurries through the moonlit park, he lets fall the cloak of the Marquis, who returning finds the police in his house and is himself accused of the crime. He is innocent, but how can he prove it? The king looks upon Madame Du Barry as his wife. To make things worse, the Marquis remembers a note which is signed by her and itself would accuse them. Lest it be found, he tries to burn it. What is left when it is snatched from the flame contains the words "marchioness" and "death." The result is that he is comdemned to die. Madame Du Barry doesn't hear of it till the last morning and then she rushes to the king and confesses all. This is a big, well acted scene; but a bigger one is to follow. The king when he gets it through his head what the trouble is, gives the woman an order staying the execution. In a most effectively pictured final scene, we see the preparations for the decapitation and the arrival of the doomed Marquis at the scaffold. He kneels down and the headsman lifts the axe just as Du Barry reaches the place. Scrambling upon the scaffold with the paper she finds that she has come only one second too late—her lover is dead.

Besides the palace of Versailles, some lovely park views and some rich interiors are included among the backgrounds. These with their elegant furniture plainly show liberality, there is nothing cheap in the offering from first to last. The players are, in part, from the famous theaters of Paris and the leading woman who takes the role of Du Barry is an actress of great merit. We might add that among the lesser figures there are several very beautiful women. The picture would be notable for its elegance and grace, even without the story which is dramatic and sensational to a marked degree.

The history students in Miss Kate White's class in the Paducah (Ky.) high school have purchased a moving picture machine. A son of the school superintendent is operating it.

Argument in Case of Rowland Against General Film Co.

BEFORE Justice Lehman in the Special Term of the Supreme Court, Part I., argument was heard on the motion to issue a permanent injunction on behalf of Richard A. Rowland and other holders of preferred stock of the General Film Company against the directors of the General Film Company, restraining the latter from distributing an undivided surplus of $211,116.03 now in the treasury of the defendants.

Counsel appearing in support of the motion contended that a distribution of these undivided profits would imperil the dividends and holdings of the owners of the preferred stock. They claimed that in view of the possible dissolution of the General Film Company in the Federal Courts it was doubtful whether in case of a forced liquidation the holders of preferred stock would ever get their money. It was also claimed that the business of the General Film Company was scarcely strong enough to warrant such a distribution and at the same time secure the rights of the owners of the preferred stock.

Counsel for the General Film Company claimed that there was no danger of the holders of the preferred stock suffering any loss. According to the statements of counsel the business of the General Film Company was constantly on the increase, that it had doubled since the formation of the company and that there was ample security to redeem its obligations in every respect.

Justice Lehman in the course of the argument asked whether the movers of the motion claimed fraud. To this counsel for the plaintiff replied in the negative.

Decision was reserved after briefs had been submitted by both sides.

EDWIN AUGUST A "LIFE PORTRAYER."

Edwin August, the Powers star, has hooked up with the Vitagraph Company of America, and will be in the company of Director Rollin S. Sturgeon, situated at Santa Monica, Cal. It is said that Mr. Sturgeon's company will not pay as much attention to straight Western stuff in the future as it has in the past. Mr. August is to appear in all of the Western releases; and he will strengthen and fortify an already strong aggregation.

POWER'S NO. 6A FOR HIAWATHA PICTURES.

The wonderful "Hiawatha" pictures produced at the Berkeley Theater, New York City, on Tuesday evening, February 25th, were projected by a Power's No. 6A Cameragraph.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THERE is no doubt that the introduction of feature films has wrought great good in the film industry. They have lifted moving picture entertainment to a higher plane and have won hundreds of thousands of patrons of the more intelligent class. The production of such films requires much preparation and large expenditures, and there is always the tendency to take greater pains with them than with the regular output on which the business really depends.

There is no doubt in my mind, after careful observation for some time past, that the regular release is suffering in quality because of the big features; and it also suffers in quality because of the increased weekly output. But these remarks do not apply equally to all manufacturers. There are manufacturers whose regular releases are nearly always up to the standard, and there are others who have shown little or no progress during the year that closed about two months ago. These latter are still plodding along with simple scenarios of the elemental kind, cheap and unsatisfying, and are a positive drag on the business. If there were an open market today, it would mean a greatly reduced demand for the product of these manufacturers, who are now enabled to pull through solely by existing conditions.

The future calls for more ambitious effort and a striving for still higher standards. Above all, the regular release should be uniform in quality, and that quality should clearly show improvement as the months pass. On the regular release depends the life of the industry. It must measure up to the demand of a public that is steadily growing more enlightened on moving pictures. Otherwise moving picture entertainment will retrogress.

The Rumpus in Denver Film Circles.

There has been quite an upheaval in Denver recently, in film distribution, according to the Denver Post. A special writer of this journal, who subscribes himself F. W. W., has the following paragraph about the situation:

"Curtis street is happy that the picture shows have all gone back to 5 cents. You would be surprised the difference the merchants on the block found in their receipts during the forty days and nights that dime prices prevailed. The houses themselves suffered large losses, they running behind steadily from fifty to one hundred dollars a day. It is held now that the 10-cent proposition might have been successful had the General Film Company lived up to its promises to give the houses that went to 10 cents more and better pictures. This, it is said, was not done. The Independents, on the other hand, took quick advantage of the opportunity to gather in the best pictures they could make, beg, borrow, buy or steal, and give them eagerly to their customers of the nickel shows. Thus the public soon discovered they were getting more for a nickel than was offered for a dime, and so remained away from the 10-cent places. Then the conditions in Denver were not ripe for an increase in prices. The General Film Company had, as representatives here, strangers who were not familiar with the real condition of affairs. If the film company had, however, accumulated a lot of exceptionally fine pictures, and when they demanded the raise had given them out in abundance, they might have won out. But they did not do that. In fact, candor compels the assertion that, with the exception of half a dozen unusual and startlingly fine efforts, the Independents had them—to use the picturesque vernacular of Curtis street itself—'skinned a mile,' whatever that may mean."

From all that I can gather, the local manager of the General Film Company's Denver branch attempted to force certain exhibitors who used his product to charge an admission of 10 cents. This was clearly a violation of the rights of these exhibitors. The exchange manager's duties lie in furnishing bookings to his customers. The latter pay the price and must manage their houses as they deem best for their own profit.

It seems absolutely silly that the manager of an exchange, who has been placed in his position to look out for the best interests of his employers, should antagonize his customers in such a manner. The exchange is not the master of the exhibitor; for it depends upon the exhibitor, and its best interests are served by its watchful care of his interests. The exchange manager and the exhibitor should be coworkers, each in his own department. And the exchange manager should remember that the merchant must cater to his customers, instead of trying to force them to his way of thinking.

The Iris, managed by DeWitt C. Webber, refused to obey the autocratic exchange manager and turned Independent.

Sam Bullock Explains 13-reel Program.

Sam Bullock, of the Lake Shore Film Supply Co., Cleveland, writes to explain the matter of the booking of 13 reels to a certain customer, about which reference was made in my letter of Feb. 22. "The showman in question, Abe Potiker, was selling his house and 'fattened the pig for killing' by getting a program from each exchange and also a feature outside. That acounts for his 13 reels," writes Mr. Bullock. "Mr. Mandelbaum, of the Lake Shore, and Mr. Thompson, of the Victor, both called him down; the League took a hand, and, in the meantime, Mr. Potiker sold out. That ended the matter."

Regarding Ohio Censor Board Bill.

With regard to my report of the Ohio State convention at Columbus, Jan. 21, particularly referring to the paragraph on the State board of censors, that report states: "After the bill was thoroughly discussed, it was accepted as read." The discussion took place in executive session and J. A. Maddox furnished me the information in the above language. Nothing was said about exhibitors being unanimously in favor of the measure, nor was I informed about the opposition to the measure.

Cleveland Censor Board Reject Only Nine Feet Out of 121,000 Feet.

The Cleveland Press of Feb. 19 states that the city censors rejected only nine feet of film out of 121,000 feet of film.

One hundred thousand feet of new films are being received by the three film exchanges weekly. The proportion of educational and current pictorial events films is constantly growing.

"The exhibitors are well pleased with the official test," Samuel Bullock says. "Picture men feel they are vindicated by the reports. The exchanges will be glad to welcome any one interested in child welfare, educational or sociological work to visit their censor departments between 12 and 2 every day."

Chicago Film Brevities.

F. J. Rembusch, president of the Mirror Screen Co., Shelbyville, Ind., was a visitor at the World office Thursday and Friday last week. Attention is directed to the advertisement, elsewhere in this issue, of the Exhibitor's Film Insurance Co. This company provides excellent insurance for exhibitors at extremely low rates and should be widely patronized. Mr. Rembusch is president of the insurance company, which has headquarters in the Saks Bldg., Indianapolis.

H. A. Rubens, manager and part owner of the Crystal Stairs Theater, Joliet, Ill., was a visitor on Monday, Feb. 24. His brother, C. B. Rubens, is his partner. Manager Rubens stated that business was very fair, considering the weather conditions. He expressed himself as very much pleased with his service, which is furnished by the G. F. Co.'s branch, at 117 N. Dearborn St. He informed me that the "Mary" series (Edison), is making a great hit at his house. "The Cowboy Millionare" (Selig), was a tremendous magnet, and "The Vengeance of Durand" (Vitagraph), was another big card. The latter will be repeated three weeks after its first presentation. Mr. Rubens finds that his people do not like split reels, which consist of a scenic and an educational subject. They do like, however, a comedy and an educational or scenic on the same reel. The Crystal Stairs has 600 seats, and a program of straight moving pictures is given—no songs. Admission, 5 cents.

F. W. Parsons has purchased the exclusive rights of the Exclusive Special Feature Co., with offices at 535 Marquette Bldg. Mr. Parsons was formerly connected with the firm of Parsons & Bradly in Milwaukee, but about three months ago he came to Chicago, where he finds he can do much better than in any other city. Mr. Parsons has had seven years experience in the business, and has employed Douglas Dickerson and Edward Haag as road men. Miss Benjamin is office manager. Mr. Parsons has secured exclusive rights from some of the best known film makers, one a week, such as Eclair 3-reel subjects, etc.

The Picture in the Pulpit.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

IN answer to many requests we give below a classified catalogue of the educational pictures and photoplays suitable for educational and religious work that were released during December, 1912. The classification is simple and corresponds in the main to the Dewey decimal classification now used in the great majority of the libraries in this country and therefore already familiar to literary and educational workers. It is also the classification adopted by the educational department of the General Film Company for its catalogue. The numbers and titles of the main sections of the classification are as follows:

0. General Information.
1. Philosophy and Psychology.
2. Religion.
3. Sociology.
4. Philology: Languages.
5. Science.
6. Applied Science.
7. Fine Arts.
8. Literature.
9. History.
91. Geography.
92. Biography.

We would suggest that users of the pictures and the catalogue get some large envelopes and number and letter one for each of the above sections. Then cut out the catalogue and place each section of the catalogue in its proper envelope. As successive supplements appear do the same with them. We would also give the same suggestion to exhibitors and exchanges.

Explanations and Abbreviations.

In each entry the following order has been observed: Title, maker, date of release, reference to articles in the Moving Picture World, remarks. As all the entries are in December, the month has not been given. Thus the first entry, "Annie Crawls Upstairs, Edison 10," means that "Annie Crawls Upstairs" is the title of Edison's release for December 10, 1912. The numbers (14:1000; 1185), which follow should read: Synopsis will be found in the World, volume 14, page 1000, the comment on the film in the same volume on page 1185. Where the picture is of more than one reel in length, the fact is indicated by the abbreviation "2r.," "3r.," etc.

n.s.p. means no synopsis published.
n.c.p. means no comment published.
sp. rev. means special review.
Mfg. means Manufacturer's advance note.

CATALOGUE OF DECEMBER RELEASES.

2. RELIGION.

Hebrews 13:2.

Annie Crawls Upstairs. Edison 10. (14:1000 1185). Annie visits different persons at certain spiritual crises in their lives with beneficent results. Good also for a sermon on St. Matthew 25:40, ministering to Christ, and for a sermon on the direction of ordinary human events by the Holy Spirit.

A Christmas Miracle. C. G. P. C. 24. (14:1224; 15:51; Mfg. 14:1199). The poor widow gives the aged wayfarer her last crust of bread and rescues the baby she thinks has been deserted on the church porch. The wayfarer reveals himself as Christ and the baby as the widow's reward for her good deeds. A Christmas story and good also for sermons on the example and imitation of Christ.

Life of Christ.

From the Manger to the Cross. Kalem, 5 reel, special release by the General Film Company on states' rights basis. (Special articles 14:121; 233). Very reverent and accurate and invaluable to all Bible teachers and workers.

The Star of Bethlehem. Thanhouser 24. (Reviews 14:1170 & 1305). Somewhat spectacular in places and follows the Jewish or Rabbinic rather than the Christian interpretation of the events leading up to the birth of Christ.

Avarice.

The Virtue of Rags. Essanay 17. (14:1108; 1292; Mfg. 1199). Excellent for sermons on I Timothy 6:10 or I John 3:17; also for sermons on liberality and generosity, the first commandment, duties of the rich and poor and on the dangers of wealth.

The God of Gold. Selig 12. (14:1006; 1291). A portrayal of the power and the lure of money. Good for sermons on the same topics as the preceding.

Prudence.

A Dollar Saved is a Dollar Earned. Edison 3. (14:900; 1082). The virtue of thrift exemplified by a wife who saved each week a small sum out of her husband's salary, and when the rainy day came there was the nest egg that brought comfort and happiness.

Means of Spiritual Growth.

The Awakening of John Bridd. Gem 10. (14:1116; 1186). Exemplifies the influence of environment and social relations on human character and disposition.

See also Christmas Stories under 3.

3. SOCIOLOGY.

Capital and Labor.

The Crime of Carelessness. Edison 30. (14:1328). Made in cooperation with the National Association of Manufacturers. Deals with the results of carelessness about fire risks in factories.

Civil Administration.

The Error of Omission. Essanay 13. (14:1004; 1291). Illustrates the value of the registration of vital statistics, in particular the importance of registering births.

Military and Naval Administration: War.

A Day at West Point. Imp 14. (no synopsis or comment published)

Danish Hussars. Great Northern 21. (n. s. p.; 14:1294). Good picture of cavalry passing in review and fast riding over rough country.

French Naval Manoeuvres. C. G. P. C. 27. (14:1224; n. c. p.). Contains some of the best sea pictures taken during rough weather that have ever been made; excellent in every respect.

The Balkan War.

Balkan War Territory. Eclipse 11. (n. s. p.; 14:1291). Views of Bosnia and the water front of Constantinople.

Battlefield of the Balkans. Gaumont 14. (n. s. or c. p.).

Balkan War Scenes. Cines 28. (14:1326; n. c. p.). Said to be "fresh from the fighting front" and to "show genuine engagements between the armies of the Balkan allies and the Turkish forces."

United States Navy.

The Latest Addition to the U. S. Navy. —the Superdreadnought "New York." Edison 4. (14:900; 1183). Views of the launching of the latest U. S. Battleship; among them an excellent aerial view taken from the crane as the vessel glides into the water.

Charitable Institutions.

The Other Half. Thanhouser 17. (14:1120; 1292). Made in cooperation with the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, and illustrates the greater value of organized over unorganized charity.

Saving the Innocents. American 21. (14:1122; 1292). Illustrates the care and education of defective and deformed children in institutions.

An Old Appointment. Edison 18. (14:1112; 15:50). Views of different famous old men's homes in London, England.

Manners and Customs.

Strange Places and Quaint People in New York. Kalem 13. (14:1002; 1292). Views of the Syrian, French, Italian, Jewish and Chinatown sections of the city.

Rush Hours in New York. Kalem 20. (14:1114; 15:50). Views of the ferries, the subways, the Broadway matinee crowds and the curb market.

Legends, Sagas, etc.

Siegfried. Ambrosio 15. (3 reels; special review 14:545). A very good photo-dramatization of the great saga.

Parsifal. Ambrosio 21. (3 r.; Mfg. 14:1307). Excellent in every way and especially noteworthy for its extremely reverent treatment of the Blessed Sacrament, the crucifixion, and the legend of Joseph of Arimathea and the Sang Grail. Excellent for boys clubs and young men's meetings. See note in the "World" 15:767.

Christmas Stories.

A Christmas Accident. Edison 14. (14:1002; 1291; sp. rev. 638).

Madeleine's Christmas. Lubin 17. (14:1106; 15:50). Somewhat too sentimental for some persons, but the idea is good.

A Woodland Christmas in California. Melies 19. (14:1006; 15:50). Unreal, but pretty and has the holiday spirit.

A Christmas Miracle. C. G. P. C. 24. For references and notes see above under Hebrews 13:2.

A Counterfeit Santa Claus. Selig 25. (14:1218; n. c. p.).

The Night Before Christmas. Vitagraph 17. (14:1108; 1292). Pathetic; the story of a convict who breaks prison to bring Christmas to his motherless little one.

Ida's Christmas. Vitagraph 24. (14:1220; 15:51). A good and very pretty story of a child's conquest of temptation and its reward.

The Mission of the Carols. Gaumont 10. (14:1016; n. c. p.).

The Old Folk's Christmas. Imp 23. (14:1340; 15:51). A pretty story of how a childless old couple plays Santa Claus to some poor children.

5. SCIENCE.

Storms.

A Storm on the French Coast. Gaumont 7. (n. s. or c. p.)

Zoology.

A Trip Through the Cincinnati Zoo. Imp 7. (n. s. or c. p.)

Sea Anemones. Eclair 22. (14:702; 1294). Very good and popular in treatment.

The Octopus. C. G. P. C. 6. (14: 1006; n. c. p.).

Insect Hunting. Eclair 29. (14:1338; 15:52).

The Fly. Eclair 8. (14:381; 1082). Microscopic views of the fly from the time the eggs are hatched.

The White Heron. Champion 30. (n. s. p.; 15:160). Views of a pair of white herons caring for their fledglings.

The Chaffinch and her Family. C. G. P. C. 27. (14:1224; n. c. p.). Very good.

6. APPLIED SCIENCE.

PICTURE PERSONALITIES.

Frank W. Buhler.

Frank W. Buhler, the enterprising manager of the Bijou Dream Theater, located at 1205 Market Street, and a "prince of a man" among the moving picture exhibitors of Philadelphia, recently became a benedict, when he married Miss Josephine M. Bryant, one of the most popular young ladies of the West Philadelphia social set. The wedding was a very quiet affair, only the very near friends of the young couple being present. Immediately after the ceremony the happy pair left on an extended wedding tour.

Mr. Buhler has spent the greater part of his life in the motion picture game, and from general opinion there is not a better versed man on current topics of the trade than he. The theater of which he is manager is a model in every sense of the word, and nothing that will add to the comfort of its patrons has been left untouched, or not provided for.

Lately Mr. Buhler has been advocating a new idea, in the line of "special music for pictures." The idea is to have a separate and complete score of music especially written for each and every large feature picture, so as to illustrate it to the slightest detail. According to Mr. Buhler, such pictures with special music would be a big drawing card to the public, and it would create a much larger interest in the picture-loving world.

S. S. HUTCHINSON TO MAKE SERIES OF SCENICS.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, is now sojourning up and down the California coast in search of scenics of an unusual and interesting kind. This is a work after Mr. Hutchinson's own heart, as he is not only an enthusiastic "picture fiend" in the broader sense of the word, but is also extremely fond of making them. His aptitude in such matters is well evidenced by a master scenic of a year ago, in which he succeeded for the first time in photographing the submarine gardens of the Pacific Ocean. On the present trip Mr. Hutchinson proposed to make a new scenic of San Francisco from an angle never before covered. He will also make a series of unique industrials in Upper California. He has with him R. D. Armstrong, one of the American's best camera men and a former scenario editor, which assures not only the best of photography, but the natural abilities of a scenario editor in the selection of subjects.

J. H. GENTER PROMISES REVELATION.

The J. H. Genter Company, of Mirroroide curtain fame, is opening additional factory floor space in order to keep pace with its orders. Mr. Genter expects shortly to place a new product on the market that he claims will be a revelation to moving picture men. Like other inventors, his enthusiasm is keeping him working practically night and day on the new proposition. We are naturally somewhat proud of their big business as they state that it is almost exclusively the result of our circulation.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

MR. M. E. SCHWARZWALD, Bijou Dream, Chicago, sends the following: "As I promised you I am sending my program to the picture 'Satan.' Am sorry to say that owing to the length of this we were obliged to omit the second reel ('Satan in the Life of Christ'), but am told it requires practically all sacred music. I wish to state that there are parts of this picture I have not followed in detail—for example, the beginning of Part Three. I have made it a point rather, to get the longest selections I could which would keep to the general theme of the picture. I believe that I can make my music just as effective in this way as by always following the picture scene by scene, and therefore try to make as few changes as possible in order to keep from diverting attention from the picture. I think if one changes the music too often he is not playing enough of any one number to convey the theme of it to the audience, and by this appropriates a large part of their attention which should be given to the picture.

"From remarks overheard I gather that the orchestra most appreciated is the one that can bring out and accent the characteristic points of the picture without diverting the attention of the audience, rather than the one that constantly attracts attention by its noisy blare, quick changes of music and stopping too suddenly at times instead of trying to 'weave' their numbers gradually. Another thing I do not believe in, is that incessant grind heard in some theaters. I visited a house recently which has a three piece orchestra and runs five vaudeville acts and two reels of pictures. The musicians instead of following the picture with appropriate music played a program of popular stuff. I noticed that the leader (pianist) never stopped from the time the picture started until it stopped—turning the music with one hand and playing with the other. Being acquainted with the manager I mentioned this. 'Why,' said he, 'those are my orders; if my orchestra stops for one minute I am down there to see what is wrong. I want that music going all the time.'

"Very good, Mr. Manager, but one of a party sitting behind me from whose conversation I judged to be a regular patron, said: 'Good Lord! Won't they ever quit. This is worse than having to listen to one of those piano machines.'

"Our manager gives us ten minutes' rest at the opening of each show and we find that with this small lay-off we can do more justice to our music than these 'on forever' orchestras, and no complaints from our patrons. What do you think about this?"

I shall offer no comments beyond stating that the Bijou Dream, like all downtown houses in this city (and most other large places), runs a continuous show from nine o'clock a. m. until eleven p. m. Regarding the long selections played, Mr. S. "humors" them more or less to fit the scenes, and in this way he often plays to details without changing numbers.—[Ed.]

"Satan, or the Drama of Humanity" (Ambrosio).

Part One.

1. "Damnation of Faust" (can use storm scene from "William Tell") until title: "The First Sin."
2. "Devils Call Galop" once, then:
3. "Ghost Dance" (pub. by Will Rossiter) until Nimrod and party approach the throne.
4. Overture, "Devil's Portion" (pub. by Ditson) until end of reel.

Part Two.

(Sacred music throughout.)

Part Three.

1. Overture, "King Mydas" (Jacobs) once through.
2. "Faust" Overture (Cundy-Bettany Co.—Carl Fischer's Selection fits better, but is more difficult for small combinations) until monk falls asleep at table.
3. Mysterious music; until monk and Satan leave monastery.
4. Sumurun Intermezzo (pub. by Stern) until monk is shown behind curtain.
5. Mysterious (37 Orpheum Collection) until Satan puts dagger in his hand.
6. Agitato (43 Orpheum Collection) until man is stabbed.
7. Semi-mysterious (51 Orph. Coll.) until fight.
8. Hurry (19 Orph. Coll.) until change.
9. Mysterious-heavy (20 Orph. Coll.) until end of reel.

Part Four.

1. Bright lively novelette until iron merchant falls asleep.
2. Mysterious until devil appears in full dress.
3. Waltz, "Druids Prayer" (Stern), until title: "Later Engrossed With Mary's Love, etc."
4. "Perfume" (from suite "My Lady's Boudoir," Witmark), until end of scene.
5. Waltz, "The Devil" (pub. by Emil Ascher), until end. (Last part of Part Four.)
6. Waltz, "The Devil," until Frank shoots at carriage.
7. Agitato (soft) until police auto enters and shots fired.
8. Hurry until chase.
9. Presto until Frank and Satan arrive at ruined castle.
10. Agitato (soft) until title: "You Can Get Revenge, etc."
11. Plaintive until Mary arrives at the castle.
12. Agitato (33 Bendix-Fischer melodramatic music), p. and f. until title: "Mary Has Lied to You! Destroy."
13. Prison Scene from "Faust" (Leo Feist-Reckers arrangement) until close.

Thomas Bruce, of the Majestic Theater, North Yakima Wash, whose letterhead reads, "Musical Interpreter of Pictures, Pipe Organ and Piano," writes: "In the February 1st issue of Moving Picture World, under heading, 'Thoughts for Pianists,' in your department, Mr. Aiken says: 'Picture playing does not consist as some suppose of merely fitting song titles to the scenes.' I fully agree with him, for to play a modern song to some pictures would be out of place and inartistic; on the other hand, it would be worse to play Grieg's 'Ich Liebe Dich' to some light modern drama when 'I'd Love to Live in Loveland' would be more suitable.

"Then, of course, there are pictures when no songs can be used. One I have in mind is 'At Napoleon's Command' (Cines), which I improvised through entirely with the exception of 'Marseilles.' To have played 'Just Before the Battle, Mother' at the title, 'The Eve Before the Battle,' would have been comedy. The summary of all this is that the picture player must have ingenuity and artistic judgment and an unlimited repertoire. I am sending a program to illustrate my point, and criticism from the editor or any one who has seen the picture, 'When Love Leads,' will be greatly appreciated, as I wish to know what other musicians think about the very important subject of popular music for modern pictures."

"When Love Leads" (Lubin.

1. "Stein Song" from "Prince of Pilsen" (Witmark, pub.), or, better still, Alma Mater song from nearest college, until title: "David Meets Josephine."
2. "Beautiful Lady" valse (Remick, pub.) until title: "One Month Later."
3. "Cuddle Up a Little Closer" (from "Three Twins").
4. Agitato while Josephine reads letter and through scene between David and father.
5. Pathetic for scene between David and mother.
6. "Goodbye Sweetheart, Goodbye" until title: "David in City."
7. "Give My Regards to Broadway" (from "Little Johnny Jones") until title: "Married."
8. "Honeymoon" (from "Time, Place and Girl"—pub. by Harris).
9. Agitato for scene between father and mother.
10. "Gee, But This is a Lonesome Town."
11. Agitato and pathetic through five scenes until title: "David Loses Reason."
12. Tosti's "Goodbye" until title: "Scrubwoman Finds Child."
13. "If I Only Had a Home, Sweet Home" until title: "David Regains Reason."
14. Pathetic until David enters home, then:
15. Grandioso waltz until end.

The first number should be played more as an introduction to the picture to give a college atmosphere, and if "Prince of Pilsen Stein Song" is used should be timed so that "Oh! Heidelberg, Dear Heidelberg" comes for first scene.

I do not remember accurately the details of the picture above mentioned, but Brother Bruce has furnished us an excellent illustration of the method of applying songs, whose suggestiveness lies largely in the fitness of their titles, to certain pictures. Discriminating performers would not need the reminder that modern songs should be used only in modern pictures, but I am sorry to say there are many who are not so thoughtful as our correspondent. Come again, Mister Bruce—you are always welcome.—Ed.

"Cold Light"

Complete Revolution of Picture Projection Forecast by the Discovery of Prof. Dussaud.

By J. B. Sutcliffe, our British Representative.

EVER since the early dawn of the moving picture era the one romantic ideal that has constituted the golden vision of the early pioneers of projection has been the discovery of the perfect illuminant.

When, practically half a century ago, three experimenting scientists threw pictures on a screen in a dingy back room of a London inn, the delight of the aristocratic audience knew no bounds, and every one declared the light in the lantern to be truly "magical." But from that proud moment to the present the experimenting cinematographer has only been too uncomfortably self-conscious of the inefficiency of the light. I speak comparatively, for although present day electric arc illuminants are a vast improvement on those of only a year or two back, it is in this particular department, I think it is generally admitted, that the greater progress of the industry has been retarded. "But is the amazing discovery of a 'cold light' by the young Frenchman, M. Dussaud, to revolutionize the science of moving picture projection" is the question that scientific operators throughout Europe are asking. Personally, as one who has intimately studied projection illuminants, I should prophesy a most rosy future for M. Dussaud's discovery.

The other day, M. Dussaud demonstrated his "cold light" to a distinguished audience of scientists and after illustrating the thousand and one commercial applications, its adaptation to the diverse exigencies of projection were considered. A colored lantern slide three yards square which ordinarily would require a forty volts or 2,000 watts lamp to project an intelligible image, was shown in brilliant luminosity with only 20 watts of the new light. Again a parasite was magnified nine million times on the screen, thus proving to undisputed advantage that the "cold light" does not spoil the most delicate preparation. When this becomes adapted to the lantern of the modern projector the thousandfold advantages to films is too obvious to even merit recapitulation.

This and the elimination of danger are not the only valuable attributes claimed, for the light is intrinsically composed of ultra-violet rays which any scientific tyro will recognize as the most powerful in the spectrum. The most convincing illustration of this is that a small eight volt incandescent lamp burning "cold light" is too dazzling to look at with the naked eye and as brilliant as a powerful arc. Yet, at the demonstration, this globe was held by the operator in his hand. Again, taking the concrete instance, such a lamp requires less current by a hundred times than with ordinary electricity, and in the absence of a sector the current can be produced from a small battery or ample power produced from a small treadle worked by the operator's foot. Next were shown three tiny lamps the size of large cherries, but too bright to be looked at. These were arranged so that one was always focused, and after doing its turn "rested" while the other lamp came on in turn. This contrivance gives nearly a hundred times the illumination obtained from ordinary light with quite a small battery. Another Cinema apparatus, put on the market here by a well-known firm for covering the screen less than a yard square, was shown fitted with a single Dussaud "resting" lamp brilliantly covering quite twice that area.

Respecting the invention itself the fundamental principle is "rest." M. Dussaud in his researches found the new principle, viz.:—that matter has need of rest or moleculor equilibrium. For example, two springs working alternately wear out more slowly than if each is worked continuously. 'Cold light" is the application of this principle to incandescent electric lamps. Light is concentrated in a single point by all the filaments working successively, and projected through a lens multiplying a thousandfold. By this process the young inventor has succeeded in concentrating 2,000 candle-power in a single point and passing 32 volts into an 8 volt lamp, which otherwise would burst as I have described above.

To conclude this demonstration, Professor Dussaud held in his hand a small incandescent bulb the size of a walnut and which was too glaringly brilliant to look at except through colored glass. Under ordinary circumstances the bulb would rapidly have become much too hot to hold in the naked hand and also would have eventually burst, but it remained quite cold, revealing the inventor's hands as a rose-red transparency.

Whatever its effect on the Cinema and optical world, one thing is certain and that is that "cold light" (as it is yet called) will completely revolutionize existing military and naval searchlight systems.

THE ROYAL THEATER, NEW CASTLE, IND.

The Royal theater, New Castle, Ind., is owned by Peter Kaler, who has spared no expense to make the house deserve the appellation of "theater beautiful." The house has a very handsome front, especially designed by the Decorators' Supply Company of Chicago. This front is a creation of figures and decorations harmoniously designed and beautifully executed. The foyer is done in white, except where the figures are colored, to continue the color scheme of the interior. White marble wainscotting surrounds the ticket booth and the sides. Above the wainscoting, on both sides, are large plate-glass mirrors, which enhance the beauty of the entrance. The entrance floor is of white tile with a colored terra cotta border, and the name of the theater appears in colors on the floor. Over 100 incandescent lights are used in illuminating the front. The interior decorations, also put in by the Decorators' Supply Company of Chicago, are described as magnificent. Richness personified is exemplified in the decorations of the walls and ceiling. On both side walls, at regular intervals, are large panels of figures, tastefully decorated in colors. Between the panels, in relief, are plaster casts of musical instruments and musical scores. The indirect lighting system is used, doing away with the objections to a dark theater.

The Royal Theater.

The Royal seats 400 people, and uses pictures only. Manager Kaler reports excellent business. A mirror screen is used, and the picture machine booth is built entirely of concrete and is thoroughly fireproof. It contains two picture machines, thus doing away with tedious delays between reels.

O. F. DOUD RETURNS TO CHICAGO.

Omer F. Doud, who has been spending some months at the Western studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company at Santa Barbara, is again back at his old desk in Chicago where he will again assume the publicity duties of the American.

The Selig Polyscope Company has completed a particularly strong and timely picture, entitled "A Change of Administration," which will be released during the week of March 4. The story was especially written and produced for the occasion. Gilson Willets is the author of the scenario. Mr. Willets is a well known magazine writer on government affairs, and for many years was Washington correspondent for important magazines and newspapers. The story is a strong tense drama of political life and diplomatic intrigue and points out some of the dangers that attend a change of administration in the National Capitol.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Montgomery, of Course.

IT might have been expected that the first American advertising of the Kalem "From The Manger to the Cross" should come in from Frank Montgomery, of Jacksonville and the south generally. He had this remarkable subject at his Grand theater, Jacksonville, and even by opening at 10 o'clock he could not accommodate the crowds. This information does not come from Mr. Montgomery, but from Arthur D. Hotaling, of the Lubin comedy section, who has been in town a few days.

The advertising for the feature occupied a full page in the Sunday papers, and this carried a page reading notice with seven cuts. There is none of the sensationalism that sometimes marks the Montgomery advertising. The upper half of the page is taken up by the announcement that the admission must be raised to twenty-five cents for this attraction. For the benefit of those who may not have the advice of expert musicians, we append the musical program published in the advertisement, and which appears to have been arranged by Mrs. J. Warren Berry, the musical director. With a really fine organ and full orchestra we imagine that the musical effects much enhanced the value of the subject. This is the program:

|---|---|
| Adagio (from Hymm of Praise) | Gounod |
| Ave Maria | Cherubini |
| Cujus Animam (from Stabat Mater) | Rossini |
| Inflammatus (from Stabat Mater) | Rossini |
| Ariosa | Handel |
| Ave Verum Corpus | Mozart |
| Gloria (from Bb Mass) | Gounod |
| Sanctus, St. Cecilia Mass | LaHache |
| Crucifix | Faure |

More About Student Nights.

We spoke some time ago about Student Nights at the "Q" Theater, Los Angeles and expressed the opinion that it was a matter that should be handled with care. James C. Quinn agrees with us, but that he handles with care is evident from the results. He says:

> You hit it right when you called it a "Handle with care" idea. It sure is that. But the answer is—a noticeable increase in business the first night, twice the increase the second night, two weeks ago we had a line-up (the first one for a year on a week night) and last Tuesday we turned them away. And we are getting a line on some clever students, too. Of course that is necessary—to get one or two good ones each night to make up for the ordinary talent. We got hold of one youngster, about eight years old, for last Tuesday, and in announcing him made a few introductory remarks to the effect that we were presenting a novelty, the oldest student in Los Angeles, an old gentleman of sixty, who had taken up piano study at the age of fifty-nine, and that we are introducing him on the Garrick in direct contradiction to the opinion held by the majority of people, that a person could not expect to learn anything after reaching middle age. Then we brought on the little fellow and the house gasped. Then they sat up and took notice, for the lad could play exceptionally well for a youngster.

A Good Idea, If—

The student idea is all right if it is properly and carefully done. Any town with a couple of musical conservatories and a school of acting can get the talent, but there must be some merit. For the benefit of those who do not recall the original paragraph, it was in the issue of February first.

The idea is simply to use the star pupils of these schools on a certain night each week. It is a substitute for Amateur Night that is to be commended because it gives the attraction of local interest without the demoralizing effect of incompetency. We do not like Amateur Nights because it induces in an audience a spirit of levity that reacts against the films. If they guy the amateurs, they'll guy the films after a while. It worked out that way in vaudeville and will work that way with pictures as well.

Part of a recent "Q" circular will help if you adopt the idea.

> The last named student is the lad who made such a hit during the week just ended when he appeared in the regular program, for which he was engaged after we saw his work on Tuesday night. We have one or two other exceptionally clever students that we are going to put on for a regular engagement shortly. It is well worth your while to attend these Students' Nights. You can see professionals any time you care to drop into a theater, but the occasion is very rare on which you can see future professionals who are as clever as the ones appearing at the Garrick upon these nights. This feature is, of course, on Tuesday nights, an addition to our regular full program, none of which is curtailed in the least. If you haven't been to one yet come next Tuesday night and draw your own conclusions.

With the Church.

The Virginia Theater, Collingwood, Ohio, recently produced "The Star of Bethlehem" in conjunction with the ladies of one of the local churches or rather a group of ladies forming one of the sections of a money-raising club attached to the church.

Of course the "Star" lends itself particularly well to this idea, but there is no reason why various aid societies cannot be approached in connection with the exhibition of any special featuring a literary subject, the house dividing the profits and gaining the standing that such collaboration will bring. This tells the story; the clipping being from the Collingwood Citizen:

> On Wednesday afternoon and evening the ladies of Group No. 10 of the Collinwood Congregational Church joined hands with Manager Hutsenpiller of the Virginia Theater and presented one of the greatest pictures of Biblical times, "The Star of Bethlehem." The result was that this pretty little theater not only established a new and more understandable footing in the community, but netted the group a tidy sum for furthering the excellent work of its department of the church. More than two-thirds of the proceeds were given to the ladies. Manager Hutsenpiller waiving the original agreement of an equal division. About one thousand people, young and old, attended the evening performance alone. The picture was a three-reel Thanhouser and was so clear and perfect as to detail that those who had heretofore looked upon the "movie" show as a place to be avoided were at first amazed and then delighted. Ministers, church officers, Sunday school teachers and church workers generally were numbered among the audience. The ladies of the Group, daintily attired in white and wearing tiny blue ribbon badges, acted as ushers and assisted in the ticket booth. During the progress of the film the theater orchestra played religious music and at intermission Mr. C. A. Gilchrist sang several anthems and solos.

Features the Machine.

J. W. Ballenger, of the Dean Theater, York, Nebraska, put in a Simplex the other day. He widely distributed a card 2½ x 4½ inches with a picture of the machine on one side and a reader on the other and reports that it made talk that made business. In addition the local papers ran the cut, each with a different reader emphasizing the safety of the new machine and the added value of the projection. If you put in a machine it pays to boom it. The people will want to see the device in action and compare the pictures with the old, and a good part of the cost of a new model may be returned by "starring" it modestly.

Here's a line from the newspaper "reader" that might help some others. "There are several methods of extinguishing a film, should one become ignited, but the worst that could possibly happen would be the destruction of the film itself.

We like the Dean motto, "Always a dime's worth." It means something.

The Queen Souvenir.

The Queen Theater, Dallas, Texas, has been opened under the management of E. V. Richards, Jr., acting for E. H. Hulsey, of the Queen, Galveston. It is twenty pages with stiff cover and talks modestly but convincingly of the house, which seems to be a "regular" theater. Not too much is promised and there is a suggestion in the phrasing that promises will be kept. Most of the stuff is local but we think that others can use this paragraph:

> Special attention has been given to that very important feature—the safety of our child patrons. We offer both physical and moral protection. They are just as safe at the Queen as when in school.

It might have been added that they probably are learning as much, as well.

First impressions count for much. Bombast—promise without performance—will attract attention, but will react. Promise just a little less than you purpose to perform, and you'll leave your visitors pleasantly surprised and determined to come again. The Queen strikes a happy note of moderation while putting its best points forward.

What Is This?

Here is a clipping from the Camden (N. J.) Post-Telegram. It does not seem to be a photoplay theater, nor yet an annex to the coal business. Perhaps some of those who have the best interests of the business at heart can give it a name:

Overdone.

We believe in getting out and hustling after the business that won't come without being coaxed, but to put it mildly, we think our Camden friend is overdoing things quite a bit. It's hard to tell whether he is running a theater or a lottery. Free tickets with coal (from the exhibitor's own yard), or candy, concert tickets, groceries, postcards and five and six reels with a 10 cent ticket is overdoing it. We think that the exhibitor will find that part of the trouble lies in six reels in an hour and a half show. Three reels run right are better than four hustled through. Six in one show is an overdose. It is like a three hour and a half dramatic performance. No matter how interesting the offering itself may be, the audience becomes surfeited before the end and leaves tired and disgruntled.

We appreciate the fact that the house is in competition with those on lower Market Street in Philadelphia, because we know Camdenites to whom the height of extravagance is a picture spree. They come over on the ferry, look in the store windows, see one or two shows, have a glass of beer, give the free lunch to the children and go home well contented. It may take a little hustling to hold them in Camden, but no lasting patronage can be built on so elaborate a system of bribes. They will come as long as the coal and groceries hold out, but they are not the sort of people to keep on coming after the gift contest is closed down.

The answer seems to be that the house is being run by a coal dealer, rather than a manager, and he does not realize the damage he does himself and the business in general.

It is only fair to say that the advertisement is not sent in by a competitor but by an exhibitor thirty or forty miles from Camden who sends it in because he knows it is bad business. It most assuredly is—bad business and bad management.

The Country Grocery is all right one night a week. Every night it loses its attraction. It is the old story of eating forty quail in forty consecutive days. The first day it is a delicacy, the last day it nauseates—if one lasts that long. If you cannot get business in a businesslike way, get some other business, but do not bribe your audience to come. You won't last and you only hurt the other fellow.

Has the Champs.

C. R. Blubaugh, manager of the Vaudette Theater, Fort Scott, Kansas, seems to have taken our tip about a ball team, for his Vaudette basket ball team heads the list of the "Commercial League" of that place and every time there is a game the Vaudette gets a big write-up. He promises to send on a photograph of the team, and we hope that he'll remember that promise. If he doesn't we'll jog him up in a couple of weeks.

Mr. Blubaugh thinks that ten cents an inch is too much for a daily paper with a circulation of 18,000. That rates applies to five inches or over. An extra charge for composition is made where the copy runs less than three insertions. We do not think that this rate is excessive. A five inch ad for fifty cents plus the cost of composition is by no means excessive. He should come on here where theatrical advertising is forty and fifty cents a line and double that, on some papers, if you break the column rule for a wide advertisement. We think the rate card he sends very decent, indeed, even if the town itself rates 10,000 population. He can draw on much of the out-of-town circulation if he gets after it.

Beats Mr. Chaney.

W. L. Jennings rises rather late to remark that he beats Mr. Chaney, of the Hillsboro Orpheum. He writes:

> We noticed in your issue of the 11th, wherein you commented very flatteringly upon some theater that had given a special matinee Christmas afternoon free to the children under a certain age, and in this connection, we beg to state that we went even further here than that. We arranged for a special program of four reels, and with our four-piece orchestra, we gave a performance at 10.30 a. m. free to all. We advertised the fact in the newspaper, using two inches on the front page and a reader in the amusement column, and also sent out about twenty-five letters to every lodge, minister and charitable organization in the city, and Christmas morning every seat in the house, numbering 500, was filled. To be sure, we took advantage of this gathering to advertise each reel of our regular show for that afternoon and evening, and our Christmas gift to the public that morning was returned at our regular matinee and evening performances fifty per cent., aside from the good feeling it created for the house.
> During the latter part of October last, the Monroe Fair Association held its fifth annual fair, and the honor of the secretaryship was conferred upon me, and we had one of the best fairs in the history of the organization, not on my account, but because the merchants were made to take an interest in it. However, what I wanted to say was this, that we offered $5.00 in tickets for the best essay on the educational value of photoplays written by a school-boy or girl and allowed disinterested judges to pass upon them and the result was very satisfactory to us. We retained all the essays submitted, and if you should care too, will gladly send the best of them to you. We awarded ten tickets to every child that entered an essay, regardless of its worth. Haven't contributed to your columns for quite a while, but never fail to read it every week, from cover to cover, for even the advertisements are of interest and its the only way to keep up with the times.

We like the idea of sending tickets to each contestant. It leaves a better feeling among those who do not draw the big prizes. The letters Mr. Jennings speaks of merely state that the free performance will be given and asks that the recipient advise any he may know of that fact that none worthy be overlooked.

We note that Mr. Jennings has been traveling in the same general direction we once took.

Big Time Stuff.

To talk like a vaudeville actor Hay & Nicholas are "pulling big time stuff." Their cards are written by a man who knows how to write advertising and are printed clean cut and attractively. Just one reel a week is picked up to brag about and it is done right. Here's a Pathe Weekly, for example:

> Everything of interest to everybody from everywhere.

But they use both sides of the card (since it is printed matter) and if we were giving out prizes, two of these would get blue ribbons. Look them over:

Also Present.

The Cameraphone theater, Cleveland, declared itself in on the Pittsburgh Cameraphone Bulletins by sending one of their issues, which is uniform with the Pittsburgh publication, the make-up being arranged for each different theater and intended for the house of distribution. C. E. Cochard, the manager, also sends one of the slips that are sent out every three months to those on the mailing list. The wording is very simple. Below the heading there is copy:

> Dear Patron—We are revising our "Program Mailing List." Should you desire to remain on same and receive our Weekly Bulletin, kindly fill in blank spaces below. Otherwise your name will not be on the new mailing list.
> Name ....................Cameraphone Theaters................
> Street ..............................................................
> City ................................................................
> Any remarks about our theater will be appreciated.

This is on a half-note sheet. We think it would be even better, and certainly more appreciated, if it was printed on a private mailing card, slightly larger than the regulation postal, but small enough to "stack" well with other mail, say 4 by 6 inches. This could carry the printed address on the reverse and could be mailed for one cent. The returns are regular under the present system, but the card scheme would carry a certain weight.

Out of the Ordinary.

W. Victor Miller, who edits The Gray Book, sends a booklet he wrote for the Mahaiwe theater, Great Barrington, Mass. It is an eight page issue with stiff paper cover in brown, the inside form being a rich cream. It is not so much the advertisement of this particular house as an argument for the pictures in general written in a vein suggestive of the once popular "Billy Baxter" letters, but lacking the excess of slang phrases.

The third and fourth cover pages are given over to a local jeweler and so the booklet costs the house nothing. The Mahalwe runs pictures, save when they get first class road attractions, and seats 985.

The booklet is one of those exceptional pieces of advertising that now and then appear from the small towns, and the best part of it is that Mr. Miller very generously offers to send a copy to any manager who will enclose a stamped and self addressed envelope. The full sized 6¾ envelope should be sent, addressed to yourself and stamped with a two cent stamp. Do not send to the theater, but to W. Victor Willer, Box D, Great Barrington, Mass.

We thank Mr. Miller for the copies he has sent and on behalf of the others who will profit by his courtesy.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by Epes Winthrop Sargent

Just How Much?

JUST how fully to write a story is one of the ever-fruitful themes of this photoplay writing business, and like the matter of spacing it is one that will not be settled until all men think alike.

In one New York studio there are two men working. One wants a script that runs about half a page to the scene. The other wants a script of one to four lines to the scene and if he buys a longer story he rewrites it himself to get in that length. It is the same all over. Tom wants every little detail, Dick wants no details beyond the big business while Harry likes a medium well done script that gives the big business and hints at some of the minor action.

Probably eighty per cent. of the directors favor the explicit synopsis and the brief plot of action and unless you write particularly for some one director whose methods you know, it is best to keep the action brief that you may suit the greater number, but brief does not mean brevity at the expense of definiteness. It must be wholly and entirely clear yet so phrased that the descriptions are terse, perhaps "terseness" rather than "brevity" should describe the procedure.

One reason why we advocate the dash as a punctuation mark is that it encourages terseness by removing the need for rounded sentences. We do not commend the terseness of a recent writer whose scene ran: "They give her the money. She drops dead," but there is a medium between this and the page-long description of just how the old lady acted when she was lifted from poverty to comparative comfort. Cultivate the habit of expressing yourself clearly in a few words. It will help you much toward the professional standard of work.

Plain Rot.

We are favored with an unsigned letter from some genius who declares that the editors of two of the licensed companies do not read scripts submitted. It continues "their plays are all moth eaten plays written over about six times—worse plays than any highschool child could write. I place my plays only I feel that the injustice will kill the business."

Our anonymous, if rather illiterate, correspondent need not grow feverish over the terrible thought of these two readers refusing to read scripts submitted. Even the plays made over six times will not kill the business.

There is no legal, moral or other obligation requiring editors to read all plays submitted and we think that this correspondent writes the sort of play that any experienced editor can spot at a glance. We do not believe that there is a studio in the country where every play does not get its proper chance. We believe that every play is read by someone to a point where its fitness or lack of merit may be determined, but there are hundreds of scripts turned out weekly that fairly cry aloud their utter worthlessness and a glance at more than a synopsis or a scene or two would be a waste of time. There are some submissions so poorly done that even the envelope proclaims the contents.

Wails like this are just plain rot, and we question the writer's statement that he places his plays. No one who knows enough to write a real photoplay will give an exhibition such as this.

We've Found Another.

We've found another school stunt that William Lord Wright has not yet discovered. It's in Denver where already a more or less prosperous firm of fruit salesmen have branched into the picture business, at least the firm is named in the local and telephone directory as dealing in fruit, probably of the citrus family.

This is the other: It is open all day and Wednesday evenings.

It starts off with the statement that "Millions of dollars are being spent each week in the production of moving pictures," which is a downright and unvarnished lie. We hate to call a lady a liar, but she must know she is since she announces that she supplies a local film company (that we never heard of) with stories, and so must have some idea of costs. The cost of production ranges from $300 to $2,500 a reel save for specials and no amount of liberal figuring will work into "millions" even with the world production in mind and not merely the United States.

Next is the statement that "you can write your plots in your spare time." Perhaps you can, but the writing of photoplays is more or less a business, like everything else. The spare time idea is all right for those who have all day as spare time.

Now comes the star stunt. A paragraph states that: "Literary ability and grammatical perfection are unnecessary. A child can write them." Can you beat that? A child can write them! And then: "The plot is all that is required. But without the knowledge of the technical form your plots ever so clever would be worthless to the film companies." and "After reading our instructions several times you can begin work at once."

And after that some people will still wonder why we do not like photoplay schools!

The price of the course is $3, which is exactly ten times too much.

And after all that they use the moth-eaten, time worn paragraph about how much Emmet Campbell Hall earned a couple of years ago.

Some of these days we are going to get tired of this sort of thing and talk to the Chief Inspector of the Post Office Department.

In this connection we print the letter of Fred W. Jameson, Business Manager of the Leavenworth (Kansas) Post. He writes:

> Some time ago I began reading your excellent department devoted to Photoplaywrights in the Motion Picture World and seeing what you had to say about so-called "Schools" immediately began to investigate the one which had made a contract with us. I found they had quoted all kinds of prices here so ordered the advertising stopped and tried to collect. Our representative in New York informs me that the "Advertising Agency" placing the business has taken its desk, hatrack and spitoon and moved to parts unknown. We were fools and I suppose helped them catch fools, but thanks to your timely interference, there are still a few left uncaught here. I am giving you this information merely to assure you that you are doing good work in knocking these fake outfits. I have a copy of your Technique and it strikes me that a person armed with this, and some originality, can write photoplays. I have sold four full reel comedies to the Essanay people through following your suggestions. I am directing all my would-be photoplayright friends to buy copies of the Technique and to subscribe for the World, for it seems to me that the only way to write photoplays is to make a constant and thorough study of the field and the requirements of the studios. Personally I am probably a freak in the photoplay field for I cannot land a drama to save my soul but have had no trouble with comedies that have some fun and a wholesome touch of human nature in them..

The publisher's letter has attached a half-page advertisement from the Motion Picture Story Magazine as a guarantee of good faith. Apparently the schools are alive to the seeming endorsement that this publication gives by accepting such advertising.

Keep Them Out.

It does not follow that because you start with a certain idea in mind that your story must carry that idea to the bitter end. The other day we wrote out an idea that was given us which contained a couple of bank burglars busy with a safe. We didn't like the yeggmen, so we booted them out, leaving an awful hole in the story. Every little while they would try to sneak back, but we wouldn't let them and in the end the story was the better for their absence—and considerably safer. A beginner might have given in and permitted them to come back, but if you're used to writing you'll be able to hold your control of the situation and keep the stage clear of obnoxious characters.

You'll have to learn to do it if you want to sell your stuff, for there is a growing demand for cleaner stories and many of these stories that start with a crime can end up with no offense to the most drastic censorship if the idea is retained and the hurtful incidents excised. This was very cleverly shown by Mrs. Beta Breuil in a recent issue of the Dramatic Mirror, but it takes a little thought; more thought than the average beginner is willing to give to an effort. It seems to us that the beginner thinks too much about the original plot and too little about the possibilities of the main idea in other directions.

Starting the Story.

Here is a clipping from a letter from Lawrence S. McCloskey. The Lubin editor didn't know that we were going to use his letter and he put it in his own breezy fashion, but it drives home the point as no amount of carefully polished phrase would and we run it as he wrote it. "Here's his very note:"

> Have you ever run any dope on getting a story started—getting the premises over in a scene or two? Seems you must have already touched on the subject, but I don't demember having read anything on it.
> So many writers run a dreary string of scenes explaining, for instance, that owing to the death of her Pa—who, by the way, had died penniless—the which sad condition had been brought about by the backsliding of a faithless pardner (who had been tempted by a tall man with a large diamond stickpin—in fact he wore a new diamond stickpin every day—to use the firm's money in a deal which the man with the stickpins knew very well would fall through—but didn't care as long as he could buy more stickpins) Mabel is thrown on the world to make her own living. The story really starts when Mabel gets up against it, but many writers waste so many scenes in explaining how she came to have to work for a living that there's no room left for the story. Often I get interested in a script of this kind only to find I'm reading stuff written merely to show why John had to leave home and go out West. Characters in whom I'm becoming interested are dropped. It really doesn't matter why or how John goes West, for as a rule what he does there is not influenced by what he'd been or done before he got there. It frequently happens that writers in trying to explain why John goes West, unconsciously dig up a better plot than the one they are trying to put over. Get me? Say something about it in the Photoplaywright column if it seems apropos.

We have printed six or eight pages in various forms dealing with the story that starts too soon and runs too long, but Mr. McCloskey gives a new angle. It's the same thing, really, put in a way that perhaps explains the point better, though it is the same old argument. You have a story of how John marries Mary. Do not tell who John was and how he couldn't afford to go to college because the cow died and the hog cholera came around. Start it off with the proposition that John wants to marry Mary.

The other day an actor showed us a story he had written. John wanted to marry Mary and so did Harry. Mary's preference was for Harry. First he had a scene showing who John was. Then he had a scene showing that Harry was a clerk and not a manual worker. Then he showed that Mary was a college girl. Fourthly he showed that John proposed to Mary. After that he showed that John was disappointed because Mary refused him. Next on the program came Harry's proposal. He was turned down. After all that John got his dander up and started to win Mary whether she liked it or not.

We ran this scene first for him:

> College grounds—Mary writing—she reads -
> On screen—letter

My dear John—I am sorry, but I must say "No" to your proposal of marriage. The man I wed must be a man who has done things. Mary.

Back to scene—Harry enters—proposes—refused.

In the second scene John starts to make a name for himself and the story is under way.

Before you even sit down to your typewriter decide in your mind exactly what your story is. Is it the story of John's early life, is it the story of how he wins the girl or the story of how he loses her after he wins her? Make up your mind fully and completely just what it is you are going to write about and then write about that and nothing else.

Do not take more than a scene or two to get the story started. If it takes half a dozen scenes turn to some other story until that one gets just right in your mind. If you do not you're liable, as Mr. McCloskey suggests, to pass over the real story for a more or less uninteresting series of incidents that have no actual bearing on the story at all.

We've seen a story passed over in a leader or one or two hurried scenes because it was put down on paper at the first hint of a story. It was picked before it was ripe, to use a simile we have quoted before. Don't hurry a plot. Keep it in your mind until it is full formed and rounded. Then the task of putting it on paper becomes little more than the labor of running the typewriter and instead of hanging over the machine all day and perhaps part of the night you'll find that the story fairly spills itself over the paper.

It may take an hour, a week, a month, or a year, but wait until the story is right and it will write itself.

Those Circles.

We want to see more circles formed. At present there are three reporting to this department, in Chicago, Boston and Waterville, Me., but every town of decent size should have its group of photoplaywrights getting together now and then to talk shop and get together.

In addition to the three cities named, we have applications from:

Toronto.
Charleston, S. C.
Pittsburgh, Pa.
New Haven, N. H.
Kansas City, Mo.
San Diego, Calif.

Now, then, please get busy.

Diagrams.

Bannister Merwin, who by the way likes England so well that he has settled down in an old Tudor mansion for a long stay, has sent us some data on diagrams that will interest those who write practically exclusively for one company. It will interest those only since it is based on facts applicable to one particular tudio. We will be glad to pass the hint along to exclusive writers. It would serve only to hamper the work of others, so we limit our offer to this class. If you ask the information send a number ten return envelope.

Requests from those not known to be exclusive writers will not be answered. If you are merely curious, do not write.

If You Live in Toronto.

If you live in Toronto and want to belong to a circle we have the address of a writer who is willing to form such. Send in your name and we'll send it to him.

Long Time Since.

A correspondent writes that she took up a correspondence course because of the editorial comment in this paper. That comment is more or less garbled and appeared before trade papers employed photoplay experts. Much may happen in two and a half years to change the editorial opinion.

The correspondent, who seems very fair minded, adds:

"I am not condemning the school for I learned a great deal, but I do feel that the instruction did not go far enough as I was told nothing about the length of a scene or whether my work was too long or too short."

It seems to us that this information should be imparted by a school getting from $22.50 up for its course. Examples of scripts are given in this course, but it appears that the personal work of the student is not criticized along this important line.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

LEGITIMATE—Last we heard there were two Western Essanay companies, at Niles and Los Angeles, Calif.

C. W.—The form of rejection slip is entirely a matter for the company to decide. While many have the check slips, they are under no obligation to conduct a school and some have dropped these slips because some authors are disposed to argue the reason checked with the editor.

T. B.—We fail to find that title in the files for the last eighteen months. Isn't it possible you've got it twisted?

R. I.—We have not the cast for the play in which the "charming and handsome young leading lady" appeared. Ask "Who Played Sarah in Struck by a Spoon?" Don't pile on the agony and the adjectives, please.

G. A.—Have no data on the length of time Pilot takes to reply, but anxiety after three weeks exhibits undue haste. Wait two months. Don't wait "a week or so," wait a month or so. Scripts must be typed. A school of acting is about the last recommendation an applicant should offer as an argument. They might take you in spite of it, but not because of it.

H.—We do not find the part cast by the Identifier. Tell the character names in the Lubin, please. True Boardman had the title role in Broncho Billy's Brother. Just because you've not caught an Arthur Johnson film for nearly a month is no sign that anything has happened to the player. Nothing has. We will not give your love to Flossie C. P. Flossie writes she has a non-professional rave now and we won't butt in and spoil it.

M. L. F.—An exact reply to your questions would involve greater effort than this department can make. Roughly speaking there are between 12,000 and 15,000 houses in the United States with a daily patronage of between four and six million.

A. H. K.—If you'll read his paper you will not have to ask such questions. We have repeatedly stated that most costume plays are evolved in the studio and not purchased. We have said even more frequently that the Keystone and now and then Pathe will purchase .the synopsis alone.

L. B. C.—Edwin Carewe is the leading man in that section of the Lubin company headed by Miss Ormi Hawley and directed by George Nicholls.

J. C.—We cannot recall such a film as you mention. There is no reason why you should not write a play about that particular battle. There are many reasons why you'll probably not make a sale. The Moving Picture World was started March 9, 1907. Bound volumes for 1912 and the last quarter of 1911 are the only ones available.

J. T. E.—We do not query companies as to where a special picture was made as many of them naturally prefer to keep this information—and the locations—to themselves.

A. T. H.—Webster Cullison was the Jose in Lubin's The Silent Signal.

C. B.—The business office of this paper will send you "a few instructions on the writing of photoplays" if you'll send it a dollar and ask for a copy of Technique of the Photoplay.

MARIE—Name the characters in that Lubin please. We find no Thanhouser of that title inside the time limit.

W. R. K.—Too late now for a cotton picking script. Wait until next fall and try the companies generally wintering in the south. When you want an answer by mail send a fee. If you can't read the paper we can't be expected to answer your questions.

C. E. B.—We laughed at your letter, which, we presume, is all you wanted us to do.

C. D.—Imp put on Aunt Dinah's Plot, December 14, 1912. Ask the Vita if they want the Bunny plot. There are lots of ways of getting a flock of sheep in the open. Trouble is to sell a script like that. Try the western companies.

BIOGRAPHER—The Identifier is entitled to stumble now and then and about a million people have written in correction.

B. M. Y.—In A Cry for Help, Harry D. Carey was the heavy and Lionel Barrymore the tramp. Other questions have been replied to except that Miss Betty Gray is with Pathe.

W. R. B.—Miss Mae Hotely was the widow in His Father's Choice. Any time you want to commit suicide send in your name and we'll print what you say about those two favorite players. You're entitled to your opinion, but why force it on others?

F. B.—We've said very, very many times that the child was Gladys Egan.

M. B.—Harry Beaumont was the son in The Third Thanksgiving. Read back for The Informer. Tom Moore was Jack in The Strange Story of Elsie Mason.

FANNORA—William Christie Miller was Miss Pickford's Father in My Baby. Robert Herron and Henry D. Carey were the burglars in The Burglar's Dilemma.

A. B.—Lionel Barrymore is the brother of Miss Ethel Barrymore. See just above for one. Miss Kate Bruce was the stenographer in The One She Loved. The charity patient that died in A Cry for Help was Miss Clair McDowell. Hiss Lillian Gish was the maid.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

Washing Films.

SPOKANE, Washn., says he has a home outfit, operated by four glower Nernst lamp. He desires information as to the washing of his films, which are very dirty. Spokane will be well advised to use nothing but a mixture of ¾ water and ¼ glycerine, scrubbing the films rapidly but thoroughly with this mixture. Of course this will soften the emulsion but the softening will not occur quickly enough to prevent the washing, if it is done rapidly. Spokane should at first, however, experiment on a few pieces of old film and learn just how to do it. He must not rewind the film until the emulsion is thoroughly dry, but it may be stretched back and forth, with the emulsion side out across a frame made for the purpose. The drying will take place in a very short time. I cannot recommend benzine for washing films.

Keystone Effect.

Mr. Elmer Tompkins, Hollister, Calif., contributes the following:

> My throw is 100 feet, and the drop from lens to screen is 25 feet. To get good results I have tilted my curtain back so that it sets at right angles to the line of projection. This is very inconvenient when I am using vaudeville as I sometimes do. My machine is an Edison model B. Could not a special gate be made so that the aperture plate could be brought to the perpendicular and give good results with the screen hanging straight up and down?

The problem presented, Brother Tompkins, has been discussed in this department several times. You will find it dealt with also on pages 331 and 332 of the handbook, a copy of which you should by all means have. You have not stated whether your objection is to the keystone effect, or the out-of-focus effect. If to the latter, I would suggest that you first try stopping your lens down to about ⅝ inch diameter by inserting an opaque paper ring, with a ⅝ inch hole in its center, in the front of the barrel, setting it right up close to the front lens. The setting of the aperture plate perpendicular would not do at all, for reasons it would take altogether too much space to explain in detail. You can, however, loosen the plate and tilt it slightly by inserting a small piece of tin right next to one of the screws. I have forgotten, however, which way the plate should be tilted. Try tilting the top out first, and if that makes the matter worse, reverse it.

A New Theater.

Our old friend Frank G. Cook, who operates one of the most up-to-date airdomes in New York City, Manhattan Avenue and 109th Street, sends us a neatly gotten up invitation to attend the opening of his new house, Cook's Theater, at East Point, Ga., Saturday, February 1st, 1913. Friend Cook informs us that his new house is up-to-date in every particular, and will be run as a high class moving picture theater. The projection equipment consists of a Mercury Arc Rectifier and Powers 6-A projector. Friend Cook is a live, up-to-date exhibitor, whose work here in New York City is a credit to the profession. We wish him every possible success in his new venture.

Ventilation.

Mr. J. E. Tienly, presumably manager of the Scenic, Sioux City, Iowa, sends in a most excellent drawing showing the ventilation system of the theater. It reads as follows:

> The enclosed chart will give an idea of the ventilating system which I have found to give excellent results in this theater. Size of the room 25x90 feet. The twenty-two 10x14 inch openings through the floor are not in a row as shown but are here and there all over the floor. There are three 30x40 inch face openings just back of the seats, instead of one as shown. The air reaches the exhaust fans through the four foot space on each side of the screen instead of over it. The system's greatest advantage is in keeping the theater cool on hot afternoons in the summertime; for by keeping all of the south or entrance doors closed the air from the North side of the building is taken in through the cool, clean, whitewashed basement, where all particles of dust are deposited. For winter use a large radiator is placed in the basement just below each of the face openings back of the seats. The north basement windows are then opened and the radiators turned on according to number of persons in the audience. As this is my first visit to the department I will make it a little short but hope with the aid of the chart you will be able to describe what has proven to be an excellent ventilating system as well as an aid to heating or cooling system. I can especially recommend it where the basement cannot be used for any other purpose, and with either a South or West front.

We are thankful to neighbor Tienly for the excellent description of his ventilating system. It looks as if this would be an ideal system. However, one question arises in our mind, viz: the possible effect of a draft of cool air passing up between the seat rows as shown, coming into direct contact with the feet and legs of at least a part of the audience. Understand that this is not a criticism. I do not know that the effect would be at all injurious, but would like a little more light on that particular point. On the whole, taking the number of openings into consideration, I am inclined to believe that the movement of air would not be rapid enough to cause any damage, even though the persons directly affected be perspiring. The ease with which this plan may be converted into a heating system gives it a double recommendation.

Motor Drive.

Mr. Joe Jenkins, La Grange, Ga., sends in a sketch of his method of attaching a motor to the machine, and arises to make the following remarks:

> I recently noticed a letter in the Department from a brother in St. Paul, Minn., who says he does not approve of the motor drive because the operator, when relieved of the duty of cranking, will not pay close attention to his projection; that he will read books and the like while the machine is running. While that is true to some extent, let me say that any operator who desires to excel, or who has any regard for the theater in which he works, or for the business as a whole, will not do this. If he takes the proper amount of interest in the position he holds he will watch his projection closely, and if he does not, then I say get a man who will. As to my own motor, I did not install it because I was too lazy to crank the machine, or to be able to read books; although I do read books at the proper time and have a whole library of electrical works, including your own handbooks, which I read and study when off duty. When I am on duty, however, I pay strict attention to my business and when projecting a picture I never leave the machine, or take my eye from my work for a minute. I learn things every day, and feel that I can never know enough of my chosen profession. I find you are right about the effect of chain graphite on a lamp. I tried your method as published in the handbook and got much better results. Stiff grease on the lamp I find to be something even more than bad.

If all operators took the proper amount of interest in their business and strove to produce the best possible results, there would be no objection to the motor drive; in fact, it would be a distinct and decided advantage from every point of view. But we must look matters in the face and accept them as they are, not as we would wish them to be, and the facts are that a very great number of operators who are pulling their machines with motors do not pay close attention to their projection. They do not stay right there beside the machine, with their eye on the screen, as they should. Many of them do not read books, but they do other things, such as re-winding, tinkering around at a work bench, talking with someone, or simply day-dreaming, while the shadows creep up on their pictures, and the results on the screen speak of the neglect of the operator. I have personally, and I do still personally object to the motor drive until such time as some scheme is devised which will chain the operator right there beside the machine where he belongs. A good man does not need this, true, but it must be remembered that the profession as a whole, suffers through the work of the careless and incompetent individual, hence the good man who stands by the machine, watches and regulates his light and the speed of his machine, must, in a general way, suffer for the acts of the operator who does not. St. Paul is absolutely right, much as I regret to say it. This, I am aware, is not the popular thing to say; but let me tell you right now, brother, if I ran this department simply to be on the popular side, then I would not be the right man at the helm of its affairs. I am trying to steer the course of our department—our department, mind you, I said—so that it will do the greatest amount of good to the profession as a whole and that course I purpose to pursue as long as I am its editor, regardless of whether it is a popular course or not. As to Mr. Jenkins' motor drive, it consists of a fan motor belted direct to a 5½ inch pulley, bolted to the take up pulley on the lower sprocket shaft. The method of lubricating the lamp spoken of will be found in the last paragraph of page 198, and the first paragraph of page 199, of the new handbook. We shall be glad to hear from you at any time, Mr. Jenkins. The man who can write as sensible a letter as you do is worth hearing from at any time.

Note the air taken in basement at cool north end of building; thence through clean whitewashed basement, up through registers in floor and drawn out by suction fans at north end of room, making a complete circuit and constantly changing.

Re-Winder Tension.

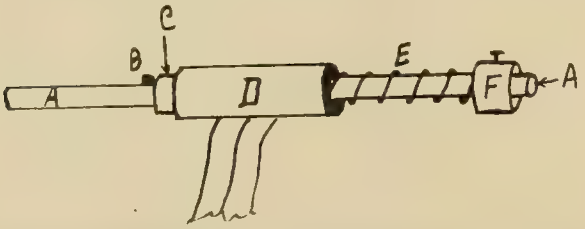
Mr. Humphrey Woods, Richmond, Mo., discourses as follows:

> Would like your opinion as to the tension I have devised for my Powers "Perfect" re-winder. I removed its shaft and secured one a little larger, taking it from an old sewing machine. Drilled a hole and inserted a dowel pin at B. Found a bushing which I placed on the shaft at C. Next, out of an old faucet, I got a spiral spring which was placed at E, after inserting shaft A in casting D.



> I think the sketch makes the whole matter plain, but I must mention the fact that I cut a slanting notch in the bench so that the whole rewinder sets on a slant, thus obviating any necessity for fastening the reels on the re-winder shaft. My film box is also of my own make. It sets on a shelf under the bench, which is in front of me as I am operating. The lid is in the front side, and is hinged on its top edge. The front edge of the box sets back under the bench about one inch so that the lid cannot be raised straight up, but will always fall shut of its own weight. The box is made of galvanized iron No. 12 gauge. Needless to say there is a latch on the lid to keep it closed. As to threading in frame, I prefer a lamp in front, and a little to one side of the lens—just enough to one side so as not to interfere with the picture.

Friend Woods also sent a sketch of his motor drive but, beyond the fact that it is home made, I do not see that it is an improvement over similar devices already described in the department, and space is very valuable. The tension re-wind is excellent. I can recommend operators to equip their rewinders in similar fashion. The film box seems to be all right and the automatic lid is excellent, but I am afraid, friend Woods, it is placed a little too close to the machine. In case of fire it would be right in the middle of things.

One Dollar—No Questions Asked.

Duluth, Minn., writes as follows:

> I notice on page 361, January 25th issue, Winnipeg, Manitoba, asks information as regards obtaining a license. You just tell Winnipeg to come to Duluth, Minn., where they take your $1.00 and ask no questions. An operator went to the city electrician and applied for a lisence. He was at least expected to be asked a few questions. He was only asked three, as follows: "What's your name and address? Where do you work? Where's your dollar?" The operator asked the official how he knew he, the applicant, was capable of holding an operator's position. The official replied that the fact that he, the applicant, was working at the theater he named was enough. Such an examination is no protection to either manager, operator or the public. A fire occurred recently in a local theater. About 250 feet of film was burned, and the local paper did not get hold of the incident at all, the operator being but a child, and the proud possessor of one of the aforesaid licenses. What would be the best method of making the authorities realize the danger of such a condition as this?

There is only one method that I know of, brother, and that is to get one or two people killed, or a couple of dozen injured through the incompetency of one of these "proud possessors" of a Duluth City license. The only trouble is that the authorities will then jump to the other extreme and probably, being without adequate knowledge themselves, undertake to pass and enforce a whole string of more or less idiotic ordinances. As a matter of fact it is likely that the Duluth City Electrician, although probably an excellent electrician, knows about as much about practical projection as a black bird does about ancient Egypt. City electricians are very seldom, if ever, competent to give a moving picture operator a really intelligent examination. However, being possessed of the required dollar, it would seem that Winnipeg is duly answered, for which we shall of course expect to receive his thanks in due course of time.

From New Brunswick.

From St. John, New Brunswick, comes the following:

> You will remember my letter to you last summer regarding the licensing of exhibitors and operators in New Brunswick. I took the matter up with the attorney general, and I am pleased to say that, as a result, the operator must now pass an examination, under the direction of the board of censors; be 18 years of age (I suggested 21); have not less than one year's experience as an operator, or have served at least one year's apprenticeship. I forwarded the attorney general some of your own suggestions, and although the act is a good thing, it still is very far from being right. But at least we got the examination, and the fee is only $2.00—another of your suggestions. Also the apprentice can run the machine only under the direct supervision of a licensed operator, for all of which we have to thank the Projection Department.
> In transformers built for 60 and 133 cycle current, it occurred to me we all have something to learn. If built for 60 it will, as we all know, either blow the fuses when placed on 133 cycle current, or burn the transformer out. My own view is that the transformer for 133 cycles would not require as many windings to produce the same number of lines of force as would the 60 cycle transformer. I have never seen this point covered, and I would like to have your opinion. Our people are building a new $100,000 theater, to be ready in May or thereabouts. Will send you photos when I get them. Expect to put in our own light plant.

Glad to know you have succeeded in getting a fairly effective license law. I trust that it will work out to your satisfaction. There is a very considerable difference between the transformer made to operate on 60 cycles and one designed for 133 cycles. I think that the effect of the higher frequency is to create a more intense magnetic field than that produced by 60 cycle current, which would call for a redcution in the core, in the windings or in both. In building that new house, try to get your people to build the operating room in accordance with the plan set forth in the Handbook. Get them to build the walls and roof of brick, concrete or hollow tile with a vent flue 24 inches in diameter through the roof, with shutters installed as shown. You need then never fear of a fire panic in that house, because should you ever have a fire the audience would not know anything about it until it was all over.

Slanting Curtain.

Philadelphia writes, informing St. Louis, January 25th issue, that he has cured the keystone effect by moving bottom of curtain one foot outward, thus slanting it by that much. The curtain slanting method of overcoming keystone effect is well known, but most managers dislike it.

Non-Union Men.

An Ohio brother, in the course of a recent letter, commented adversely on the favors I have shown non-union men through the department. To those who hold similar views let me say that this department, while edited by a member of the I. A. T. S. E. who thoroughly believes in the principles of organization, and for that reason is consistently and persistently advocating the unionization of operators, still it is not to be considered as being conducted for the sole benefit of that organization and its members. This department seeks to, and what is more it purposes to, serve all operators. To point out the utter absurdity of the brother's kick, I have only to say that the I. A. T. S. E. laws are such that, up to the present time, a very large percentage of the men in the smaller towns are absolutely debarred from membership. Hundreds, even thousands of small town operators have tried to join the organization only to be refused through the operation of the six months clause. And yet this brother would class this man as a "non-union man." We are not doing business along those lines, Ohio. This department favors, and strongly favors, the organization of the operators, because it is right that they should organize for their own protection and for the benefit of the business at large. But this department is conducted in the interest of better projection, not only by union men but by those not members of the union. We shall accord the non-union member precisely the same courtesy extended to the member, especially while the I. A. T. S. E. bars a large percentage of operators from membership, regardless of their competence or incompetence or their reliability or unreliability.

Mr. Ghost Again.

Tonkawa, Okla., has run into the following difficulty:

> I am running an American standard projector and have a ghost in the center of the picture. Use alternating current. Have been here two years and have been fighting this proposition all the time. Have Pathé lenses and have used no other kind. Am using the Silver Saver which I do not think much of. Would a Ft. Wayne Compensarc be better? Have two 7½ condensers; 75 foot throw.

Your trouble may lie in the way you are setting your carbons. Follow the instructions pages 204 to 212 of the new handbook. Your condensing lenses are of proper focal length. Try placing them closer together, so that their convex surfaces almost touch at the thick point. I know nothing of the Silver Saver, but the Ft. Wayne Compensarc has an established reputation as a first class device of its kind. First, however, I would try changing carbon set and placing the lenses closer together. Your trouble does not lie in the objective lens.

Harder Carbon.

Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

> Have 220 volt, 60 cycle current through a Hallberg Economizer. The arc would quiet down for a second and the light became dim. Went over all connections and cleaned my carbon clamps, but the only remedy I discovered was the use of harder carbons. All operators around here use a soft carbon and their light acts just as mine did. I told them of the remedy I had found, but all they would say, was: "The carbons I use are the only ones," so I let it go at that. Now here is something that is getting me puzzled. We had some electrical work done recently and the lines were tested so that there were no grounds. The electrician tested them with a magneto and could get no ring anywhere. He therefore pronounced them O. K. But if we put one wire of a test lamp on one of the connections on the fuse block or on one of the switch blades of any circuit, and the other wire of the test lamp on the cutout cabinet, or on the conduit of any circuit, the lamp will light. Now if there is no ground on the line how is it that the lamp lights?

As to the carbon matter, you will have to explain just what you mean by "harder carbon." The soft cored carbon is the thing for a. c. If you are using hard carbon, your light would, I think, be yellow, even though it be steadier. Just why it died down in the manner described I do not understand, unless the contact with the carbon clamp was not good, and gradually loosened up through arcing between the carbon and the clamp. As to the other matter, unless I am mistaken it is quite possible that the combination you named would exist, if the circuit be what is known as a "grounded" circuit, and I think that is the answer. With a three wire system the neutral is always grounded. The switch cabinets and conduits are also grounded, therefore should you connect a test lamp between the positive wire (remembering that the neutral is positive to one outside wire) and the switch cabinet or conduit, you would get a light, although the wires themselves would be all right electrically.

Chemical Action.

Mr. H. G. Crose, Gary, Ind., gives a lengthy explanation of the chemical action which causes the corrosion of carbon clamps, where salt-soaked carbons are used; also of the reason for salt brine soaked carbons giving a softer light. The explanation of brother Crose is interesting, but we are so badly crowded for space at this time that I concluded not to give it publicity. I will hold it, however, and when pressure upon space is a little less it may see the light of day.

That Springfield, Mass., Ball.

On January 29th, I journeyed to Springfield, Mass., in compliance with a most courteous invitation by local union No. 186, to attend the ball given on the evening of that day by Springfield operators. I was met at the depot by a committee consisting of brother Weber, president of local union No. 186, and brother Chas. E. Schneider.

The organization had reserved rooms at a hotel, where we journeyed by taxi. The afternoon was most pleasantly spent in visiting a few of the many Springfield theaters. We found Springfield projection machinery to be of a rather antiquated type, and it is to the credit of the members of local union No. 186 that they succeed in producing as good results as they do with the material at hand. There is urgent need for new up-to-date projection machinery in Springfield. The ball itself was in every way a splendid success. Nowhere have I seen a more clean-cut, gentlemanly set of operators than it was my pleasure to meet in Appolo Hall that night. Aside from the royal treatment received from the organization, I thoroughly enjoyed the affair. It is always a pleasure to meet a body of men whom one can feel are a credit to the profession, and the Springfield men are all of that. I trust that I may have the pleasure of meeting them again in the not distant future.

Union Matters.

Brooklyn, N. Y., contributes the following:

> With regard to a Brooklyn brother's remarks concerning the supper hour, wish to say that I, myself, am in the same fix. It is all very well for single men to say what they will and will not do, but there might be a different story to tell should they take unto themselves a life partner, and assume the responsibility which that entails. The profession of operating is over-crowded in Greater New York. Should I leave my place there would be any number of operators only too willing to work longer hours and for less money. I receive $25.00 per week and have a motor driven machine, and an employer whom I consider a "prince." The one objectionable feature is that I do not get a supper hour. Mr. Williams, business agent of local union No. 35 is a worthy man, but in branch No. 2 (the operators) there is partiality shown certain members as regards positions. A friend of mine has been out of work for more than a month. He has been down to the union rooms every morning; although positions came in he did not get any chance. Unions should be run by men, not kids. This is my first attempt at writing to the department. If accepted it will not be my last. You will pardon me for not wishing to sign my name, but for certain reasons, I think it not advisable.

Your failure to sign your name would ordinarily have consigned your letter to the wastebasket. Letters must be signed, Brooklyn, though if you so request your name will not be published. As to the supper hour it must be conceded that under present conditions there seem to be two sides to the story. I published a former letter to stir up discussion, and the receipt of more than two hundred letters shows that the discussion was duly stirred up. It is quite true that New York is over-crowded with operators, though if that term were confined to really competent operators it is a question if the shoe would not be on the other foot. But I must say that the work of the New York men has improved immensely within the past three years, and I believe that at least some of that improvement is due to the department and the roasting I gave New York operators when I first came here. As to your remarks regarding local union No. 35, branch No. 2, it seems to me that the proper place to make these kicks is in the meeting room. If your friend was treated in any such manner as described and without any just cause, then he should tell that fact on the floor of the meeting room. If he can show me that his complaint is well founded I will undertake to personally attend the meeting and back him up in his kick. It is possible, however, that the officials had good and sufficient reasons for not sending him out. Anyhow, the meeting room of the union is the place to air just such grievances as this. As to the union being run by kids, I do not know who you are hitting at. I do not personally know all of the officials, but those I do know I would not class as "kids." I know our recording secretary is or appears to be as old as I am, and I will never see 45 again. Our financial secretary is not very old in years, but has acquired quite an extensive bunch of experience, and at that he is no kid in years. The union proposition here in New York, taking everything into consideration under present conditions, is anything but satisfactory, and probably will be so for a good while to come. I do not in the least blame you for not giving up your position because of the supper hour. I tried out your picture reflection scheme and it did not work.

Keystone-Shutter.

Washburn, Me., has a ten foot picture, which is narrower on the right side by about 6 inches, due to a side throw. Wants to know if it would be all right to file the aperture a little on one side. Also wants to know if a three wing shutter would be better than a two wing of Power's "Six" using 60 cycle current.

You might file the aperture enough to compensate for the keystone without ill effect, but it is possible that, when you have a picture with wide dividing lines, a part of the line would show. The right way to take care of this matter is explained on pages 331 and 332 of the new handbook. The three wing shutter will be better, provided you never speed up beyond 65 a minute. If you exceed that speed you are likely to get a flashing of the light. For the sum of $1,00 the Nicholas Power Company will supply you with a three wing blade and you can try it out, using your old hub.

Cleaning Sprocket Teeth.

Stevens Point, Wis., is projecting a 15 foot picture at 75 feet, with 40 amperes a. c. through a Ft. Wayne Compensarc, using two 7½ condensers 16 inches from the aperture; ⅝ carbon top and bottom. Runs 4 reels, using 15 to 18 minutes to the reel. Wants to know what I think is the best way to clean the sprocket teeth.

The conditions seem to be all right as you have set them forth, Stevens Point. A tooth brush is as good as anything I know of to clean sprocket teeth; it should be used frequently. Allow no dirt or gum to collect on the face of your sprockets. Gauge your speed according to the subject, so that the figures will move naturally and in the most realistic, life-like manner. That is one of the vital points of good projection.

Tension Spring Scheme.

Ralph Stobaugh, Durant, Okla., has an Edison Exhibition model machine. He had a jeweler make screws which would fit snugly in the hole in the Edison tension springs, making the holes in the gate to fit the screws. This, brother Stobaugh says, holds the tension springs in place much better, and he is able to put them on more quickly and easily. He had a slot cut in the lower magazine and took out the bottom roller, which makes some difference in threading. The tension screw proposition is passed along for the benefit of our readers. I cannot, however, approve of the taking out of one of the rollers in the magazine fire trap. You might regret that proposition, friend Stobaugh, should your film ever get on fire. That is what these rollers are there for—to act as a fire trap. Perhaps, however, you have compensated for this in some way and forgotten to tell that end of the story.

Announcement Slides.

Fernie, B. C., Canada, would like information as to the methods used in making lettered slides, with the letters perfectly transparent and the remainder of the slide opaque.

There have been a number of opaque slide coating formulas quoted in the Department during the past three years, but I have not the time to look them up now. Will some brother who has a good slide coating formula, please send the same to the Isis Theater, Fernie, B. C. It occurs to me, however, that possibly the brother means slides with the letters punched out of cardboard or metal. If so, then he would have to have a stencil addressing machine, which costs a good deal of money. He can also outline letters in black on white card-board, photographing the same, and the positive from that negative will show transparent letters with opaque background. Our Mr. Hoffman tells me that when he was running a theater, he got on good terms with a large manufacturing firm near his place and that they allowed him to make stencils for slides on their addressing machine. These stencil perforators can be bought separately from the printing part of the machine.

Testing Generator Capacity.

The Empire Theater Company, Cincinnati, O., writes:

> We are using a motor generator set with 5 h. p. motor, 3 kw. 60 volt generator, rated at 50 amperes. The throw is 96 feet and the picture is 16 feet. We intend increasing the size of the picture to 18 feet. What will we have to do to get increased illumination for the larger picture? How will we know when the motor generator is delivering all it possibly can? At the present time we are pulling 33 amperes, at 48 volts, according to a recent test made across the switch in the operating room.

You say your generator is rated at 50 amperes, which is more d. c. than you need for an 18-foot picture; 45 will be plenty. However, decrease your resistance until the ammeter shows 45 amperes, which is about the capacity of a ⅝ carbon when working on d. c. Should you attempt to run your motor generator set above its capacity there will most likely be heavy sparking at the brushes, this being ordinarily the first indication of over-load.

Light Trouble.

Saginaw, Mich., says they have twelve picture houses there and that projection is good; also that all of the houses are doing good business. He then asks:

> We have tried different makes of carbons and different focal lengths of condenser lenses, but are unable to get a round spot; also the light is weak and unsteady. No. 6 Wire throughout, connections all O. K., projecting a 12-foot picture at 76 feet on a mirroroide screen; through 40 amperes a Ft. Wayne Compensarc. What do you mean (February 1st issue) by "cheap condensers." Where can better ones be had? Our service from the Detroit Universal Film Exchange reaches us in excellent condition. I am in favor of a blank piece four or five feet long between subjects on split-reels.

You will not, I think, get a very brilliant spot with 40 amperes a. c. See pages 204 and 212 of the new hand book, on carbon setting. Better boost that compensarc up to the next notch. There are several grades of condensers. Very likely your exchange has the high class article. They cost $1.50 each. You can procure them of the Kleine Optical Company, 52 State Street, Chicago, Ill., if your exchange hasn't got them.

Those Fixtures.

Our old friend, H. S. Klink, Canton, O., who contributed a description of his home-made indirect lighting fixtures, January 25th issue, writes as follows:

> I did not make the canopies used on my indirect lighting fixtures. I secured the regular fixture canopy, which may be had from any electrical supply house. The home-made fixtures are not at all cheap looking if they are decorated rightly. You can't tell the difference beteen them and the regular brass or bronze bowls; they are very neat in appearance. I have received the handbook and am indeed well pleased with it. Kindly accept my congratulations on the book. The picture of our editor is great. I will come again later on with something which will be of interest. I am in my new operating room now and have the drop shutters fixed as recommended in the handbook. The managers and visitors compliment the installation very highly. I think if the small town operators and managers would get the new handbook and study it there would not so so many asking questions which have already been answered a dozen times in the department. Our new house seats 1100 and is playing to capacity business.

Glad to know you are in your new house and so well pleased with it, brother Klink. I trust you have an ample vent flue in connection with those shutters, if so, you need never fear about your audience being injured by fire.

A New One.

Mr. Chas. R. Smith, proprietor Mystic Theater, Columbus, Kans., presents the following:

> Note many exhibitors complain about out-of-focus effect. There is one cause of this I have not seen you mention, viz.: wobbly shutter; particularly when it is a front shutter. Another thing tending to cause this is the position of the eccentric bushings. They should be set so as to throw the intermittent sprocket shaft back as far as possible, instead of ahead. When the bushings are set to throw the shaft forward it may bring the front edge of the intermittent sprocket ahead of the aperture plate tracks, instead of in line with or back of it. This has a tendency to lift the film from the tracks against the pressure of the tension springs, causing a very fine quiver on the screen. Of course where the shutter blade is a broad one this is not noticeable, but with a narrow shutter blade the effect is bad. We cut out vaudeville long ago. Now run only highest grade pictures and occasional stock. Would like to tell the "boys" all about my light plant, but have not time now.

Now here is something worth attention by operators, and something I had not thought of. It is also quite possible that with some projectors such a thing could be. Examine your machines, gentlemen, and see if the trouble named could be produced as friend Smith suggests. I think it could. As to the wobbly shutter matter, I fail to see where the wobbling of a shutter could affect the focus. Think you are in error there. Let us hear about that light plant.

Light Plant Data.

Mr. E. N. Collins, Secretary Electra Theater Co., Electra, Texas, writes:

> This is my first contribution to your valuable Department. Myself and operator get many valuable pointers from same and, while I do not think I can offer much, I will send you a picture of our house (if you have space would be glad to see it in The World), and describe our business. At present we are running three reels and one act of vaudeville. Would be glad to discontinue the vaudeville but from previous experience we find it impossible and keep the business with the opposition running both. We are using our own light plant, which consists of a 10 h.p. Hagan gasoline engine and a 56 ampere Hawthorne generator. A word about buying an engine. Would not advise less than a 10 h.p. By all means get an engine of the throttle governor type, such as ours, as the ordinary engine of the hit-and-miss type will cause such a rise and fall in the voltage that it will not give the satisfaction of an engine that exhausts regularly, the speed being kept nearly uniform by a throttle on the gasoline feed. We use Motiograph machine, 75-foot throw, alabastine screen and we get some picture. Our arc registers about 20 amperes; the other lights about 30 to 35, which brings us nearly to capacity. We notice a drop of about 10 volts in the voltmeter when the arc goes on, this is taken care of by boosting the voltage to 120 before. I have never noticed in your Department, much about keeping the lenses clean. You speak of everything else, but this seems to me about as important as anything. Everyone knows you can't put light through a smoky, dirty glass, but I find that some operators fuss around about their light and focus and it never occurs to them to give the light a chance to get out of the lamp house. We clean our lenses every other day, and only run six reels a day. Can an amateur get good results with a moderate priced picture camera? What kind do you recommend? Would it be advisable to have film developed by professionals? What does raw stock cost?

As to results an amateur could get with a camera, that would depend largely on the amateur. I don't know enough about moving picture cameras to make an intelligent recommendation. Your probably would have to have developing done by professionals, unless you wanted to expend considerable coin on a plant of your own. Certainly lenses must be kept scrupulously clean. Some things are so very obvious that even the tyro is expected to know them without being told every week. I agree with you as to engine size—at least to the extent that it should be ample. Unfortunately we are too much crowded for space to publish the picture just now, in this department at least. Thanks for sending it, though. See description of the "Compact Marvel" camera, page 765, issue of Feb. 22.

A Question.

Mr. C. H. Selman, Chillicottie, Mo., asks:

> Will a drop in the line voltage be noticed at the arc more through a Ft. Wayne compensarc than a rheostat?

I do not know about that. I do not see any reason why there should be any material difference. Can any of the brothers shed light on this?

Concave Screen.

Mr. H. Brimhall of Preston, Idaho, asks:

> Is there any good reason why a concave screen will give a better picture than a flat one? Would the shutter illustrated by sketch be more practical than the ordinary three winged article?

The theory of the concave screen is correct. Theoretically, at least, it will give a better definition. The idea, and the fact, is that with this ordinary lens the light rays will focus exactly at a certain given distance from the lens. Now if it be one foot further from the lens to the surface of the screen at its edges than it is at its center, the definition at one or the other will not be perfect, unless the lens is ground, as projection lenses are supposed to be ground, to project on to a flat surface. Naturally any benefit derived through the concaving of a screen will be greater where the picture is large and the throw short, than where the throw is long or the picture small. The shutter brother Brimhall shows in his sketch is a three winged one, so made that the wings can be made narrower or broader as desired, merely by the loosening of a screw in either wing. I do not know what type of machine you use, but, so far as flicker is concerned, the nearer you can make the blades of equal width the less flicker you will have. Unless your intermittent movement is a very rapid one, however, if you attempt to make the blades of equal length you will cut an enormous percentage of the light. The shutter which you have sketched will of course enable you to experiment as much as you wish, with a minimum amount of trouble.

Troublesome Reflection.

Mr. A. L. Snell Elyria, Ohio, has his picture set back in a recess or tunnel, the sides of which he has painted a dead black, yet the light reflects and is annoying. Wants to know how to kill the reflection.

If you use a perfectly dead black, and coat the walls, ceilings and floor thoroughly, there should be no appreciable reflection. To make such a paint, dissolve ordinary lamp black in turpentine and add about one-third boiled linseed oil. I am guessing at the amount of oil. Do not add enough to make a particle of gloss, but just enough so that the lamp black will not rub off. Bear in mind, however, that you must use nothing but lamp black, and that there must be no gloss whatever. You can recomplish the same purpose by the use of black cloth, and can kill every particle of reflection by using black velvet. I think, however, that paint, properly made, will serve your purpose well. If you use black cloth, be careful that it is a soft and perfectly black, not a shiny kind. Remember also that the floor and ceiling must be covered as well as the walls.

A New House.

Mr. Ben Eberhart, Manhattan, Ill. writes:

> A word or two about our little theater, owned by Mr. Fahey of this village. Its seating capacity will be 240. It will be equipped with electric lights, fans, steam heat, toilet conveniences etc., making a very classy little house. I intend to try my luck with that revolving stereo slide carrier described by brother Coleman of Maxwell, Cal., page 360, January 25th. issue. Seems to me this device could be arranged to operate by motor so that each slide would remain a certain period of time in front of the lens, and then give place to the next automatically, thus relieving the operator from giving it his attention after closing the switch. Thus during its operating he could be changing reels. Is that worth considering?

Undoubtedly, such a thing can be done but it would be of no value in running illustrated songs, since the time between the slide changes of most songs is not uniform; it also varies with different songs. Of course, for advertising slides your scheme would work fine, still it would be rather costly to construct a single device of that kind, and I think would be hardly worth while. The suggestion of the idea, however, shows that you think things over and have ideas of your own. There are a number of advertising devices on the market which operate in exactly the way you describe. They are usually designed to project pictures in a store window, and will keep up their performance almost indefinitely without attention.

"THE RANGE LAW" (Selig), Feb. 21.—Two things in this picture are worth noting—there are no subtitles and there are fine views of a wild country, with big fields. The story, if it may be so dignified, is coherent. There is a long chase by mounted men after horse thieves; it might have been less strung out to the advantage of the interest of the picture.

"THE GREAT CENTIPEDE" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 21.—A scientific picture which will interest.

"HOW BRIAR PIPES ARE MADE" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 21.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this picture showing all the details of making briar pipes, from log to finished article. It is worth while, especially to those who use this kind of smoking material.

"THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE" (Edison), Feb. 21.—This is a story of the boss, a candidate for office and a note for ninety days; later there is an election, which the candidate wins; then comes the boss looking for a contract and holding over the head of the Mayor the note, which he refuses to relinquish until it expires. The Mayor wins out, and in an interesting way. There is an excellent finish, in which all the members of a fine cast participate.

"THE COLD STORAGE EGG" (Kalem), Feb. 21.—A short comedy, in which a girl working in an egg establishment puts her photograph around an egg shell. When the egg came out of cold storage five years later a man who went to look up the original of the photograph found her—married, with two children.

"ODD OCCUPATIONS IN NEW YORK" (Kalem), Feb. 21.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this interesting series of pictures. It will entertain New Yorkers as well as those outside of the metropolis.

"CINDERELLA'S SLIPPER" (Vitagraph), Feb. 21.—A shoe picked up in the street is rather a slender thread by which to identify, and with positiveness on account of its smallness, a woman friend as the owner. Nevertheless, the comedy is good and so is the earlier part of the picture devoted to drama. The cast is first-class.

"AFTER THE WELSH RABBIT" (Edison), Feb. 19.—A fantasy that a large audience found very amusing. There is nothing of the old-time rabbit fiend delirium about it. It's fun comes wholly from its grotesque and droll picturing of the abode of the blest and of that other locality where one doesn't need to keep his collar up even on its coldest day. The idea comes from William H. Hanson, and Producer C. J. Williams has put it over in his own clever way. William Wadsworth is the dreamer and carries the part in just about the right way. He is well supported by all but especially by Edward Boulden, Arthur Houseman, Julian Reed and Yale Benner. The sets are about as funny as can be and the whole is very commendable.

"JUST SHOW PEOPLE" (Vitagraph), Feb. 18.—From the viewpoint of the exhibitor who wants to please his audience this is the best offering of today. It is an emotional, melodramatic picture which keeps us deeply in sympathy with a pretty circus performer and even with her drunken husband, the clown, who sometimes abuses her in small ways, but in the end proves himself a man even when intoxicated. A villian is provided of course to furnish the danger to the heroine. She is about to jump into a net with which he has tampered. The most important role in the picture is that of her husband, the clown, and his tipsy struggles to save his wife were watched by all with breathless interest. Leo Delaney, who takes the part, deserves much credit. Norma Talmadge also does very fine work; she too gives a decided touch of character to her part. Courtnay Foote is the villain. Walter C. Bellows, the author, has written a most interesting script which Van Dyke Brooke has carefully produced. The photography is fine.

"WHERE THE MOUNTAINS MEET" (Essanay), Feb. 19.—An old fashioned story of Western life. It is rather slow and not convincing. The photography is not up to the standard of this company.

"THE EARLY BIRD" (Selig), Feb. 19.—It is hard to get the story of this picture clearly before one until it is over. The trouble is that the characters are introduced too obscurely. The hero is, we see, an actor, but we didn't know it till we read the synopsis. There are gaps in the action, too, and this is annoying. It is well acted and the photography is clear. Thomas Santschi plays a well dressed man who takes care of his clothes and has an adventure which makes him money enough to buy a square meal. Lillian Hayward plays a spinster who seems to have fallen in love with him. Frank Clark, Fred W. Huntley, Wheeler Oakman, Geo. Gaffney and Lillian Clark do good work in their roles.

"PANIC DAYS IN WALL STREET" (Kalem), Feb. 19.—A picture whose art makes us, for the time, condone treachery. It seemed to interest a large audience and held us also, although at the opening of the story we felt that it would be impossible to get us interested in a heroine who would enter the employ of a speculator competing with her father merely to spy on and to betray him, and this the more because we foresaw that there was going to be a love story between the two. The truth is that the leading woman's pleasing acting and simple personality gave a counter assertion that made us forget that her action is contemptible. Naomi Childers plays the heroine's part and her employer is Tom Moore. Richard Purdon is her father and Edgar Davenport her father's old friend. The scenes and the photography are highly commendable.

"BEAU BRUMMEL" (Vitagraph), Feb. 19.—The delightfully engaging portrait of Beau Brummel given to us by James Young in this picture will warm the hearts of every discerning spectator. This is much, but there is little else in the picture and we dare not commend it as an offering to the gallery; because there is little suspense and it tells no clear story. Even the acting of the supporting cast serves solely as a frame to the central figure. Julia Swayne Gordon as the duchess and Clara K. Young as Helen will stand out more than the others.

"BOUND TO OCCUR" (Essanay), Feb. 18.—A farce comedy that made a good many in the audience laugh. Eleanor Blanchard plays a most sentimental woman, the wife of Augustus Carney. It is set partly in their Chicago home and partly in the Screen Club of New York, to which Carney retreats when his wife is given a poodle by her father, Josiah Allen. Miss Blanchard in this role tickled one group of women in the audience very much.

"THE PINK OPERA CLOAK" (Selig), Feb. 18.—This is probably the thinnest offering that the Selig people have turned out in many months. The audience watched it without a sound till it was done and then, because there was nothing more to it and it had fallen so short of justifying itself, it appealed to them as unconsciously comical. Even Adrienne Kroell in the leading part couldn't save such a picture from being laughable.

"HIS ENEMY" (Edison), Feb. 18.—A very interesting picture by Bannister Merwin. It is satirical, but while it makes the spectator laugh at its hero's weaknesses, it is wise enough not to make anyone laugh at him and so no one in the audience feels that he himself is being laughed at in the picture. Chas. J. Brabin, the producer, deserves credit for the picture's smoothness and simplicity. He has made it a very clear, effective offering. Barry O'Moore is the lad whose enemy is himself—he is conceited, has a bad temper and shows poor bringing up; but in the end makes good. Mrs. William Bechtel plays his mother, an invalid who has been hampered in teaching him how to do better. Richard Ridgely gives a perfect illusion of realism in his part of chief draftsman. Gertrude McCoy is as charming as usual in the role of the girl and sweetheart. William West stands out clearly as the rector. It is a good offering for any place.

"THE CONJURERS" (Cines), Feb. 18.—There was one good laugh in the house while this picture was on, but for the most part it fell rather flat. The good joke in it is its showing of the conjurer's partner getting drunk and its making plain that the tricks are very soon not going to work. The players were, in themselves, not very amusing clowns.

"VIEWS OF NARNI AND LAKE TRASIMENO" (Cines), Feb. 18.—A scenic on the same reel with the above. It is slightly hand colored in parts and tinted in others, but the photography is not very clear and lacks, except in the last sunset scenes, quality. The subject matter is of interest.

"LOVE" (C. G. P. C.), Feb 18.—The situation behind this picture has possibilities; but its producer made it romantic at the expense of convincing truth. It is fairly well acted especially by its leading woman, who also has a share of comeliness. In many of the scenes the photography is decidedly poor; but not so in the interiors and there is a perfect double exposure scene. The audience seemed watching it with interest.

"THE ENGRAVER" (Lubin), Feb. 18.—A story of counterfeiters set in the West. Its hero is an innocent man who is kept a prisoner and made to work on the plate of a false bill at the point of the pistol. His escape will hold the sleepiest kind of audience. Wallace Clifton, the author, has written a fresh and well-planned thriller and Producer F. J. Grandon has made a good offering of it. Those fire scenes are fine. Edgar Jones is the hero and Edna Payne is the heroine. Harry Kendall has an old man's part; John Ince plays the chief of the gang and Franklyn Hall plays a Mexican. All do work of the kind needed for such a picture. It was watched with marked attention.

"THE PRODIGAL BROTHER" (Pathe), Feb. 19.—A melodrama that is a very serviceable picture, for it is tense and has the elements of popularity. We can sincerely commend the acting, especially the drawing of an old miser who is made clear and distinct in a conventional way. The scenes are good, although frankly untroubled by fear of inconsistencies. It is plainly a picture to win the approbation of the gallery.

"AN UP-TO-DATE LOCHINVAR" (Biograph), Feb. 20.—A freshly conceived little incident, and played in a sprightly way; it makes good entertainment.

"THERE WERE HOBOES THREE" (Biograph), Feb. 20.—On the same reel is this farce on an entirely different plan, but it is noticable that several of the players had appeared in the former picture. This doesn't take anything from the value of the situation when it is a good one; but if the situation is slight, as in this case, the split reel ought to be actually split, with another offering between. It isn't so amusing as the first on the reel, and though it is claimed to be a travelog comedy, its scenic views are not of great value.

"TEACHING HICKVILLE TO SING" (Essanay), Feb. 20.—A comedy in a rural setting in which Beverly Bayne, a stranded actress, earns her keep by leading a singing school. There is a secondary story of country love, temporarily broken, in which Eleanor Blanchard and Augustus Carney play the roles. It makes titters rather than laughter as it might have done if the rural love story had been pushed to the fore rather than the story of the actress, although Miss Bayne is all that could be desired in this role. The older country people do not seem very convincing.

"NOBODY'S BOY" (Selig), Feb. 20.—A picture with some very pretty scenes. Its object is a subdued sentiment that pleases; but the story is of the slightest. Pretty Adrienne Kroell in the lead as the childless mother who adopts a motherless boy, and the good photography of the interiors bring out its meaning and makes the offering valuable.

"ST. JOSEPH'S TAPER" (Melies), Feb. 20.—A simple story of mingled piety and love and in which St. Joseph helps a dowerless girl to find a husband makes this picture acceptable. Mildred Bracken is much more natural in picturing passion that in simplicity which was needed and missed in this case. The player who took the role of the statue of the saint was all that could be desired or almost so. It was watched with interest. The photography is fair.

"YOSEMITE VALLEY IN WINTER" (Selig) Feb. 20.—On the same reel is this very acceptable collection of snow scenes taken in the mountains.

"VIEWS OF IRELAND" (Vitagraph), Feb. 20.—Very fair views of the entrance into the County of Kerry, of beautiful Muckross Abbey and of Torc Falls make this travel scenic most acceptable. The photography is good enough.

"MR. FORD'S TEMPER" (Vitagraph), Feb. 20.—One incident in this picture is rich in comedy and made the audience as a whole roar with laughter. There were some who laughed all the way through; but to many people there is little real fun in seeing a man fly into a temper and perhaps throw a platter across the dining room. Leo Delaney and Lillian Walker play Mr. and Mrs. Ford very well, also the scene making and photography are commendable; but there is too much bad temper and too little comical results of that state of mind in it to call the picture a great success as a whole. Mrs. Frances Brenon furnished a comedy with something fresh in it and her script was produced by Frederick Thompson.

"MAGGIE TRIES SOCIETY LIFE" (Pathe), Feb. 20.—This picture made much laughter that seemed to be pretty general. The situation has been used at least once before and deals with a clown cook who borrows the dress and hat of her mistress and then flirts with a man who takes her for a spin in his car. She loses one of her mistress's visiting cards and there is trouble. The cast has put a bit more liveliness in it than there was in the former picture we saw and it can be commended as a serviceable offering Paul Panzer takes the role of the husband and deserves notice. The photography is good.

"ANNIE ROWLEY'S FORTUNE" (Lubin), Feb. 20.—There is not a doubt about the success of this picture; it pleased the audience and made it shout with laughter. In it Lawrence McCloskey has provided an entirely fresh story from which Arthur Johnson has produced a comedy that is a little gem of its kind. The scenes in Annie's home when she is entertaining her new beau, the "gentleman," are the best and truest of their kind that we have seen. There were plenty in the audience who plainly showed that they knew what they were laughing over and their pleasure in it was shown by the hearty way they took it. Lottie Briscoe deserves a big sheaf of praise; but the producer who handled these scenes even more, for it is clear from the ensemble work of the whole cast that there was someone there who knew just what was wanted. Arthur Johnson plays Annie's lover, a mill hand; Howard Mitchell, the detective who knows she is an heiress and makes love to her as a "gentleman"; Charles Brandt, her father, and Ray and Albert Hackett, her two brothers. There are some good roughnecks, among whom are Jack McDonald and Ford Beck. The photography is excellent.

"A CHANCE DECEPTION" (Biograph), Feb. 4.—There are many first-class things in this picture; it has a significant situation; it is beautifully acted and the photography is perfect. We dare not call it entirely successful, perhaps it has attempted to make clear things that are too subtle. That part, for instance, that deals with the relationship of the man and wife will be undersood by all, after the first few scenes. But when we come to the burglar and the relationship of him and his wife with the tragically misunderstood woman, we get the picture's intention, but are not convinced. We don't believe that even a gentleman burglar would behave in just that way. It is an offering to please those who are discriminating, but even the gallery will like its story.

"THE FIRE COWARD" (Kalem), Feb. 24.—A picture that tells a pretty good story clearly and one that the audience seemed to take interest in. It is set in the hills and its hero (played by Earl Foxe) is a revenue officer who loves the sister of the three "wildcat" whiskey makers. The woods get on fire and the girl (Irene Boyle) sees that he is a fire coward. She breaks the engagement in disgust. Later he proves brave enough to arrest her brother and refuses to set him free, though she pleads. There are some good backgrounds and some scenes with thrill in them. The acting and photography are fair.

"SUSPICIOUS HENRY" (Vitagraph), Feb. 24.—It is not quite so good an offering as the last two or three Bunnygraphs, but is fairly amusing. Bunny becomes a book-learned sleuth, comes on a red-paint murder, gets Charles Eldridge arrested and makes trouble generally. William Shea, Flora Finch, Florence Ashbrooke and Harry Morey have roles. H. F. Hughes wrote the script, which was produced by Frederick Thomson.

"FOUR DAYS" (Vitagraph), Feb. 24.—This short farce fills out the reel and makes a few laughs. Kate Price and Charles Eldridge have the leads, a pair of lovers who agree to meet at a drug store, of which there is an uptown and a downtown branch. Both wait a long while and now they are no longer lovers.

"MOTHER" (Pathe), Feb. 24.—A very good offering indeed. It handles a situation that isn't new in pictures in a fresh way and with a good deal of substantial humanity and merit. Combining as it does an emotional story with the thrilling incidents of rougher life, such as the fight when a sheriff's posse comes upon the horse thief in an Indian village, it is likely to please very widely, the more because it is well acted throughout and at times beautifully photographed. At the climax, the captured outlaw, who has written to his mother that he is getting on nicely out West and has been elected sheriff, is permitted to play the part for a while since his mother has come to the village on a visit. After she goes, he takes his medicine, while the old folks at home dream of their successful son as the popular sheriff. We ought not to pass without mentioning the sets of the old home; they are admirable.

"THE LOCKET" (Vitagraph), Feb. 22.—This is a Bunnyfinch, and a pretty good one at that. Aiding in the comedy are Charles Eldridge and Mrs. Maurice, who officiate as the parents of the abused Flora. For the first time in three weeks Robert Gaillord appears on the screen, playing opposite Miss Baird. There are several amusing situations.

"THE UNKNOWN" (Lubin), Feb. 22.—In this drama with a strange ending Romaine Fielding gives us of his best work. Not only does he play the lead in his own inimitable style—and this is no figure of speech, for he has a style distinctly his own—but he has also written and produced the picture as well. The film will easily stand on one of several features—there is splendid atmosphere; the scenery is unusual, large fields and well photographed; there is a view of a border military encampment—it is hard to understand why a whole troop should be turned out to rescue one injured man, but it made a fine picture. One striking scene is of a horse standing on a rock, outlined against the sky, and rearing straight up with his rider before plunging down a hill. Mary E. Ryan, who plays Juanita, deserves praise for her acting.
